It ill becomes anybody to say that a thing of this kind is mistreated because there is not some particular western Senator on the conference. This conference was of three men, two of whom had had long experience in irrigation matters. One of the three was the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and I can say nothing to add to his glory, for we all know he is one of the fairest men who ever occupied a seat in this body.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, is it the opinion of the Senator from Wyoming—and I will ask him whether it was the opinion of the members of the conference—that the department could use any part of this $664,000 they saw fit for drainage purposes in the Newlands district?

Mr. WARREN. We understand it is entirely in their hands to do as they please about it.

Mr. HENDERSON. And the mere fact that the word "drainage" now goes out of this section of the bill does not preclude the Reclamation Service from spending whatever amount they think necessary to put in a drainage system?

Mr. WARREN. It cuts no figure. The language here in the bill as to all these projects is the language as it was sent up by the department. They did not consider it necessary to put the word "drainage" in. As the Senator remembers, that was put in on the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, all I want to be assured of is that the fact that the Senate conferees receded from their position in this matter could not be taken as precluding the Reclamation Service from expending whatever amount it saw fit of the $664,000 for drainage on that project.

Mr. WARREN. It should in no way prejudice the matter, either here on this floor, or with the department, or anywhere.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wanted to ask a question of the Senator from Nevada, but he declined to yield to me, and I will ask it of the chairman of the committee. As I understand it, on amendments numbered 62 and 63 the Senate conferees receded?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; those are the amendments which have just been under discussion.

Mr. NORRIS. So that that paragraph is just the same as it originally passed the House?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought I understood it that way; but this question has been raised by this amendment: In all these other irrigation projects, where drainage systems have been put in—for instance, the one mentioned just above that, the North Platte project—they have systems of drainage. In the appropriation was drainage specifically provided for?

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall any instance of that kind.

Mr. NORRIS. I was under the impression, as the chairman of the committee is, that it was not necessary, in appropriating for these different projects, to stipulate in the law—although Congress would have the power to do it, I concede—that some of the money should be used for drainage. In other words, if they made the appropriation just as it came from the House, the reclamation officials could use any part of it they saw fit.

Mr. WARREN. They could.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, then it seems to me the Senators from Nevada can have no complaint, at least as to amendment numbered 62. Amendment 63, it is true, reduces the amount. I understand in that particular project a drainage system has never been put in, and that it is absolutely necessary or the entire amount of money spent there will be of no consequence.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will notice that the word "drainage" is not used.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not found it anywhere else.

Mr. WARREN. And yet there is drainage going on, as the Senator knows. The Shoshone project in Wyoming has a system of drainage and is expected, I think, to have drainage put in this year out of this money, but the word "drainage" is not used.

Mr. NORRIS. I happen to know that on some of these projects of which I have personal knowledge they are putting in drainage systems, some of them not until after the system itself had been put in and it was discovered that drainage was absolutely necessary when the water gradually rose to the top. As I understand it, it is not every system that requires a drainage addition to the system of irrigation.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is correct about that; and sometimes it is impossible to say whether there should be drainage.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that sometimes it is impossible to say until it is tried. In that case they naturally would not spend any money for drainage until they found out that water was coming up toward the surface and drainage was going to be necessary sooner or later. In other words, as far as amendment 62 is concerned, it looks as though the conferees have not really given up anything. It is just the same without the amendment as it would be with it; and if it is not customary to put it in in other cases, I do not see why the conferees should be criticized for receding on the amendment and letting the language be the same as to every one of these particular items.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the colloquy this morning demonstrates the unwisdom, to use a polite word, of having transferred the irrigation money and put its direction under the committees of Congress. If this were framed as such items used to be, with all its defects, the question of drainage would be handled by the department just as easily as the question of irrigation. One is as essential after so long a time as the other was essential in its inception, and Congress took care of it, and refused as reasonable an amendment as the Senator from Idaho attempted to place on this bill. He knows something about the conditions, they are under his daily observation, and he has been met by people who never were in that country or saw an irrigation ditch in their lives, who evidently are in the great majority in both Houses of Congress. If this should be left to men who know something about it—not I, not he, but any man who knows—there would be much less difficulty in getting some sort of development of those arid lands.

I shall vote against the report as a protest against this system of congressional action. I know the conferees have done all they could, but I have no other way of recording the protest of one great irrigation district than to say that, as was done in our case, they are asking the constituents of the Senator from Idaho to go into a contract which they know nothing about; to form a district when they do not know what is going to be the condition of its formation; and they tell them to do all this in order to drain the land of water that is drowning out the crops on it.

Why should there be any objection to it? There would be none with men who knew the conditions. The House never would have insisted except as a result of the bulldozing plan, if you please to so term it, of the irrigation service forcing the citizens to take the contract before they have read it.

The first contract, I think, was entered into in my State, and it was estimated that it would cost $35 an acre. Everybody signed it. My colleague can tell better than I to what extent that cost finally rose, and I would say that in round numbers they still owe at least $85 or $90 an acre, as against $35 estimated when the contracts were first made. That has been done by the same department. The whip handle is in their hands, and they do not spare the lash, dancing to the music of those who want to put men in power over this business, and they keep them constantly employed in finding some fault with what the people are trying to do for the reclamation of the arid lands.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the conference report for the reasons stated, but I want the conferees to know that, so far as my vote is concerned, it is no sort of criticism of their action in the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I notice that he is absent, and I am therefore not at liberty to vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator having the report in charge what items were in disagreement and what conclusion was reached by the conferees?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There were 93 amendments adopted by the Senate to the bill as passed by the House. I am sure the Senator does not want me to describe all 93 of them and what conclusion was reached on them all.

I may say that the bill as it passed the Senate carried appropriations totaling $418,000,000. As reported from the conference the amount has been reduced to $383,000,000. May I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that that amount, $393,000,000, is in contrast with the estimates of the War Department of, in round figures, $1,000,000,000. I am sure the Senator from Utah will not contend that the Senate itself or the conference committee has been extravagant in view of what the department has been asking. We believe, however, that the Army can be supported for the ensuing fiscal year with the sum of money provided.

The principal items of increase over the bill as passed by the House, as the Senator will remember, were the appropriations for aviation and also for pay of the Army, the latter increase being due almost entirely to the Army and Navy pay increase bill, which is now a law.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator state what was done with respect to the appropriation for aviation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The House, as the Senator will remember, appropriated $27,250,000. The Senate increased that amount to $40,000,000. The conferees have compromised at $33,000,000, with a proviso that not less than $6,000,000 of the $33,000,000 shall be spent in the procurement of new aeroplanes and not less than $5,250,000 shall be spent in research and experimentation.

Mr. KING. Will the residue be expended in overhead expenses?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The residue will be spent in training fliers, in the maintenance of aviation fields, and various items that go to the maintenance of the aviation service. This is the first time that the Congress has decreed that a certain amount must be spent for building aeroplanes or in research work. Those are the two items that the conferees and the Congress generally regard as the most important work, and we insist that they shall be taken care of before other things.

Mr. KING. I think the conferees have made some improvement in regard to that item, but I regret that they have not required that a larger proportion of the amount should be used in the production of machines, because, as everyone knows, the overhead expense in the Aircraft Division of the Army has been something that has been extravagant in the highest degree and calls for severe condemnation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what was done in conference with the amendment which I offered with reference to the matter of the transfer of Whipple Barracks to the Public Health Service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Arizona will remember, of course, that the amendment, agreed to upon the floor of the Senate, made it mandatory upon the War Department to transfer Whipple Barracks to the Public Health Service permanently. The House conferees insisted that they would not accept that in a mandatory form, and finally, after a great deal of discussion, it was agreed in conference that the Secretary of War should be authorized, in his discretion, to make the transfer.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is, the conference report leaves it within the power of the Secretary of War to make the transfer without further action by Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word. I am sorry that the conferees made this amendment. I shall raise no question as to the report, but I wish to say for the enlightenment of the Secretary of War, that for 25 years we have struggled to prevent the transfer of Whipple Barracks to the Department of the Interior to be sold under the law applicable in such cases.

Whipple Barracks is of no more advantage to the Army now than any other abandoned post in the Army. When it was first established it was essential, because we were at war with different tribes of Indians, and it was made safe there. Through whatever efforts I could use, I was partially instrumental in keeping it there as long as there was any use for it. There is not a soldier there now. It costs the War Department thousands of dollars every year to maintain and keep in repair those empty buildings.

It is an ideal place for a hospital. Some 300 patients are there now. Those suffering from having been gassed, and especially tuberculosis patients, are there in the most delightful climate in the world. As the Presiding Officer of this body knows, and as many others know who have visited it, there is salubrious, healthy sunshine all the time. A patient can sit out in the fresh air among the pine trees, high enough to be out of the intense heat of the desert; and if you hunted America over you could not find a place better adapted or having as many buildings available for this purpose as at the Whipple Barracks.

I thank the Senator from New York for saving as much as he could of the amendment, and I trust the Secretary of War, when he shall have looked further into the history of this matter and the expense that it will be to the War Department as a military reservation, will soon see the necessity of a permanent transfer to the Public Health Service.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator presenting the conference report what disposition was made of the proceeds of the sale proposed to be authorized of the unused and abandoned arsenals. The Senator will recall that I suggested an amendment, and it was placed on the bill, requiring the proceeds to be used for improvements at Watervliet and at Aberdeen.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were both stricken from the bill. The House conferees refused to accept either of those provisions.

Mr. PHELAN. I probably can not get the information from the Senator, but the Secretary has the power, as I understand, to dispose of these unused arsenals, and the money will be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department has the power to sell them, I understand.

Mr. PHELAN. They only have the power; they are not required to sell.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not required to sell.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, out of order, I request unanimous consent for the taking up of a bill that has just been reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, can we not have a vote on this conference report first?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's request is not in order at this time.

Mr. PHELAN. I will renew the request later, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the Senate committee, Senate amendment numbered 30, as I understand, was changed by the conferees. That amendment relates to certain pay of warrant officers; and apparently, as I hastily glance at the report of the conferees, $240 annually is given to the warrant officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that in the bill which we recently passed, which increased the compensation of all officers, it was intended fully and fairly to care for the compensation not only of officers but of privates in the Army. This seems to be an addition to the amount allowed in the former bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it is not an addition, because in the Army and Navy pay-increase bill the warrant officers were not covered at all, and on the floor of the Senate when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] offered an amendment to take care of the warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service. That amendment was adopted, with the understanding with me and other members of the Military Affairs Committee that if it was not properly drawn to accomplish the purpose in view it could be redrafted in conference to accomplish the same purpose.

The amendment adopted on the floor of the Senate read as follows:

> That warrant officers of the Army Mine Planter Service shall receive the same pay and increases as now are or hereafter may be prescribed for warrant officers in the Navy.

It turns out, on examination, that the warrant officers in the Mine Planter Service and the warrant officers in the Navy are not comparable as to status and pay, and so we submitted the matter to the War Department, and as a result an amendment was adopted which reads, as the Senator has found in the report:

> That, commencing January 1, 1920, warrant officers, Army Mine Planter Service, shall be paid, in addition to all pay and allowances now authorized by law, an increase at the rate of $240 per annum: Provided, That this increase shall remain effective until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, unless sooner amended or repealed.

And I may say to the Senator that that limitation of June 30, 1922, is the same limitation as to date which was carried in the Army and Navy pay-increase bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for information, I should like to ask the Senator whether this is a permanent branch of the service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is, and has been for several years.

Mr. KING. What is the number, approximately?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are 125 warrant officers in the Army Mine Planter Service.

Mr. KING. Was there any reason why a provision could not have been incorporated in the bill giving increased compensation to care for them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all. It was simply forgotten. It was purely an accident that they were not mentioned in the list of persons or officers or enlisted men to receive the benefit of the increase.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator why a different standard of compensation, or of determining the advance in compensation, should be adopted in this instance from that which prevailed in respect to other officers? There, it was a given rate. Here, it is a specific sum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mistaken about the Army and Navy pay-increase bill as finally passed. When it passed the Senate the increases were fixed by percentages.

Mr. KING. Yes; by percentages.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But when it was finally passed by Congress, the House of Representatives refusing to take the percentage method, lump-sum additions to the base pay were given to officers; so this is exactly in line with what was actually done.

Mr. KING. And this will be a fair rate for these officers, measured by the increased compensation allowed to others?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator with respect to amendment numbered 38. The House, as I recall, allowed $38,000,000 for transportation of the Army, and a number of items embraced within that. I observe here that the amount is $40,000,000. Was it essential to make that increase?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The House appropriated $38,000,000. The Senate passed a bill appropriating $45,000,000, and in conference the amount was reduced to $40,000,000, which we think will barely cover the cost of transportation of the Army.

Mr. KING. I have no further objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, are we going to have a vote upon the conference report?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose when the Chair gets an opportunity to put the question we will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently said: I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the conference report to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have just a few words to say at this time upon the subject of the conference report on the Army reorganization bill.

When that bill was being considered in the Senate I offered amendments seeking (1) to strike out those provisions in the bill providing for universal military training or conscription in time of peace; (2) to strike out the various "services" provided for in the bill; (3) to strike out the provisions creating an Undersecretary of War; (4) to strike out the provision creating separate services out of the old Quartermaster Corps; (5) to strike out the provisions abolishing the various National Guards of the various States; (6) to curtail the numbers and powers of the General Staff given by the proposed bill; (7) and generally to cut down the enormous cost of the proposed measure, estimated by its proponents at something like $600,000,000, but believed by me to entail, if adopted as proposed, a cost of more than twice that much.

In the Senate the only one of these amendments that was adopted was the one striking out the universal military training feature, and thereupon, over my strong protest, a voluntary training feature was placed in the bill.

I am happy to say, however, Mr. President, that all of these contentions made by me in the Senate have been substantially agreed to in conference and constitute a part of the conference report on the bill. There were a number of other provisions of the bill that I objected to that are still in the bill, but the greatest evils contained in the so-called Wadsworth Army reorganization bill have been eliminated.

It is true that the cost of the bill has been reduced to about $400,000,000—which, by the way, is about twice as much as Germany, in the heyday of her militarism, ever expended on her army in times of peace—but when we remember that the various estimates of the Wadsworth bill were from $600,000,000 to more than twice that sum—Mr. MONDELL, of the House, put it at something like $800,000,000 and the War Department at a billion—I feel that we have accomplished something in the way of reduced cost.

I want to congratulate my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in the House who served as members of the conference committee for the splendid work that they have done in conference on the Army reorganization bill. They are entitled to the thanks of the American people. I am glad that my colleagues of the Senate on the conference agreed to these very wise amendments. I wish they could have gone further and reduced the cost of the Military Establishment even more. I think the bill, even as now agreed to, creates a top-heavy organization, but it is wonderfully better than it was when it passed the Senate.

The House conferees have made the Army reorganization bill an American measure, and while the pending appropriation bill, in order to carry out the terms of the Army reorganization bill, appropriates about $400,000,000, when we compare it with the un-American, vicious militaristic bill that was reported and passed by the Senate, I say all honor to those splendid men on the conference committee on the part of the House who prevented the passage of such a bill as that. I again say they are entitled to the grateful thanks of the American people.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—HOBOKEN DOCKS.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to occupy a very few moments—I will endeavor to limit my remarks to five minutes—to say a few words in regard to the conference report on the shipping bill.

I understand that the conferees on that measure, in reporting an agreement, recommend the elimination of a portion of section 17, which, in a few words, provides recompense to the city of Hoboken, in the State of New Jersey, for taxes lost because of certain conditions. I understand that that report, in the ordinary course, can not be considered until to-morrow. Unfortunately I can not be here to-morrow, and I simply wish to take advantage of the present opportunity to enter my very emphatic protest against the elimination of the paragraph referred to from the bill.

Briefly the situation is this: The city of Hoboken, a thriving community of New Jersey, has located within its limits, as is well known generally, the American docks of the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd Steamship Lines. When we entered the war very properly the Government took over that property, as alien property, and proceeded to use it for war purposes. The city of Hoboken made absolutely no complaint. Far from doing so, they furnished police protection, fire protection, and all of the other municipal protection that would be supplied by any city. Of course, the taxes that the city had theretofore received immediately ceased. However, when the war closed the War Department still retained control of the docks, and we having constructed a merchant marine, the docks were very properly used for the purposes of a merchant marine, as well as for Army transport purposes. At the present time the docks are being used by the Government of the United States as a commercial proposition. The Government is leasing the docks to private interests, and is receiving whatever income can be derived from that business. At the same time the city of Hoboken is denied any income from that great property, which in the old days represented approximately, as I recall, one-sixth of the entire taxable income of the city.

I thoroughly appreciate that the Government of the United States whenever it needs property at any time or anywhere, in time of peace as well as in time of war—and we are not now discussing the question as it affects conditions in time of war—has a perfect right to take it, and should take it and use it for any purpose for which the Government sees fit and proper to use it; but there is a great difference between the Government occupying property to carry out the usual functions of government, such as the housing of departments or the development of some activity that may be authorized by Congress, and taking over a going concern, as it were, or the property of such a concern, and using it for commercial purposes, receiving income and making a profit on it, as, in this instance, is shown by the report of the Shipping Board, and then deny the city where the property is located the ordinary taxable income which it would otherwise receive. In my opinion, if we can not get an amendment of this character through on a bill which directly relates to the future of the docks at Hoboken, it is incumbent upon Congress to make a clear distinction between the Government in its ordinary functions taking over what has been private property and the Government running a business, and then taking from the city any possible opportunity of receiving a proper income under its tax laws.

Personally, as I have often said, I do not believe in the Government being in business outside of the great business of Government in cooperation with the business of the land; but I do agree that the Government has certain responsibilities in developing the merchant marine, and I am in entire accord with the general fundamental purposes of the bill which will be brought before the Senate for consideration under the terms of the conference report. So long as the Government is going to conduct a business, although it may gradually, as is contemplated, dispose of the merchant marine, in competition with private business interests of the country which pay taxes on whatever docks they own, then I think that the Government is in duty bound, in fairness to the city, in fairness to its own citizens with whom it may be in competition, to pay a reasonable average tax to the city where it conducts the business and where the property is located.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. EDGE. I will be very glad to answer the Senator, if I can.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not object to the Government leasing this property, does he; or is that his objection?

Mr. EDGE. No; I have no objection in the slightest degree to the Government, so long as it continues to administer this business to carry it on in a businesslike manner, leasing the property and receiving all the income it can and running it on business principles.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Government had not leased the property and it were not used at all, so that no income was derived from it, would the Senator still think the Government ought to pay taxes on it?

Mr. EDGE. Absolutely no. I, perhaps, have not made myself clear.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not the Senator rather have the Government use the property and get the incidental benefit that might come from its use than to have the property lie idle and not be used?

Mr. EDGE. There is not the least question possible before us of the property lying idle, for the docks referred to are to-day perhaps the most important docks at any port in the United States from the standpoint of our export commerce and for the receipt of imports.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. In connection with the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska, I should like to state that my information is that three of the six piers are rented by the Government to commercial steamship lines, the Government receiving for the three piers, constituting one-half of the property available, $540,000 a year.

Mr. EDGE. I thank the Senator for giving me the figures. I am aware that the property is rented at this time. I desire to repeat, so that I may not be misunderstood, that so long as the Government is in business I want it to make all the money it properly can in fair competition with the citizens of the country; but in making this protest I am particularly interested in bringing out the difference between the Government occupying property to administer the affairs of the Government and occupying property and conducting a business for gain. I think the distinction is perfectly clear, and in the latter case I believe that any city wherein lies property so used should receive the same income from it which it receives from a private dock or a dock owned by some steamship corporation which may be located within the city limits. In this case I understand that several of the docks at least are located within the city limits and others immediately adjoining in the city of Jersey City.

I bring up this matter now for the reason I have stated. I can not move that the report be rejected because it is not officially before us, but I wish my protest to be as emphatic as I can make it that it is the duty of Congress, so long as the Government is going to continue in business, to recognize that it shall not have or should not have an advantage over private business in the first place, and, at best, should not take from a municipality—and in the aggregate the municipalities to a large extent form the great Union—an income which, it seems to me from every standpoint, they should have. Certainly in this instance there can be no question that the city of Hoboken is entitled to the relief which the provision in the merchant marine bill was designed to afford.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12530. It is a matter which we have already had up, and we were ready to vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I inquire what the bill is?

Mr. McCUMBER. The pension bill.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment to make a motion while the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee is in the Chamber.

Mr. McCUMBER. A motion for what?

Mr. PHELAN. Before the Senator rose I had asked, out of order, unanimous consent to take up a bill reported from the Military Affairs Committee protecting the Victory button and other war decorations given to soldiers against unauthorized use. It is known as Senate bill 4432. I do not think there is any opposition to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will there be any discussion at all on it?

Mr. PHELAN. If there is any discussion, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Ball	Harris	Nelson	Smoot
Borah	Henderson	New	Spencer
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Norris	Stanley
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas

Elkins	McCormick	Ransdell	Wolcott
France	McCumber	Sheppard
Gay	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Hale	McLean	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12530, the pension bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12530) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. McCUMBER. The question, I believe, is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is absent from the Chamber. I do not know whether he has anything further to submit on his motion or not; but, in view of his absence from the Chamber, I shall have to ask for the yeas and nays upon his amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say that the Senator from Utah in order to facilitate the passage of this bill had agreed to submit his amendment to cover certain cases, and this amendment which he offered covers some twenty or thirty cases, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Utah moves to strike out items numbered 6, 7, 15, 48, 84, 94, 101, 109, 117, 118, 127, 140, 151, 160, 163, 183, 198, 203, 212, 219, 225, 251, 252, 265, 272, 276, 289, 302, 313, 318, 326, 329, 335, 337, 338, 353, 360, 361, 362, 364, 368, 370, 420, 441, 472, 475, 480, 482, 518, 531, 542, 549, 557, 564, 574, 584, 597, 603, 605, 607, and 628.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the chairman of the committee explain in a moment what this amendment means and what it will do?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are some 686 cases on the omnibus pension bill. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] selected a certain class of those cases. I think those which he mentioned as the class were those who had served less than 90 days, and he asked for a vote upon those which fell within that class. I explained at the time that those who had served less than 90 days, included in this bill, were those who had already received pensions because of injuries resulting from service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The roll will be called.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair, with the same explanation that I made yesterday, to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That Senator is necessarily absent from the Chamber, and as I agreed to pair with him to-day I withhold my vote.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GAY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. COMER] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], but I understand that I am released from that pair on this question, and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I notice that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and let my vote stand.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is not present I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—4.

So Mr. KING's amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. KING. I have several other amendments to offer.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can offer them in the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, pensions and bonuses are closely linked together, and I have a few remarks I desire to make on the subject of the bonus bill.

Mr. President, the blanket soldier bonus bill which the House passed last Saturday is not at present before the Senate, but is in committee, where not improbably it will remain. Senators therefore may properly refrain if they like from committing themselves on the subject, and may defer the expression of their views until the measure is presented on the floor. I prefer for my own part to say plainly here and now, as I have already many times said in reply to constituents, that I am opposed altogether to an indiscriminate cash bonus to able-bodied service men, either at this time or later, and that I regard any other form of bonus to men who emerged whole from the war as inopportune, unnecessary, and unjustifiable. It is a most important question, concerning which I have many inquiries, and I think that my correspondents are entitled to a straight, explicit answer, without hedging or evasion. I shall for this reason discuss the matter in some detail, and I trust in such fashion as will make clear the grounds of my conclusion, although I shall not undertake to go into all the phases of the problem.

Let me say first of all that I shall be found ready and anxious always to extend the utmost liberality in every way to the dependents of our soldier dead and to the men disabled in our defense. Our very first duty and obligation is to these. Their number is much greater than the public is aware. We are told by the chief medical adviser of the War Risk Insurance Bureau that 641,900 men were discharged for physical disability, of whom 276,327 were held to be disabled seriously, and that the proper care of our wounded and otherwise disabled will cost the Government annually from $325,000,000 to $500,000,000. We have expended on their vocational education during the fiscal year now closing the sum of $37,000,000, but the outlay for that purpose during the fiscal year of 1921 will be $90,000,000. We must have no stinting of the disabled, however much it may cost to provide for their necessities and rebuild them physically and mentally so far as may be possible. But there must be a limit somewhere to the demands on the Public Treasury; and since we have neither the right nor the disposition to slight the disabled, the economies which it is absolutely imperative we shall practice must be effected in other directions.

EXISTING LIBERAL PROVISIONS.

So far as the service men are concerned who emerged physically unimpaired, it is often overlooked that we have already provided for them benefits which neither this country nor any other had ever before offered soldiers likewise circumstanced. Every soldier so long as he continued in uniform had the protection of the generous compensation plan, whereby monthly payments were assured his dependents if he died or himself if he became totally disabled, either permanently or temporarily. We made every service man a cash donation of $60, a straight gratuity, without regard to rank, on his discharge. We provided for him life insurance up to $10,000 the man at rates which were barely sufficient to pay the face of the premiums, the Government assuming the entire administrative expense. Gentlemen who suppose this to be a small item may be surprised to learn that the total amount of premiums collected from service men from the establishment of the system to April 1, 1920, was only $325,000,000, while the claims accruing during the same period aggregate $1,200,300,000. The compensation protection, furthermore, has cost the Government so far upward of $65,000,000—and more claims are being approved every day.

I yield to no man in admiration of the gallantry of our soldiers and sailors. I did my very utmost in every way open to me to support them during the war, and I would give my right arm to have the satisfaction that is rightly theirs. It is to me a matter of the deepest regret that with some of them I am obliged to disagree. But I should unworthily represent my State if I did not weigh in my mind all the factors involved in every question presented for my decision as a public man, and I am constrained by my conscience and my own understanding to take a positive stand against the bonus proposals which a minority of the service men have caused to be offered in Congress. My conception of the duty that a Senator owes his constituents also requires that, having arrived at a settled conclusion in a matter of such general interest, I shall make it known without delay and in unmistakable terms, regardless of the effect.

I am proud to say, Mr. President, that when this iniquitous measure was on its passage through the House last Saturday everyone of the six South Carolina Members present voted against it, and I congratulate them upon their manly stand in the face of a terrific propaganda.

HYPOCRISY—OR RECKLESSNESS?

We have it from no less an authority than a Republican ex-President that much of the clamor for bonus legislation which comes at this time from politicians of his own party is rank hypocrisy. It is hardly possible to believe that these self-proclaimed saviors of the soldier either expect or desire in their hearts to see the actual enactment of their bonus bills into law. They can not but know that such measures have little chance of passing the Senate at this session, and that even if they should pass, either now or later, they will almost certainly be vetoed. But they figure that by rushing the bills through the House they will be in position to go to the country with the argument that a grateful Republican Party did its utmost, in fact put the bills through one branch of Congress, but was obstructed in its benevolence by a Democratic minority and the Democratic administration. In other words, they would take credit for trying to get the soldier a bonus, at the same time escaping the inconvenient consequences that actual fulfillment of their proposals would involve. I do not believe the country can be so easily bamboozled.

Bonus advocates in Congress are caught between the two horns of a dilemma. Either they do not in good faith expect to carry into effect their bonus bills, in which event they are trying to put over what President Taft calls a most contemptible piece of hypocritical political jobbery to capture the soldier vote, or, on the other hand, if they do seriously contemplate imposing this enormous burden on a people already taxed beyond all reason, they are guilty of an amazing exhibition of irresponsibility and an almost criminal recklessness.

They have before them the solemn warnings of the two men who, more than all others, are entitled to speak authoritatively regarding the finances of this country. Secretary Houston tells us that even without bonus legislation there is no prospect of reducing Federal tax burdens before 1923. And his predecessor, the Hon. CARTER GLASS, serving now as a Senator from Virginia, with the same distinction which made him an ornament to the Cabinet, has declared that "in these fateful days of readjustment, with the people bearing the most extraordinary tax burdens since the world was created, it would be a frightful misuse and abuse of power for Congress to vote an indiscriminate bonus to able-bodied ex-service men." Can sober and responsible public men of either party disregard warnings so grave and impressive?

CRIPPLING OUR INDUSTRIES.

Let us consider for a moment what it will mean to withdraw from the available capital of the country the great sum that the bonus project would call for. It will mean that the amount of working funds in the money market with which to finance business and industry would be decreased by some $2,000,000,000, and this, too, at a time when legitimate, productive enterprise is restricted as never before by a scarcity of such funds. The soundest and most useful of our concerns are paying exorbitant rates for the capital which is their lifeblood. Our transportation system, for example, must have money and a great deal of it at once if our fuel and our foodstuffs and the products of our industries are to be moved, otherwise will the cost of living mount quickly to levels never before attained. Yet we find so great a railway as the Pennsylvania unable to borrow on 10 years' time at less than 7½ per cent. A child can perceive what that means for weaker roads.

Now, what is to be done with the vast fund so withdrawn from the market? Is it to continue in useful, productive employment, financing our farmers, our merchants, our manufacturers, our utilities? No; it is to be distributed over the country, among a special class, in $500 lots, and undoubtedly in most instances will be at once expended to the temporary profit of nonessential enterprises. This will mean incidentally a raising of prices to everybody. The very beneficiaries themselves will suffer by the resulting further increase in the general cost of living.

Nor is to be doubted that the taxes for raising the bonus money, whatever form they may take, will be promptly relayed on to the ultimate consumer. In fact the Associated Press, in reporting the decision of the House committee to offer the bills, said that members who had participated in drawing them declared that whatever system was followed the consumer would pay.

EFFECT ON LIBERTY BOND VALUES.

We have an inescapable obligation, Mr. President, to protect our citizens who subscribed to the several Liberty bond issues for the purpose of backing up our soldiers. Many of these citizens, as we all know, bought bonds to an extent beyond their means. Many thousands of them have been unable for this reason to hold these securities to maturity, and in all such cases the original patriotic purchasers have already suffered losses which they had no reason to expect. I have a special feeling of responsibility in this matter, because I, like many brother Senators, was active and insistent in persuading my home people to buy bonds. We have the absolute assurance of the Secretary of the Treasury and the governor of the Federal Reserve Board that a soldier bonus means further considerable depreciation in the value of Liberty bonds, and of other Government paper as well. It would humiliate me, Mr. President, to see my own note sell below par, and likewise it is humiliating to us all and damaging to our national prestige to see our bonds, which may be called our joint notes, going at less than face value. Another factor in the situation which all the more constrains us to protect these bonds is that the Federal Reserve Board, in order to release funds needed for other purposes, has felt obliged to force out of the banks a large proportion of Liberty bonds which they have been carrying for their customers.

RETROACTIVE TAXES ARE VICIOUS.

Unfortunately for the ready comprehension by the public of the issues involved, the discussion of the bonus matter has been muddled and confused by the repetition of certain superficially plausible catchwords, of which the misleading phrase "adjusted compensation" is a fair sample. Another instance is the argument so often heard that the vast revenue required can and should be raised in large part by levying a drastic business tax retroactive for three or four years.

Persons urging such legislation display a childlike ignorance of business management. They apparently assume that every man who has derived profit from his operations has laid up in a napkin somewhere every dollar so acquired, and kept the sum total intact and idle—for reasons which our amateur statesmen do not trouble themselves to expound. On the contrary, as anyone acquainted at all with affairs is aware, such earnings have been long since laid out in improvements and extensions, or otherwise put back into production.

Likewise, the stock dividends, which also have excited the cupidity of these gentlemen, are in many cases mere paper distributions of intangible values. Our amateur politico-financial experts conveniently forget the long lean years that went before, in which stockholders derived from their investments only the lowest dividends or none at all. They forget with an equal facility that in most enterprises which have lately been enabled, by reason of abnormal, fortuitous, and temporary conditions, to declare stock dividends, the distribution falls short of averaging up net returns sufficiently to offset preceding years of inadequate returns or none.

STRAIN ON MONEY MARKET.

War-time earnings could not now be retroactively taxed without immeasurably distressing and demoralizing business throughout the country. The funds which it is proposed thus to tax have been, as I have said, long since expended or tied up in current operations, not put by in a napkin. Business men would simply have to go into the market and borrow the money with which to meet the tax. The sudden and extraordinary demand upon a money market already overstrained would enormously increase the cost of money for financing the community and thus directly increase the cost of living. Therefore, the plan for raising by this means the funds for a gigantic bonus payment is impracticable on the physical facts, even if it were not also open, as it is, to conclusive objections on other grounds.

Retroactive legislation, especially in fiscal matters, is vicious in itself, altogether repugnant to American principles, and destructive of American organization. I should oppose retroactive taxation for this reason, regardless of the particular ends in view. If the question was asked me, "What feature in congressional practice is more hampering, irritating, and burdensome to legitimate private business than any other?" I should unhesitatingly answer that it is impermanence, uncertainty, and capriciousness in regard to taxes and restrictions. Constant changes and fear of changes are fatal to prosperity, paralyzing to initiative, and enervating to the spirit of enterprise. Nobody knows what absurdities in this field a new Congress may perpetuate—and our House of Representatives is renewed every two years. Business is kept continuously disturbed by dread of new and radical legislation or of new interpretations of existing laws. Let us give the American once more at least a fighting chance of working out his own temporal salvation.

HAVE THE SOLDIERS SPOKEN?

I do not undertake to express an opinion regarding the propriety or the good taste of the soldiers themselves demanding at the hands of the country, through Congress, a bonus, "adjusted compensation," arrears of pay, or whatever it is they choose to call it. That is a question for soldiers to decide, each for himself. But as a matter of cold fact, such demand has not yet been presented by anything like a majority of the service men. The American Legion, great and potentially useful organization though it is, comprises so far only a minority of the 4,800,000 men called to the colors and for whom it is often presumed to speak; furthermore, within the legion itself there is anything but unanimity on this subject, and the executive committee, which framed and presented these demands, without a mandate from the rank and file, has found it convenient to ignore the reasonable suggestion that the only way of learning accurately the wishes of the membership is to hold a referendum. I am proud to say that the South Carolina department of the legion has repudiated openly the grab policy of the national executive committee. I have heard, and with deep regret, that in some localities here and there through the country the high position taken when the legion was founded has been forgotten and that membership campaigns are being waged under the slogan, "Join the legion and get a bonus." Certainly that was not the idea which prevailed in the three general sessions of the American Legion which have been held to date, and if such an idea has crept into the organization it has originated from the mistaken and, I believe, misrepresentative policy developed by the executive committee. The South Carolina branch, Mr. President, I am glad to state, is considering withdrawing from the legion if the organization adheres to the policy declared by the committee.

SERVICE NOT COMPENSABLE.

"Adjusted compensation" is a good mouth-filling phrase, and I note with regret that some tried and true soldiers make use of it, without troubling to look into its full meaning. Service men who base their demand for a donation of Government funds on the compensation theory place themselves in very doubtful company. Free countries hold military service in time of war to be a privilege, open only to the able-bodied and honorable. Such service has at no time been regarded as compensable, and the pay of the citizen soldier has been intended merely to cover reasonable incidental requirements not provided for by issue or otherwise, not at all to square accounts between him and his country, for no amount of money could do that. Let those who talk of "adjusted compensation" remember that in our history only two classes of soldiers have put a price on their courage. The Hessians, whom it is sufficient merely to name, and the substitutes of Civil War days, men who cold-bloodedly calculated their chances of survival against the sums they could extort from the men in whose stead they fought. No man who wore the American uniform in the World War would knowingly class himself alongside either the Hessians or those later mercenaries, the substitutes of the sixties. Yet they do so class themselves, although unintentionally, whenever and to the extent that they put their demands on a compensation basis. I can only believe that service men who make use of the compensation argument do so without following it out to its logical conclusion.

WAR WORKERS' WAGES.

Some advocates of a soldier bonus bear down hard on the contention that civilian laborers, notably the shipyard workers, were overpaid during the war. They will not hear any argument to the contrary from me. Let us consider that fact, however, in relation to soldier-bonus proposals. The soldier, privileged as he is to confront the enemy face to face, has properly the major share of glory and honor, and no free country has dreamed of tendering its soldiers cash settlement for their services, or, in other words, commuting in cash its obligation of gratitude. But unquestionably the cause in which the soldier fights is also very largely dependent on unremitting, arduous, and skillful labor by thousands of men in the shipyards, munition plants, and other establishments, which have been aptly called sectors of the home front. I can see how it might plausibly be argued that the wages of the men held back for this unglamorous though necessary duty may be properly called compensatory and adjusted accordingly.

My own idea about handling the problem is, however, that in time of war, and if necessary, labor should be conscripted precisely as troops are conscripted—which, of course, implies careful advance classification of our man power by special qualifications—and that a man who is exempt from military duty by reason of his skill in some trade, as a shipfitter, for instance, should be quite as firmly held to perform his particular function as the soldier; and I believe the skilled workman of our country will be found as ready as the soldier to subordinate his personal preferences and freedom of action to the welfare of the Nation. It follows, of course, that the Government must then assume the responsibility for safeguarding his rights and not leave this to private or corporate judgment. Let us hope that if we have another great war we shall profit by the lessons the World War has taught and manage better this home labor problem. Meanwhile the overpayment of war workers during the late war may as well be dismissed from further consideration as water that his flowed under the bridge. Whether or not the wages allowed were scandalously high, the plain fact is that we were not organized to handle our skilled labor on a scientific basis, and that, as a practical matter, the pay question had to be treated as secondary to the supreme issue of quantity production at maximum speed.

I do not concede that because we fell into error in this field we must now therefore commit another and a greater error. Nor is it any valid argument for a tremendous bonus payment at this time that extravagant expenditures arose out of the cost-plus contract system, under which of necessity much of the war construction was accomplished. I think, however, that was a pernicious system; it led us into temptation, and it should be abolished as soon as possible in all enterprises.

THE NEGRO AND THE BONUS.

Recklessness and irresponsibility have characterized this cash bonus campaign in Congress from first to last. That is well illustrated by the fact that its relation to the negro problem has been considered only in the most superficial and careless way, if at all. I might go further, and say that its effect on the labor situation generally, profound though it must be, has also been lightly ignored. The labor situation in the South, however, is aggravated immeasurably by reason of its being complicated with the negro problem in all its many phases. We ought not to expect, perhaps, that Members of Congress from other sections shall understand altogether what it will mean to place a windfall of several hundred dollars each in the hands of the negroes who as soldiers, or much more numerously as laborers and stevedores, wore the uniform at some time during the war. But enough is known throughout the country concerning the organization of life in the South to make it reasonable that we should expect of Congressmen, from whatever section they come, at least a sober, candid facing of probable consequences, and a conscientious endeavor to ascertain what those consequences may be.

Gentlemen are much mistaken who think this is a sectional question only. Disorganize southern industry and agriculture and the effect will be quickly and seriously felt in every home in the land. The South not only comprises the cotton belt, although this fact in itself should suffice to make judicious men pause to think, but it is also a vast producer of foodstuffs. The negroes are already very badly demoralized. The man is exceptional among them who will put in a full week's work at prevailing high wages. No man doubts, who knows negro character at all, that every one of them who receives the cash bonus will cease work altogether until every dollar of the several payments is spent. The certain results of such a distribution of money will be general and complete idleness, demoralization, and an unparalleled orgy of short-lived extravagance. Certain gentlemen who have led the fight for the bonus profess to be great friends of the negro. But it is no kindness to the negro to expose him to such temptations in a time of unrest and of unprecedented need for maintaining and increasing those productive activities in which he is most largely involved. The country at large has finally concluded that southern white men really know a trifle more than others about the handling of the negro problem, and the country will remember that this bonus was voted over the solemn objection of many southern Members, who confront the situation which it raises not as a theory or abstraction but as a grave, actual condition of the utmost practical concern. I have dealt with colored people all my life and in the various capacities of employer, attorney, and banker; I think I am a true friend of the race, and that I am so known among the negroes of my State; but my friendship is grounded on intimate knowledge, not on abstractions; and I say in all earnestness that I see no good to the race in this project, but, on the contrary, immeasurable harm, and a setting back in many lines of the progress which the negro in the South has been making.

I have advocated, Mr. President, during all my business life, fair treatment of the negro. I believe in paying him what you promise and when you promise it, and treating him like a human being. Then, of course, he will stay in his place. It is not brave to impose on him nor is it smart to cheat him, as I have observed so many times in the courthouse and on the stump at home.

WATCH THE LAND LOBBY.

Much propaganda has centered around the land-settlement features in the bonus proposals. I think the country should be extremely distrustful of these features. Some good men are associated with them undoubtedly. But I have not failed to observe that lobbyists have swarmed to Washington to sing the praises of some hopelessly desolate wastes and that these gentlemen continue to hang about the Capitol, with mouths watering over the wholesale hand-out which they confidently expect. I am not particularly concerned with the sectional aspect, but the fact is manifest that the bulk of any funds allotted for soldier settlement will go to the West. It is true that a bid is made for southern support by promises that a quota of the money allowed will be expended in the reclamation of cut-over and swamp lands in the South. The South, I am sure, would pay dearly in other ways for every dollar that might accrue to her under this interesting frame-up. I may add, also, with regard to the attitude of service men themselves, that I have a rather extensive correspondence with those in my own State, and I believe that not more than five altogether have indicated to me that they had the slightest interest in the settlement of service men on reclaimed lands, whether these be alkali deserts or canyon sides in the West or old pine fields or cypress swamps in the South. It can hardly be a mere coincidence that the most rampant demanders of "something for the soldier" happen to be also interested in waste lands.

A BETRAYAL OF TRUST.

Bonus advocates will find interesting reading in the New York Sun. This newspaper, Republican organ though it is, points out that the Republican Party is in control of Congress; it therefore holds that party to direct and full responsibility, and declares that the party will and should be repudiated by the country if it shall permit what it calls this wicked raid on the Treasury. Going further, the Sun asserts:

It is reported that in the present critical condition of the Nation's finances, with debt and taxation piling up so high and heavy that the people can scarcely stagger along under the growing load, there are Congressmen willing and getting ready to vote for the indiscriminate soldier-bonus grab of a billion and a half dollars or thereabouts; and this because congressional elections occur next November and they hope thus to profit politically in their districts. Surely—the word traitor has been applied over and over again in history and in fiction to betrayals of trust less shameful in the alleged motive, less disastrous in the consequences, than such a betrayal of trust by the sworn guardians of the public interest, charged with the protection of the Public Treasury.

Since one of the foremost of Republican journals has so severely spoken the bonus bill has been passed in one House of Congress by a vast majority of Republican votes.

A CORRUPTING DONATION.

I think that this matter has been very well summed up by a great authority on government, Dr. Theodore S. Woolsey, professor of international law at Yale. Dr. Woolsey is quoted as saying:

There are two distinct questions involved in the cash bonus proposal. One is simple: Can the finances of the Government stand such a strain without grave disturbances? The Secretary of the Treasury, the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, the writers on finance all say no. In the face of this expert evidence only the reckless could advocate the measure.

The other question is even more serious. It relates to the effect upon our system of government and upon the character of our people. When a huge gratuity is given the members of an army for doing their duty, this gratuity being offered by one political party, or by each party bidding against the other, it then becomes not a gift of gratitude but a corruption fund, debauching both those who give it and those who receive it.

Mr. President, it is not only the soldiers who helped win this war, although, of course, they are entitled to the greatest praise; but the people at home, all good, loyal American people, did all they could. It was a pleasure, while the soldiers were in the trenches abroad, to see our ladies and children get together and make garments for them unceasingly. Even little tots knitted sweaters, wrist warmers, and various articles of comfort that the soldiers needed.

I remember, Mr. President, the particular case of a poor white man in my county who came into my office and wanted to buy a Liberty bond. His means were exceedingly limited. He had rented a little farm on the outskirts of the town, and his horse had recently died, and he had to buy another one on credit. He came in and wanted to buy a bond. I asked him how much he could pay down. He said he could not pay anything. I said to him, "Well, my friend, of course, I am trying to help the Government sell bonds, and we want everybody to buy them that can; but there is no use of your buying a bond if you can not pay anything on it, and I must be candid with you and say that I do not think it is your duty to buy a bond." He was about the only man I told that to during the whole campaign, and the bank with which I am connected raised its quota every time the Government called. That man sat there, and tears ran down his cheeks, and he insisted on my helping him. He said he wanted his name on the honor roll, and I told him his name should be there, and helped him get that bond.

I feel that if the soldiers realized the feeling that existed at home they would not come back here and want us now almost to bankrupt this Government by voting a bonus on the people of this country.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a resolution of the South Carolina Branch of the American Legion be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Columbia (S. C.) State, May 30, 1920.]

SECESSION PROPOSED FOR CAROLINA LEGION—STATE CONVENTION CALLED TO CONSIDER ACTION OF NATIONAL COMMITTEE—FIGHT FOR BONUS CAUSE OF BREACH—WITHDRAWAL MAY FOLLOW NATIONAL CONVENTION SHOULD EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE'S ACTION BE RATIFIED—SOUTH CAROLINA MEETING IN SPARTANBURG SET FOR JUNE 15.

For the purpose of considering the advisability of withdrawal from the national organization, in case the national convention should ratify the action of the national executive committee in agitating the bonus, the annual convention of the American Legion of South Carolina will be held in Spartanburg June 15, instead of next fall. This decision was reached yesterday at a meeting of the State executive committee held in Columbia. The resolution calling the convention at the earlier date characterizes the action of the national executive committee as "harmful to the best interests of the National and State organizations." The resolution says in part, in speaking of the national executive committee's fight for a cash bonus: "Its action tarnishes the honor and glory which the American soldier and sailor won on the field of battle, and its action, if ratified by the next national convention, renders the further affiliation of the South Carolina department with the national organization harmful to the future of the said department."

On Friday the executive committee decided to hold the annual State convention in Spartanburg one month prior to the national convention, but at the meeting yesterday, which was attended by the entire committee, the decision was reached to move up the annual convention to June 15.

The resolution sets forth that, among other things, the national executive committeeman from this State has not been duly notified twice of meetings of the national committee.

AGAINST BONUS AGITATION.

The South Carolina department has throughout voted that the American Legion should not take part in a bonus agitation.

The resolution says that the national executive committee disregarded the express orders of the national convention, the governing body of the legion, and the basic principles on which the legion was founded.

The resolution follows:

"Whereas the American Legion was formed with the express purpose of furthering all patriotic causes and not for selfish or political reasons; and

"Whereas the granting of a cash bonus to able-bodied veterans of the Great War would be admittedly harmful to the welfare of the American public; and

"Whereas a request from the American Legion for a cash bonus rightly renders that organization liable to suspicions as to its sincerity and unselfishness of motive and is debasing and inconsistent with the high ideals on which it was founded; and

"Whereas the national convention of the American Legion assembled at Minneapolis, Minn., November 10, 11, and 12, 1919, went on record as disapproving any attempt by the legion to ask or demand of Congress a cash bonus; and

"Whereas the national executive committee of the American Legion has demanded the payment of such a bonus by Congress, thereby disregarding the express orders of the governing body of the American Legion and the basic principles on which the American Legion was founded; and

"ATTEMPT TO IGNORE STATE.

"Whereas the national headquarters of the American Legion has shown a desire to disregard the wishes of the South Carolina department of the American Legion by twice failing to give due notice to the national executive committeeman from South Carolina of meetings to be held, thereby endeavoring to deprive the said department of its legal voice in the councils of the national organization: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the executive committee of the South Carolina department of the American Legion, That we disapprove the action of the said national executive committee and that we view their motives with suspicion; and

"Resolved, That in our opinion the action of the national executive committee is harmful to the best interests of the National and State organizations, its action tarnishes the honor and glory which the American soldier and sailor won on the field of battle, and its action if ratified by the next national convention renders the further affiliation of the South Carolina department with the national organization harmful to the future of the said department; and

"Resolved, That the adjutant, South Carolina department of the American Legion, be authorized and directed to call upon the various posts of the American Legion in South Carolina to elect delegates to the annual State convention to be held in Spartanburg, S. C., June 15, 1920, for the purpose of considering the advisability of withdrawal of the South Carolina department of the American Legion from association with the national organization."

DISABLED NEED ASSISTANCE.

The committee in a second resolution, adopted yesterday, also strongly condemned any legislation designed to give a cash bonus to the able-bodied ex-service men at this time, when it appears, the committee members thought, that no adequate provision has been made for the disabled who are really entitled to assistance. The resolution follows in full:

"Whereas it appears from statements made by Dr. W. G. Rucker, chief medical adviser of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and other Government officers that 641,900 men were discharged from the Army and Navy with disabilities, of whom 276,327 were seriously disabled, and that less than 5 per cent of the disabled have been cared for by the Federal Board for Vocational Education; and

"Whereas it is estimated by qualified experts that the proper and adequate care of those who have been disabled may cost the Government annually from $325,000,000 to $500,000,000: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the executive committee of the American Legion of South Carolina, That we strongly condemn any legislation designed to give a cash bonus to the able-bodied ex-service men at this time, when it appears that no adequate provision has been made for the disabled, who are really entitled to assistance.

"That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Representative in the United States Senate and Congress and published in the State newspapers."

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to Senate bill 4166, which provides a method for conducting contests in regard to the United States Senate. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I think there will be no possible objection to the bill. It was felt that it would be desirable, if possible, to have that bill acted upon at this time, if there is no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the pension bill which is before the Senate disposed of in some way, and then I am going to ask to take up the calendar and go through the calendar, so that the bills that may be passed here will reach the House in time to be passed upon before adjournment.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The bill is in the Senate. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I would not state that there are not more or less justifiable and probably meritorious increases of pensions provided in the pending bill. Probably some of the items in the bill would receive my approval were I familiar with the facts which were presented to the committee; but this measure seeks to inject into our pension system a policy with which I am not in sympathy, and for that reason, if the items embracing this objectionable policy remain in the measure, I shall be compelled to vote against it, regardless of the fact that it may have some meritorious increases or some new names that possess merit to be added to the pension roll.

I find, Mr. President, that the Government seeks through this bill to reward and care not only for the soldier who fought for his country and to care for his widow, his helpmeet, but it goes a step further and provides pensions for the sons and daughters of the soldiers who served this country during the Civil War. We find, Mr. President, that the bill is filled from beginning to end with items that provide pensions for the sons and for the daughters of late soldiers.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator claim that that has not been the policy of the pension laws ever since we enacted them?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think probably there has been some policy along this line, but I think this bill seeks to carry it still further and to enlarge on it; and the first thing you know the granddaughters and the grandsons of soldiers will be pensioned by the people of this country at the hands of Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I think if he will examine the bill a little more carefully he will ascertain that these children are all helpless and dependent children or minors under 16 years of age, and they are those cases that have been provided for from the very initiation of the pension legislation for veterans of the Civil War. Every pension bill we have had has dealt with minors and with helpless and dependent children, and we have not expanded it a single inch for 50 years.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I admit that I am not as familiar with the pension laws as the distinguished chairman of the committee and others who have been more directly in touch with it, but my impression is that there is an effort to enlarge this policy, and I am opposed to the policy.

We find in the bill, for instance, on page 64, an item of this kind:

> The name of Mary Miller, widow of Ira Miller, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Horace M. Miller, helpless and dependent son of said Ira Miller, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Mary Miller the name of said Horace M. Miller shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Mary Miller, to continue during the period of helplessness and dependency.

This provision of the bill provides an increase of $20 per month to the widow on account of dependence; and it does not stop there, but it provides, further, that in the event of the death of the widow the son shall succeed to the pension at the rate of $20 per month.

We find other items in the bill wherein a pension is granted directly to the son. On page 67 we find this case:

> The name of John W. Walker, helpless and dependent child of Otis Walker, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

I have not been able to go over the entire measure and ascertain how many pensions of this character are granted, but I find that the bill, from the very beginning of it to its conclusion, is full of items providing for increases of pension or providing pensions that will go directly to the son or the daughter of a late soldier.

Mr. President, how far are we going with this? I appreciate the services of any person who serves his country, serves it faithfully, loyally, and patriotically. I believe that the Government, in all justice, should recognize that service, and I am not objecting to the pensioning of the soldiers or their widows. I might object to the amount, as far as the monthly sum that is fixed is concerned. It is growing and pyramiding and pyramiding until now it is an enormous burden upon the taxpayers of this country.

But I think, Mr. President, there is some place where we should stop. If we are going to go to the sons and to the daughters, then why not later go to the grandsons and the granddaughters? I dare say, Mr. President, if this policy is perpetuated and continued, after a while, as we look out over the field and see the numerous grandsons and numerous granddaughters, and think about what a wonderful force they will be in the elections of this country, we are likely to reach out and get them.

But I tell you, Mr. President, we can go too far with that proposition. The people of this country who have the tax burden to bear, the people who pay the bills while the fiddling is going on, are entitled to some consideration. I do not for a moment believe that the American people will withhold, or that they desire to withhold, a reasonable expression of gratitude to those who have defended their country in the hour of peril, but I say, Mr. President, that I believe the people of this country will object if we keep extending and enlarging this pension policy and reaching out and gathering in all of the members of the family of some man who, perchance, in years gone by, has served his country, and I can not support a bill which contains items in it reaching to the sons and to the daughters. However pathetic their cases may be, however much I may personally sympathize with them, I can not, as a Government policy, go beyond the granting of pensions to the soldiers and to their widows.

Back in my State legislature we dealt as liberally and as lavishly as we could with the patriotic heroes of the Civil War who fought upon the Confederate side, and I felt a peculiar pride and an intense interest in trying to foster their interest in the way of making acknowledgment of my State's gratitude to those boys. But now, Mr. President, when it came to a question of pensioning the sons and the daughters, I then challenged my colleagues that if they wanted to extend charity—and that was an extension of charity; I did not consider it an acknowledgment of the State's gratitude—then the legislators should individually contribute that charity, and not, on account of their strong arm as lawmakers, force the taxpayers of that State to be burdened for the purpose of extending the pensions even to the sons and daughters, regardless of however much we may sympathize with those who are helpless or afflicted.

In this country there are a number of loyal, patriotic citizens who are helpless, who need the aid and assistance of charity; but the National Government does not assume the burden, nor does it feel that it is the obligation of the National Government to place them upon the pension roll.

Mr. President, on account of these objectionable features, if the bill is not amended—and it will not be, I am sure—so as to strike out the pensions to the sons and to the daughters, I shall be compelled to vote against it, although I am heartily in sympathy with the idea of the Nation paying tribute of recognition and esteem to the men who served their country in the hour of peril and to their widows. But I do not believe that that service justifies the Congress of the United States in extending pensions to the sons and the daughters, and I am opposed to the policy.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING OF DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have never been enthusiastic about service pensions, but there is a class of pensions to which I do give my most intense support, the pension or compensation to the man who is really hurt.

We have pending before the Senate a bill which has passed the House, which ought to receive the attention of the Senate before we adjourn next Saturday, to increase the allowance to the injured men who are taking vocational training. It proposes to increase their allowance $20 a month; to give those without responsibilities $100 a month and those with responsibilities $120 a month.

There are now in training, or there were a short time ago—I believe it has increased a little since then—33,600 such men. Of that number 6,300 are in cities of a million inhabitants or more; 5,500 are in cities of 500,000 up to 1,000,000; 5,600 are in training in cities of from 250,000 to 500,000 inhabitants; 3,700 are in training in cities of 100,000 to 250,000 inhabitants. The balance, 12,500, are in cities of less than 100,000 inhabitants.

I understand the objection has been made to this bill that a large number of negroes would receive this increased compensation. In all, there are only 952 colored men who have accepted the invitation and are taking training.

We have the report of the House committee, which shows us that the evidence before them disclosed that it is utterly impossible for a large number of these men to pay their expenses on the present allowances. I have personally seen a number of them. I have personally visited some of these institutions and know the character of men who are receiving the training. They are men with one arm; they are men with one leg; they are men who have received serious injuries in their bodies; they are men who are entirely disqualified from pursuing the vocations which they followed before the wounds or the injuries were received.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator's statement must have been misunderstood, or at least I misunderstood the Senator. I understood the Senator to say that it was impossible for them to pay their expenses.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not mean the expenses of the soldier?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator mean the expenses of those who are dependent upon the soldier?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean that in the cities and in many other places the average soldier can not take care of himself on $80 a month and have anything like a decent living. He pays for his clothes, he pays for his food, he pays for his room, he pays all of his personal expenses, and even in Washington, a man going to the George Washington University, for instance, can not take care of himself on $80 a month.

Mr. SMOOT. I was thinking that the Senator had reference to the soldiers who were in hospitals, and taking training there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no; this does not apply to them at all.

Mr. SMOOT. The soldier there, of course, gets all the care.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. None of those provided for by this bill are at a hospital.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. The Senator gave a class of people who are attending these schools, such as people who lost an arm, or lost a leg, or have been crippled in some other way. We all feel that we ought to give good support and care to those who have been so injured in service. But does the department discriminate as carefully as the Senator has indicated in determining who may have the benefit of this law? I am going to say candidly that I have been informed that there is practically no discrimination whatever, and from a very reliable source I was informed only the other day of a person who is now taking a postgraduate course in medicine at the expense of the Government, whose only injury during the war was to one of his fingers. I do not know how many such cases there are.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then his occupation must have been one which required that finger, and the loss of the finger must have disqualified him from pursuing his former occupation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the finger was even lost. I think it was injured somewhat and the joint was stiffened.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will yield to the Senator, but I would like to answer the Senator from North Dakota first.

Mr. KING. I will call attention to matters of the same character. I have seen a number of individuals who are receiving large contributions from the Government for injuries such as described, and they are working and earning large sums, probably a thousand or more dollars per annum, and receiving large sums from the Government, and are taking an education, of course, at the same time. My information is the same as that of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], that there is no proper discrimination, and that people with insignificant injuries are receiving nearly as large sums, if not quite as large, as some who have lost an arm.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator must be mistaken. The total number who are receiving training is 33,600. The number who were injured is over 100,000. My own trouble has been from finding cases where I thought men were entitled to the training but were not receiving the training. Naturally there will be a few passed and admitted to training who perhaps ought not strictly to have been passed, but the Government even then is helping prepare an injured soldier for a useful life. I fear there have been a number rejected who ought to have received the training.

I have visited a number of these schools. I have seen the average student at the school, and I have found them entirely disqualified in their existing condition to pursue the calling which they followed before the war.

I have furthermore found that the average student at these schools was a man who, without his injury, would earn from $150 to $200 a month. I know that a large number of these men but for their injuries would be earning much more than $120 a month.

What are we undertaking to do by this training? By giving them from one to three years' opportunity to fit themselves for some other calling we expect to find them able to relieve the Government of what otherwise would be a permanent charge upon the Government.

I maintain that the soldier who was injured and thereby made unable to earn a livelihood or to earn what he could have earned before is entitled from the balance of us who stayed at home to have made up to him his financial losses. If we make a man go to the front and fight our battles and he is shot or cut or otherwise wounded, we can not afford to question the proposition that we ought, so far as money goes, to make him whole.

Now what are the facts? We find from the testimony brought before the committee that charitable institutions have been called upon—and necessarily called upon—to make up to these men a sufficient amount to pay their expenses. I do not think any of us want to have that done. There may be some question about service pay, giving money from taxation to men who were not hurt, and to widows of men who were not hurt, and to children of men who were not hurt—I do not enthuse over any of these pensions—but when it comes to the boy who was wounded, who was injured at the front, I do not believe there is anyone who questions the responsibility of the Government—that is, all of us—to make him in a measure sound.

We are too free with service pensions, and that causes us to be too close with compensation to those suffering from injuries of service origin.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I am in hearty sympathy with that side of the pension problem, and I am willing to go as far as the needs of the men require, the disabled men and the families of those who lost their lives in the service, but I am informed that our present appropriations in behalf of that class of pensioners is but little short of $500,000,000 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am confident that is a mistake.

Mr. THOMAS. My authority is, I think, reliable, that it is somewhere between $450,000,000 and $500,000,000 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Thirty-three thousand men at $80 to $100 a month would be about $32,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. There are over 600,000 men who are disabled on the pension roll.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are only 33,000 of those to whom I am referring.

Mr. THOMAS. My statement is not confined to the class of disabilities covered by the Senator's bill but to the entire number of those who have suffered disabilities of some sort in consequence of services in the last war.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That I have not followed out. I have been especially interested in those whom we were fitting to relieve us of our responsibility.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit, I find that I have a clipping upon the subject, dated the 8th of May, stating that there are 641,900 veterans of the World War dependent upon the bounty of the United States for future existence, at an annual cost of $325,000,000. I stated the figure too high.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There can not be 600,000 who are a charge upon the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. This is from Dr. W. C. Rucker, chief medical adviser of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, who reports this number discharged from the Army and Navy with disabilities, and he then gives the number suffering under different disabilities. One of the chief objections to the bonus for all soldiers regardless of their condition is that it will deprive the men whom the Government should take care of of this support to which they are entitled because of their disabilities.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not advocating the bonus.

Mr. THOMAS. I am very glad the Senator is not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not advocating the bonus. I am only pressing upon the Senate that here are 33,000 men who will relieve the Government in a year or two of responsibility for them, who no longer can do what they did before, whose physical injuries have disqualified them from continuing in their former avocation, but who are now going through some other course of instruction which, with their remaining physical qualities, will enable them to earn a livelihood.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator thinks $80 a month is not enough for that class of men, I am willing to join with him in giving them what is deemed a sufficient sum.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I am asking for under the evidence is to give them enough to pay their expenses, which is $20 a month more than is provided in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the sort of pensions that the Government's largess should be confined to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And especially when by helping those men out we are helping them to relieve the Government from any further responsibility for their care and making it possible for them to return to the pursuits of life as valued citizens.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am in entire sympathy with the statement made by the Senator that we should properly care for those who have received wounds or injuries, and should afford them every opportunity for vocational rehabilitation, but I wish to ask the Senator what justification he has for the statement that after they have been rehabilitated and after they have received education or training in some profession that will enable them to earn a livelihood, the Government will be relieved for all time of caring for them.

Let me make this further observation. The Senator will remember that we are now passing pension bills and have passed them calling for millions and tens of millions of dollars, and that large amounts have been paid and are still being paid to men who are worth millions and whose earning capacity has never been impaired at all by any injury received. The Senator will remember that there are many lawyers, many merchants, many bankers, men who have been in the Senate of the United States, who fought in the Civil War, and yet who drew large pensions. A man recently died leaving an estate of $7,000,000, and yet he was a pensioner receiving $70 or $80 a month. At one time for many years he held an important position in the Government, from which he received from $5,000 to $7,000 or $8,090 a year. The Senator's experiences will call to his mind numerous cases where men received large pensions, notwithstanding the fact that they were wealthy and were not in need of them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the Senator from Utah has never heard me open my lips in behalf of them, whether they were Spanish-War veterans or any other war veterans. I have never cast a vote in favor of any of that class of pensions.

Mr. KING. I was interested in knowing why the Senator thought that any person who may be educated now by the Government and relieved from their distressing situation and put in a position where they may earn a competent livelihood, will not in the future, under pension policies which I have no doubt in the world will be forced through the Congress, receive large gratuities and pensions from the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had no assurance on the subject. I only feel that if they are put in a position where they can follow successfully an occupation, this should be their compensation, and our case is certainly very much stronger, if we brought before us a man with his leg off or his arm off who had made $150 or $200 a month before, and who was not now able to make anything, if we could say to him, "We educated you and you now have a profession from which you make as much or more than you did before." We have then a very much stronger case to resist the claims of the men if they were asking for pensions. Those of us who do not believe in the service pensions and do not believe in piling them up in such large quantities will have a far stronger ground of reply than we otherwise would have. I believe that as a matter of investment it will save our Government millions of dollars. Of course the much higher reason is the joy we should all feel to help make these boys in a measure again successful men.

I only intended to speak for a moment. I beg the pardon of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], because I did not intend to inject a speech on some other subject than his pension bill, but this just seemed to be a good chance to say a word for the boys who are injured. I do hope we will dispose of this matter before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator knows the general situation with reference to the bill to which he has referred. It passed the House and has been reported out in the Senate by the committee of which the Senator is a member. I had intended to move to take up that bill, but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations felt that the matter could be remedied in the deficiency appropriation bill. We have been working on an amendment which has been submitted to the Senator from Georgia, and of which I think he probably does not entirely approve, but if that can not be worked out in some form that will take care of these boys in cases where they should be taken care of, then I hope the Senator from Georgia, if I am not present, will move to take up this bill, although I shall move to take it up before the close of the session. I believe the other way is really better for all concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood, of course, the position of the chairman of our committee. He reported the bill out favorably, and he has been very busy with official work during the past week and has been kept away from the Senate much of the time. He expressed perfect willingness for me in his absence to refer to it. I just thought that this was a proper time to get the matter before those Senators who are here present. Whether it comes up on an appropriation bill or whether we find it goes out of the appropriation bill, one objection would take it out of the appropriation bill, because it would be legislation upon an appropriation bill. In that event we hope that the House bill, which requires a very simple amendment, will be adopted with an amendment by the Senate and sent back to the House, and there passed and become a law. If it comes up on the appropriation bill, I hope the Senate will broaden the provision so that it will give the $20 to each of the 33,000 boys.

EXECUTIVE CONFIRMATIONS.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, I desire, as in open executive session, to report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the nomination of Lillian P. Witherow, to be postmaster at Lake Providence, La. I am authorized by the committee to report the nomination favorably, and I ask that it be now confirmed and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALL in the chair). Is there any objection to the confirmation in open executive session? The Chair hears none. The nomination is confirmed, and the President of the United States will be notified thereof.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to consider as in open executive session the nominations which I send to the desk. There is no opposition to them. They are unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and I should like to have them acted upon now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be reported.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. As in open executive session from the Committee on the Judiciary the Senator from Minnesota reports the following:

J. Warren Davis, of Trenton, N. J., to be United States circuit judge, third judicial circuit;

J. Warren Davis, of Trenton, N. J. (now United States district judge), to be United States circuit judge, third judicial circuit;

James L. Bodine, of Trenton, N. J. (now United States attorney), to be United States district judge, district of New Jersey;

James E. Carroll, of St. Louis, Mo., to be United States attorney, eastern district of Missouri; and Elmer H. Geran, of Matawan, N. J., to be United States attorney, district of New Jersey.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask as in open executive session to make a report from the Committee on Commerce relative to the confirmation of Charles Eldred Herring, to be First Assistant Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the confirmation in open executive session? The Chair hears none. Mr. Herring is confirmed, and the President of the United States will be notified thereof.

Mr. KING. I desire, as in open executive session, to make a report from the Committee on Immigration of Charles L. Hughes, of Pennsylvania, to be commissioner of immigration at the port of Philadelphia, Pa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the confirmation in open executive session? The Chair hears none. Mr. Hughes is confirmed, and the President of the United States will be notified thereof.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I can not help thinking that the Senate is falling into a very slouchy habit if it begins to do executive business in this way. I am going to serve notice that from this date forward, so long as I am a Member of the Senate, we must go into executive session to transact executive business. I shall not object at this time, of course, but I say, here and now, that I shall object hereafter for this reason. Perchance my desk is loaded with similar matters. Perchance the desks of some of the other Senators have the same sort of matter. The first thing we know we will be unable as a body to pursue a course consecutively for five minutes without interruptions of this sort. We ought to take up one thing and dispose of it, and then go to another thing and dispose of it, and not run around and with a forked stick pick up a rag and put it in the basket and run over here and pick up with a forked stick another rag and put it in the basket, and spend all our time jumping from one thing to another. I hope the Senate will not fall into the bad practice of doing executive business in legislative session.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I rise to say that I concur most heartily and earnestly in the suggestion of the Senator that we should dispose of one thing at a time, and the one thing that I should like to have disposed of at this time is the pending pension bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I was about to ask unanimous consent for the confirmation of John Skelton Williams as Comptroller of the Treasury, but in view of the remarks of the Senator from Arizona I shall defer doing so.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12530) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I heartily agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that ample provision should be made to care for those who rendered military or naval service during the great war through which our country has just passed, and who received injuries or are suffering from disabilities incurred therein, and liberal appropriations should be made to afford them every opportunity for vocational training and to prepare them to assume the responsibilities of life. Upon numerous occasions I have urged a policy which would deal generously with those who have been injured, not only in the great World War but in all the wars in which the United States has participated. While I have insisted that those persons who were injured and who suffered disabilities in the line of service should be cared for and that the widows and children of those who lost their lives in their country's service should likewise be liberally cared for, I have not been able to bring my mind to approve of what has been generally denominated mere service pension bills.

The bill before us, in many respects, does not even rise to the dignity of a service pension bill. As I stated a day or two ago during the debate upon this measure, it contains provisions for pensioning deserters, women who have been married many times but who at one time were married to soldiers, women whose marriages to soldiers were bigamous, women who were married more than 40 years after the close of the Civil War and after the date fixed by general law as the limit beyond which Congress would not go in granting pensions to widows of soldiers, men who served less than 90 days and saw no real service and were neither injured nor incurred any disability; and it also contains increases in pension now enjoyed by some who are recipients of mere service pensions.

The amendment which I offered yesterday, which aimed at the elimination from the bill of the items carrying service pensions for men whose names were upon the rolls for less than 90 days, has just been defeated.

The existing law denies service pensions to those who served less than 90 days. The pending bill has within it 65 names where the service was less than 90 days, and, as I stated in arguing for my motion when it was presented, the purpose evidently of this bill is to try the temper of Congress and the country. If in 65 cases we can break down the law which forbids the payment of service pensions to men who have served less than 90 days, we can supersede or repeal it, and at the next session of Congress, without doubt, there will be hundreds if not thousands, of private pension bills, and perhaps a general law proposed to allow service pensions to men who served for 10 days or 20 days or 30 days or any other number of days less than 90. This proposed legislation is experimental; it is a "feeler" to sound public sentiment, and, if not attacked, to be followed by legislation which will carry millions of dollars more in pensions, and grant them to classes heretofore not considered as being entitled to consideration under any principle of justice or patriotism.

I submit that there should be some strong reason advanced to justify this radical departure and this abandonment of accepted laws and standards as a basis for Government pensions. This bill will prove a dangerous and expensive precedent, and will cost the United States tens of millions of dollars.

Mr. President, it has just been stated by the Senator from Colorado that 641,000 of our boys who participated in the recent World War received injuries or incurred disabilities which either incapacitated them wholly or in part for the discharge of their usual vocations in life. What proportion of that vast number will require aid from the Government I am unable to state. Doubtless many of them under any humane and just pension system will be entitled to receive liberal grants from the Treasury of the United States.

The Senator from Colorado has also called attention to the fact that $340,000,000 will be required annually to meet the requirements of these injured soldiers and sailors. In my opinion, Mr. President, we will be called upon to meet a larger appropriation than the sum named. In addition, there will be the families of a great number who were killed and their dependents, who should receive generous treatment at the hands of the Government, so that it is quite likely the Government will appropriate annually for years to come to those who were injured or suffered disabilities in the Great War and to the families and dependents of the dead from $350,000,000 to $400,000,000. Of course that excludes service pensions. If that policy should be adopted, the expenditure would be so huge as to defy determination at this time.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, we appropriated considerably more than $200,000,000 as Civil War pensions; the sum appropriated to meet the claims for pension, compensation, and so forth, of those who served in the war with Germany amounts to several hundred millions of dollars. It is quite likely, Mr. President, that the United States will be called upon to pay pensions within the next few years, perhaps next year, from $500,000,000 to $700,000,000 per annum. I saw a statement a short time ago to the effect that 1 out of every 30 in the United States was drawing a pension. I make the prophecy, Mr. President, that within the next two or three years there will be a pensioner for every three or four wage earners. This will be a burden upon the producer; it will weigh heavily upon the toilers of our land.

It is a fallacy to suppose that the taxes levied and collected are paid by the possessor of what is called capital. In the final analysis the ultimate consumer and the producer must meet the tax demands of the Government. The wage earners in the United States will be carrying upon their backs the great army of pensioners who will fill the land. This inevitable condition which is upon us should prompt Senators to a serious consideration of all measures which call for appropriations from the Treasury of the United States. If I may be pardoned for so saying, I do not believe that any threatened financial cataclysm would lead us to economy in this lurid hour of private and national extravagance.

Then, in addition to the national pension system, there are State pensions, including municipal, and school pensions, which are constantly increasing. Nor must we forget the civil pension system which the United States has now adopted. This will become more formidable each year, and no one can predict what obligations it will entail upon the Government. The farmer, the miner, the producer of wealth, is not the beneficiary of these pension systems. These creators of wealth bear us all upon their shoulders. It is not too much to say that the pension system will prove a drain upon the financial vitality and vigor and upon the resources of the country.

Prosperity does not result from collecting billions from the people, to be distributed among a part or all of them in the form of pensions or gratuities. Indeed, this policy would soon produce stagnation and disaster.

The wealth of the country does not consist so much of houses and lands, banks and railroads; it depends rather upon the production of its people. Wealth is labor translated into material form; and if there is placed upon the broad, bowed shoulders of labor a vast army of pensioners, obviously the prosperity of the Nation will be impaired and our financial progress will be materially retarded.

Of course, there must be some who should be the recipients of the Government's bounty and justly entitled to its consideration. Justice and humanity demand that certain ones be cared for by the Government, and whether the burden be great or small those persons who are justly entitled to pensions should receive them.

Mr. President, I read a few moments ago a statement to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. It was made by Comrade Burdett, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, in a discussion of the question of pensions. He said:

> I can see no other answer than that it is setting up our patriotism against pay.

He was speaking of service pensions, of the proposal to give a pension to everybody who had his name upon the rolls of the military or the naval branches of the Government.

> When Abraham Lincoln—whose name be blessed forever—cried, "To your tents, O Israel!" the roads and the byways were thronged with the feet of them who rushed to the recruiting stations, and thousands were turned away. That was the grandest sight the sun ever shone upon. A nation of gentlemen and patriots, not asking what the pay should be, came rushing to the front. I protest against spoiling that immortal picture by now calling the remnant of that great host again around the money-changers' table to receive a pittance of $8 a month. * * * This is a great Republic, and if it lives it is to live upon the unpaid patriotism of its sons. And I protest that the Grand Army, last of all, should set an example for future times of seeking to set a money value upon its services.

These eloquent and patriotic words should be an admonition to proper procedure and conduct not only upon the part of those who have a duty to discharge to their country under their oaths of office, but to those who may be tempted to seek largesses and bounties and pensions at the hands of the Government.

Mr. President, I discussed this bill at some length on the 31st of May, and it is not my purpose to again enter into an analysis of its provisions. At that time I directed attention to the fact that there were 65 items in the bill affecting soldiers, or the dependents of soldiers, who saw less than 90 days' service, and to the fact that we were breaking down the law in granting pensions to them. I moved to eliminate those items from the bill, and four Members of the Senate supported that motion. We have so far succumbed to the spirit of pensions, to this consuming demand for pensions and subsidies and bounties from the Government, that four Senators only support a meritorious proposition which is founded on justice and on existing law.

I confess that, perhaps, I ought not to be surprised at such a proposal receiving but four votes. It is unusual to receive any votes in this august assembly in the interest of economy or in support of measures aimed at reducing the burdens resting upon the people. If an appropriation is proposed that will take thousands and millions and hundreds of millions and billions out of the Treasury, it will command votes and votes to spare. The unanimity with which we approach the Treasury of the United States and put our hands into it is a picture that is delightful, as it shows the beautiful harmony which exists in our midst and binds and ties us together.

Mr. President, our protestations for economy are in vain. They rise to mock us, and to challenge our sincerity, when we affirm our devotion to the principles of economy in the administration of public affairs. There is not such a thing as economy in the national public service. Executive officials are extravagant; legislative branches of the Government are extravagant; and there is no halting this mad rush to secure appropriations from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has made a series of able speeches regarding the expenditures of public money. His speeches will be noble parts of the contemporaneous history of our times; but he is making his speeches in the wrong forum. He should be talking to the people.

I have been in the Senate 98 months. During that 98 months I have received an average, so my secretaries say, of 100 telegrams a month, and half of them, or 4,400, are dispatches demanding that I vote for this or that appropriation; and, so far as my office force is able to ascertain, we have never received a telegram urging me to vote against an appropriation.

Is there a Senator here who in his lifetime received a telegram or a letter urging him to oppose an appropriation?

Mr. TRAMMELL and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield? And if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield first to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the Senator makes a rather pertinent inquiry in regard to protestations against voting for appropriations, and says that no one has responded in the negative. I should like to have the Senator answer the question as to whether he has not received some protestations occasionally where he has voted for appropriations?

Mr. ASHURST. Not that I recall.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say that I have received many, many protests against appropriations.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have finished. I merely wanted to let the Senator know that I have received many protests; and when he said that he did not believe any Senator had, I wanted to set him right.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish we could have order. I can not tell whether this is a personal experience meeting or whether we are discussing a pension bill.

Mr. KING. We are discussing a pension bill, and it has been my pleasure to yield first to the Senator from Arizona. I then yielded to the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Tennessee, and I yield now to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, since the testimony so far has served only to reflect upon our several constituencies, let me bear witness to the self-denying quality of the people of Illinois; for I have received telegrams from them protesting not only against appropriations but against appropriations to be expended in my own State.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is refreshing——

Mr. KING. I yield for a moment.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to say that generally, when a Senator goes home, the people of his State say: "How much did you succeed in getting out of the Treasury for us?" When the people of the United States say to us, "Sir, we shall repudiate you at the polls because you voted for such appropriations," we will then vote against appropriations. We will cease to be extravagant when the people no longer demand that we be extravagant.

We reflect public sentiment here. I am swamped every day by telegrams from my own State threatening, imploring, pleading that I vote for some appropriation. How do the people of my State come to overwhelm me with demands for appropriations? Departments here are sending out telegrams and letters in the shape of propaganda, saying, "Wire your Senator for this appropriation"; and we reach our desks in the morning and there is a yellow sheaf of telegrams from all parts of our States urging this and that appropriation. The departments and bureaus here have wired them asking them to wire us. I think the Senator knows that that is true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator, apropos of his last statement, that he mentions an evil so palpable that it calls for correction; and I can assure the Senator that if he and others will support me, it will be corrected. Some time ago I prepared a bill, and shall ask the Senate to consider it at an early date, making it an offense for Federal officials to seek to obtain appropriations in the indirect and corrupt way referred to by the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator will perform a public service if he will do that. Now, while we are on the subject of appropriations, if the Senator will yield to me further, I am only going to take a minute.

This is the people's Government. They seem to want us to spend their money, and we seem to be able to do it; but, I repeat, we will stop squandering public money only when we are rebuked at the polls for squandering public money. So long as there are votes in pensions, pension bills will pass. There are votes in pension bills; hence, we all vote for pensions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona has the faculty—and it is a very happy one—of saying truthful things in a semihumorous way; but, nevertheless, they cut to the quick, as his remarks now have done.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I want here to say that my good friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] will perform a public service if he succeeds in putting through and galvanizing into law his budget bill. I believe we should have but one committee in Congress to handle the appropriations, one committee in each House.

Bonus for the soldiers? Bonus for the soldiers? Who is going to look 2,000,000 ex-soldiers in the face and say, "No"? Not this Senate——

Mr. THOMAS. Nor any other Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an honest confession is good for the soul. I shall have to put myself upon a different platform from my distinguished friend from Arizona.

The Senator from Arizona, though, has called attention to one evil, and I have adverted to it upon a former occasion, namely, the propensity of executive agencies of the Government to carry on a propaganda throughout the States to secure Federal appropriations. Mr. President, as an illustration of the plan pursued, let me cite the following: Several months ago, when we were discussing an Agricultural appropriation bill, I opposed an item, and, as I recall, a majority of the Senate voted to strike it from the bill. Within a short time some person in the Agricultural Department communicated with constituents of mine, and I received telegrams criticizing my course.

The executive departments and instrumentalities of the Government seek to extend their authority; they clamor for huge appropriations. The condition of the country and the Treasury do not influence them. During this Congress we have witnessed demands from executive officers for billions of dollars, when they should have asked but for hundreds of millions. Often, in order to get through appropriations desired, officials of an executive branch of the Government will send letters and telegrams to remote parts of the land for the purpose of organizing movements to force Congress to yield to their demands. In this way they debauch the people, exceed their rights, and pervert our form of government. The executive departments are organized for the purpose of executing the law, administering the law, but they are not satisfied with that. They want to make the law. They want Congress to become a rubber stamp, a passive body, to register their wishes and grant their fiscal demands. So long as executive officials do that, and send their emissaries out through the States—as they are doing and have done for years—organizing the people for the purpose of having them ask and demand appropriations, we will have a condition such as that to which the Senator from Arizona referred.

Mr. President, I hope some measure will be enacted into law that will make it an offense for any executive official, big or little, high or low, Cabinet officer or otherwise, to carry on campaigns throughout the country to compel Congress to appropriate money to place in their hands for expenditure or to increase their power and jurisdiction. It is indecent. It is against the spirit and form of our Government.

Mr. President, the experience of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is regrettable. It is unfortunate that the American people are not at all moments guided by that high sense of civic duty which sooner or later asserts itself and leads them along the paths of safety and righteousness. It is to be regretted that they at times support measures calling for unwise and extravagant and sometimes unauthorized appropriations.

There are numerous and persistent requests made by constituents of Senators and Representatives for appropriations. Unfortunately there are many who sign requests for aid from the Federal Government without due consideration. They do not always appreciate the situation or the effects of compelling the legislation which they urge to be enacted. There are many "busybodies" and some "ne'er-do-wells" who are always finding pretexts for Federal aid, and they carry on extensive campaigns for the purpose of securing support in behalf of unworthy schemes and chimerical and foolish undertakings as well as measures which are wholly without Federal constitutional authority.

But men in public positions should exercise their independent judgments conscientiously and with due regard to the oaths of office, and determine whether the requests should be complied with, and then act courageously and with sincere devotion to their country and the welfare of the people. This is a representative Government; the President himself must observe the oath of office of his high position in harmony with the Constitution of the United States, and supported by a quickened conscience and a patriotic love of country. Judges may not be swayed from their duty or controlled in their judgments by appeals, petitions, or threats.

The legislative branch of the Government is charged with solemn responsibilities. These responsibilities ought not to be shirked, and they can not with honor be abdicated. There should be the utmost consideration shown for the wishes of the people, and when a great issue has been presented for their consideration and they have spoken, their wishes must be carried into effect.

But in my opinion the American people desire good government and expect their Representatives in Congress to support only those measures which find warrant in the fundamental law and which make for the welfare, prosperity, and happiness of all the people. Thoughtlessly, there are many who will give their support to unwise and dangerous policies and urge measures which invade the Treasury of the United States and lead to extravagance and improper and unwise expedients. But Senators and Representatives are in possession of information which is not always available to the people. They are charged with the responsibility of guarding the Constitution, preserving the honor of our country, and defending all of the people of our great land. We should therefore unflinchingly pursue the patriotic, the courageous, and, above all, the right course. In the long run the Senator or Representative who stands for the right, for justice, for the cause of good government, and for legislation which embodies the high principles of equal and exact justice for all and special privileges for none will be vindicated; and he will receive the gratitude of thoughtful, patriotic, and genuine Americans.

The Senator from Arizona has referred to the extravagance of this Republican Congress. Mr. President, by the time we adjourn this Republican Congress will have appropriated more than $5,000,000,000, and if we remain in session for two weeks more it will amount, in my opinion, to more than $7,000,000,000; and I make the prophecy now that at the end of the fiscal year 1921 the Republican Congress will have appropriated or incurred liabilities and obligations that will exceed $7,000,000,000—an amount so stupendous that we can scarcely conceive of its magnitude. Let me say to my Republican friends you came into power in Congress promising economy; you made pledges that inasmuch as the war was over the Government would be speedily placed on a peace basis and a peace budget adopted. You have forgotten your pledges and promises. You are now, day by day, putting your hands into the Treasury and taking out millions that are not needed, thus increasing the burdens of taxation which will be imposed upon the American people. I wish that upon this side of the aisle the members of the Democratic Party would pursue an uninterrupted course of opposition to the many wasteful and unnecessary appropriations carried by legislation enacted since the 4th of March, 1919.

The passion for Federal aid is so strong that it often influences members of that party which has always stood for economy and efficiency in public affairs. Jefferson, in the early days of this Republic, laid down the maxims which have guided the great party founded by him. At times we have turned away from our immortal teacher and philosopher.

But his influence pervades the people to-day. His voice, not stilled by death, is vibrant in the land, and those who seek the perpetuity of this Republic and the prosperity and freedom of the people are renewing their faith in the principles of democracy and seeking guidance from the creed which will survive so long as men love liberty and justice.

It may be, as the Senator from Arizona says, that this is the wrong forum in which to appeal for economy. He has had 98 months of experience, as I recall his statement, in pleading for economy. My service in this body is limited to three years. I confess that my efforts in behalf of economy have not been very satisfactory, and probably my future efforts will be as ineffective. It is probable Congress will refuse to practice economy and will continue to make stupendous appropriations and maintain heavy burdens of taxes upon the people; but I want to warn Senators—not only Republican Senators but Democratic Senators—that the zenith of prosperity has been reached. With our contracting foreign commerce, with our diminished domestic commerce, quantitatively at least, there is bound to be a subsidence in the earnings of the people and in the taxable revenues of the people.

At the end of the next year, unless the burdens of taxation are materially increased, we will be compelled to resort to a bond issue, and I want to warn Republicans that when they issue bonds in time of peace they will receive a flagellation at the hands of the American people which they will long remember, and which will result, if the next election does not result in continuing in power the Democratic Party, in the restoration to power of that party in all branches of the Government.

But I believe, Mr. President, that the record of the Republican Party during this year is such that when the people are called to vote in November next they will place the Democratic Party in the control of both branches of Congress. And Democrat as I am, if a Democratic Congress failed to give a just and economical administration I would not regret its defeat at the next election. I would rather have a Republican Congress and a Republican administration that is honest and fair and economical and carries out the spirit of the Constitution and observes its mandates than a Democratic administration which departed from the principles of Jefferson, crippled and impaired the integrity of the States, and burdened the people with taxes to be expended in riotous and extravagant excesses.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much interested in the Senator's analysis, and I was wondering just where the people came in. The Senator said that he hoped if the Republican party are not more economical that the Democrats will come in, and then if the Democrats are not more economical that the Republicans will come in, and then if the Republicans are not more economical that the Democrats may come in. Where do the people come in?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course parties are merely organizations for the purpose of representing and carrying into effect in governmental affairs the will of the people, and if they defy public sentiment, betray the people, and become sinister and corrupt agencies which threaten the stability of the Government and menace the welfare and safety of the people, there will be organized parties which will stand for good government, for economy, for justice, for the preservation of this Republic, which must be a Government of and for and by the people.

I believe in political parties. I have belonged to the Democratic Party ever since I was old enough to understand politics, and yet the older I grow the less partisan I am and the more I apprehend the fact that too often men and women vote because of party labels rather than because of their own honest convictions and their abiding faith in the political principles and practices of the parties to which they give allegiance.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. With the statement which the Senator has just made I most heartily agree, and I believe that most people who want to be fair, and are intelligent enough to be fair, must agree that the party label, in all parties whichever have existed up to this time, has meant too much. People have been inclined to follow it regardless of what it might really mean. If the Senator is doing as he says he is, and as he gets older paying less attention to party, since he is such a young man now, I have great hopes that in 40 or 50 years from now, if he keeps on in that course, he will have thrown off this awful party spirit which I think sometimes handles the Senator, as well as the rest of us, and he will have reached a point where he will be a great deal more useful than he is now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Nebraska does not show the same liberal and progressive spirit that I have exhibited.

Mr. NORRIS. I have been at it so much longer and am so much older, I am so far ahead of the Senator on the nonpartisan score, that I can not look back and see him for the dust.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we are not showing much progress with this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course I respectfully dissent from the Senator from Nebraska, and he will pardon me for being personal, as he has alluded to my votes here. I have watched the Senator's proceedings here, and I have found but very slight indication of an abatement on his part of the strongest attachment and devotion to the Republican Party, with all of its manifest heresies and reactionary propensities. Whether his partisan action has impaired his usefulness as a Senator I leave that for others to determine. I recall that when I had the honor to serve in the House I as often voted with the Republicans as I did with the Democrats; and I recall that since I have been a Member of the Senate I have often voted with my friends upon the other side of the aisle. As a matter of fact, there are few really partisan matters arising in the course of a session, so that many votes find party lines broken or at least not observed.

Let me say, before returning to the bill which is before us, that I believe that the American people will have a new baptism, and then will be purged away much of the political selfishness that has too often been exhibited; they will with patriotic fervor seek to apply the principles of justice and liberty in the administration of the affairs of State and Nation. More and more they will feel that they are the source and fountain of light and power and that they must maintain that fountain incorruptible and undefiled.

They are going to vote for principles and for men, not for mere party labels, and they will do it more in the future than they have ever done in the past. They will call to account more and more all public servants; the public conscience will be quickened, and a passionate desire for good government will be developed. The American people are making progress. Some of us at times are pessimistic. We see the muddy stream, not the pellucid depths of the mighty ocean. The tide of civic righteousness and justice will mount higher as the days go by, and to-morrow will be brighter than to-day, and the coming years will bring more and more of justice and righteousness, until the sun of liberty shall shine for all the world.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KING. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] will permit me, I shall do so, but I shall be governed by his wishes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I had considerable talk with the Senator from Utah, who I knew was opposed to this bill.

Mr. KING. I am ready to submit my amendment now, and I will not yield if the Senator objects.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator said that he wanted to talk about half an hour the other day, but I did not object if he ran into an hour. However, I really want to get a vote upon this bill, and I hope the Senator will allow us to get a vote this afternoon, and that other Senators will wait for these outside matters until we can get a vote.

Mr. KING. I shall be through in a moment. I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that I be permitted to yield for one moment to these Senators who desire to make reports.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to be accommodating, and I will do so if the Senator from Utah will try to help me out all he can.

Mr. KING. I will be glad to do all I can to aid the Senator. I yield to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

RECLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which I propose to call up and ask to have considered as soon as opportunity presents itself. I report back favorably the bill (S. 4475) to reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service.

I desire to say further that I am going to ask for a night session to consider this bill, in order that we may pass upon it before we adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator if the bill provides for a decrease for fourth-class postmasters? I ask the question for the reason that if it does provide a decrease for fourth-class postmasters, or for any other postal employees, I propose to vote against that provision, and if there should be a night session, I would want a quorum to pass on the committee's recommendation.

Mr. KING. I want to say to my friend from Michigan that I do not think he ought to ask for a night session to-night. This bill is just reported, none of us will have a chance to examine it, and it ought to be printed. We ought to have before us a bill which appropriates millions. I think the Senator ought not to press it with that undue haste. I have no objection to its being brought up to-morrow.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would not think of pressing the bill for consideration at this time if I did not believe that a great majority of the Senate are favorable to action, and that no action can be taken unless we commence at once to consider the bill. I should hope to have the majority of the Senate present. I do not ask that the bill shall be passed without an understanding. It is not a long bill, but it is a bill which we ought to consider before we adjourn, and if we do not commence the consideration of it at once, we are not going to be able to give it that attention which its merits deserve.

I did not intend to inject anything at this time, but I want to say, in answer to the Senator from Mississippi, that there may be some fourth-class postmasters who get a little less salary, a few dollars a year, than they do under existing law; but there will not be over 2,000 out of 44,000. The majority of them get more, and I think the Senator will be convinced that the bill is founded on justice and equity, having in view a classification of salaries which we have never had in the Postal Service, and which means for the betterment of the service and more contentment among the employees. There are some provisions in this bill which seem to deal rather unjustly as compared with others, due to the fact that we granted level bonuses, we granted level emergency increases, without any regard to the offices themselves, or the work which the men did, and in a very few cases in making this adjustment it is possible that a little less salary will be paid to some of the fourth-class postmasters than they receive now. But I repeat that the great majority of them—all, with the exception, possibly, of 2,000—will get more under this bill than they are at present receiving.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, and I want to cooperate with the Senator. I had understood that perhaps the commission had proposed some decreases unintentionally and was in hopes, perhaps, if it did show a decrease either for fourth-class postmasters or other employees, it could be remedied, and that amendments would be offered whereby that situation would be taken care of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state to the Senator that I have the same sympathy he has with fourth-class postmasters. I have been working all the forenoon on some kind of a plan, hoping that I might thereby relieve even the exceptional cases. But I submit, Mr. President, it can not be done without throwing out of joint the system which has been adopted by this commission in establishing the salaries, and I think I can convince the Senator that is true.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am trespassing upon the goodness of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and shall have to object to any further discussion, much as I should like to hear it.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 12530) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the discussion yesterday I invited attention to the fact that under existing law those women who were married to soldiers since July 27, 1905, were not beneficiaries of the pension system.

I find in the bill, notwithstanding, as I stated then, that we recently passed the Fuller bill carrying $65,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that we are appropriating more than $220,000,000 for the survivors of the Civil War, for persons who were pensioned therein, 65 of whom have contracted marriages since that time; and I am submitting now, Mr. President, a motion to strike from the pending bill those items which indicate that appropriations are made for widows who have been married since July 27, 1905, and I have adopted the same system with respect to this motion as that which I suggested yesterday with respect to the other motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. How many are covered?

Mr. KING. Sixty-five. I have numbered the paragraphs in the bill from 1 to 680, and I submit upon a separate sheet the numbers corresponding with the same numbers, or the numbers carrying those items in the bill, and they run from 2 to 653; that is, No. 2, No. 8, No. 23, and so forth. Without reading them all, I shall submit the list to the Secretary and ask that in reporting the motion due reference be made to the appropriate items in the bill. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. McCUMBER. None at all. I think that greatly facilitates progress.

Mr. KING. So I move to strike out from the bill all those items which are shown by the figures which I send to the desk and which cover the items carrying appropriations for persons who have been married since 1905.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What will be the annual saving to the country if these items are stricken from this bill?

Mr. KING. These particular items?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am not able to state, but let me say this to my friend, that this is a precedent, just as the other was. The present law denies service pensions to those who served less than 90 days. Of course, if they only served one day and were injured or sustained any disability, they receive a pension, but under the present law, if they receive no injury, if they are not in need of support, if they are suffering from no disability, they may not obtain a pension unless they served 90 days; and yet we have deliberately now changed that law and permit pensions for persons serving less than 90 days. The amount is not very great for these 65 names, but at the next session there may be hundreds and thousands; no one knows.

An evil precedent, the Senator knows as a lawyer, may sometimes disturb not only an industrial system but the system respecting property, and, indeed, it may affect lives. Here is an evil precedent now that we are about to vote upon, to sanctify or to repudiate it.

Mr. KING's amendment was to strike from the bill the items granting pensions to the following persons, married since July 27, 1905:

Charles Francis Schaeffer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I shall not ask for a record vote for several reasons, but I shall offer another amendment. I offer the following amendment, to strike from the bill certain items, being 170 in number, which, I take it, carry appropriations for some individual, and the numbers of which are found upon the paper which I send to the desk, starting with No. 1 and the last number being 438, and the corresponding number being found in the paragraphs of the bill which I have before me and which I have shown to the Senator from North Dakota.

Let me state that those items cover cases where there is no valid marriage, or bigamous marriages, cases in which the beneficiary under the law is not entitled to a pension.

Mr. KING's amendment was to strike from the bill the items granting pensions to the following persons, on account of illegal marital relations—can not prove legal marriage:

Margaret Yohe.
Addie L. Hubbard.
Ella Thatcher.
Margaret Donahue.
Leonora Stewart.
Elizabeth Moses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I do not ask for a division on that amendment either. The two amendments which I have offered I think received probably three or four votes, evincing the profound interest which Senators take in the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. How could the Senator expect an amendment to get three or four votes when there are no votes in his amendment? He could not make any votes for the amendment.

Mr. KING. I can not answer the pertinent question of my friend from Arizona. I am trying to save a little money for the Treasury and trying to establish a pension list so far as I can upon a standard of justice.

I now offer another amendment. I move to strike from the bill Nos. 11 to 629, as found upon the list which I send to the desk, the corresponding numbers of which are found in the bill itself. Those items relate to cases where widows have been married, remarried, and remarried again, and who are not, because of the multitudinous marriages, entitled to pensions. I move to strike from the bill those items.

Mr. KING's amendment was to strike from the bill the items granting pensions to the following persons, widows who have remarried one or more times but are pensionable under the present general law:

Elizabeth G. Young.
Jennie A. Stephens.
Emma J. De Yoe Bassett.
Amanada J. Reynolds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I am satisfied that I will please my friend the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] by assuring him that I have no further amendments.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and, on a division, was passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND obtained the floor.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment to have certain pension bills indefinitely postponed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the following bills be indefinitely postponed:

The bill (H. R. 7657) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

The bill (H. R. 8536) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

The bill (H. R. 9448) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

The bill (H. R. 10107) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

The bill (H. R. 11310) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

The bill (S. 3746) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The bills were postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if there are any other omnibus bills now pending before the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is; and I want to get it up at the present time.

Mr. KING. Another one?

Mr. McCUMBER. Another one; covering not the Civil War but the Regular Establishment. It will take only a few moments.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the Senator will insist upon the present consideration of that bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to make the motion at this time, but I do not know whom the Chair has recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

RECLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4475) to reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service.

Mr. THOMAS. When was the bill reported from the committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. A few minutes ago. I reported it to the Senate a few minutes ago. It was reported out from the committee yesterday.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope this motion will not be agreed to. I took occasion last night at the evening session to protest against the abuse of the remainder of this session being devoted to passing bills of tremendous importance without due consideration.

This is a bill whose importance I recognize. I know nothing about it except from the hundreds of pounds of propaganda that have reached my office in behalf of it. I have not had time to consider it. None of the Senators here, in my judgment, outside of the members of the committee, have had time to consider it, and now to take up the bill and make it the unfinished business of the Senate for the purpose of rushing it through in the dying hours of this session is, in my judgment, neither wisdom nor good legislation. If it be true, as the Senator says, that the majority of the Senators are in favor of it and ready to push it through, I suppose it will go through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado object?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall have to object at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then it goes over until to-morrow, under the rule.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States was passed.

Mr. KING. Will not the Senator from Iowa consent to take that up to-morrow?

Mr. KENYON. No. The motion was filed to reconsider this bill. It passed the Senate a week ago Monday and the motion was filed either Tuesday or Wednesday. The parties who filed the motion have not tried at all to take it up, which, I suppose, is not customary when a motion is filed to reconsider, and I have been trying for two or three days to get the matter up. I am not willing to wait any longer. I have been waiting to get the bill up, and if it is not taken up now it will probably result in the failure of this relief, where the Senate has once passed it and the House has passed it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I made the motion to reconsider. I told the Senator from Iowa when he first spoke to me about it that I should not object to his taking it up at any time if I did not do so, but the motion was made largely at the request of Senators who know more about the question than I do. In fact, without violating confidence, I may say that I filed it at the instance of one or two other Senators, and perhaps but for their insistence I should not have done so. Consequently I do not feel at liberty to interpose any objection whatever to its consideration.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I think, would like to be heard upon it, and it would be only fair to take the time to send to the Committee on Appropriations, where, I understand he is hard at work, and apprise him of the fact of the motion to take it up. That is the only suggestion I have to make.

Mr. KENYON. After the motion is taken up, I shall be glad to have a quorum.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator object to making it the unfinished business and taking it up to-morrow?

Mr. KENYON. I think it ought to be disposed of to-day.

Mr. KING. The only reason why I make the suggestion is that I know that several Senators, one of whom, I understand, is out of the city, desire to make some observations in regard to the matter; at least that is my understanding. I have no objection to its being made the unfinished business to be taken up to-morrow morning, to give them an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator knows the bill will have to go to conference, and that is why it seems to me it should be disposed of. It has not been brought up yet.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to its being made the unfinished business and the Senator can take it up the first thing in the morning, and I will join with him in that effort.

Mr. KENYON. I will not now make any agreement about it. The motion to reconsider has been here for 10 days. If the Senator wants to have it reconsidered, he is welcome to it. It passed the Senate and passed the House and it ought to be disposed of. If the Senator from Utah knows of Senators who are desirous of speaking on it, and if he wishes to speak himself for the purpose of delay, of course, I can not prevent him.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator that one of the Senators who spoke to me about it stated that he desired to be heard, and it is one who is very familiar with the subject. Speaking for myself, I know nothing at all about the matter.

Mr. KENYON. I have made the motion, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think any motion is necessary. There is nothing pending before the Senate. A motion has been entered to reconsider the vote whereby House bill 5726 was passed, and the Chair thinks any Senator has a right to call for the submission of that motion to the Senate at any time when some other matter is not before the Senate. The Chair believes that the motion is now before the Senate, if the Senator from Iowa wants it there.

Mr. KENYON. I ask, then, that the motion be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. WARREN entered the Chamber.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Wyoming is now present.

Mr. DIAL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Lodge	Sheppard
Ball	Harding	McCumber	Simmons
Calder	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Capper	Harrison	McNary	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Thomas
Dial	Kendrick	New	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Phelan	Walsh, Mass.
Frelinghuysen	King	Phipps	Warren
Gay	Lenroot	Ransdell	Watson

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. WADSWORTH answered to their names when called.

Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. ROBINSON answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the motion to reconsider the vote whereby House bill 5726 was passed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not attack the bill altogether because it is called a minimum-wage bill or because of the principle it embodies; but there are reasons why, in my opinion, we ought to consider this subject more fully than we have had an opportunity to do. The bill as it has passed reaches some points, I think, in the ordinary affairs of life which it was not expected and perhaps not intended should be reached. The bill passed the Senate, as I understand, in regular order on the call of the calendar, but I have not yet been able to find a single Senator who knew when it passed; certainly I do not know, for I was not in the Chamber at the time. Probably the few Senators present at the time were occupied with other legislative matters.

Immediately after the passage of the bill I was approached, among others, by the general manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, who stated the conditions that the bill would bring about in the various branch homes. The law creating the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, applying originally to Civil War soldiers, but subsequently extended to the veterans of the World War, provides that the soldiers living at the home shall have furnished them board and clothing and general supplies as a matter of right. The law does not entail on the members of the homes any duties in the way of labor, but, of course, they are supposed to be obedient and to respect the disciplinary rules provided for the institution.

In the Army, as all of those who are familiar with military matters know, the private soldier is not expected to perform manual labor, except in cases of great exigency, and when he labors he can draw extra pay at 50 cents a day for all over 10 days so employed. So in the various branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers many of the inmates of those homes, men who have defended the country, and many of whom have been wounded and still more of whom have lost their health, do not feel called upon to perform any labor unless they are rewarded therefor. Consequently, the custom has been—and certainly it is a very good one—for the governors of the homes to employ members of the homes to perform very light labor, at, say, $15 a month, possibly at $10 a month, running as high, I believe, in some cases as $20 a month. They perform the light duties that appertain to the home; for instance, the care of the lawn and of the cows and other live stock, and, particularly, in connection with the firing squads, which, unfortunately, are called into rather frequent service to officiate at the burials which so frequently take place at the homes. The men who perform these services have been very happy with the small stipend which they receive, which, as I have said, on the average is $15 per month. This added to their pensions, and so forth.

I am informed that the bill, if passed in its present form, will be construed by the auditors or comptroller who would be compelled to pass upon it as compelling the Government to pay $90 to those men, in addition to the living which is provided for them at the homes. It does not strike me that it is the intention, or that it ought to be the intention, at the present time, when we are endeavoring to economize, to provide the minimum wage required by the bill for those men for the light work they are allowed to perform during part of the day. I would not hesitate to provide liberally for the soldiers who have served the country, for those who are decrepit or who have been wounded and are suffering; but I do not think the bill should pass in its present form, under which it may be construed to include, according to the statements of the comptroller or the auditors, the men to whom I have referred.

Passing that for a moment——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Has any estimate been made of the increased cost to the Government from the passage of this measure? Will it increase the annual expenditure for civil-service employees—those in the public service?

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that it will increase in a general way very, very many, but, of course, it does increase those who may be not competent to do a full day's work but who are employed at a lesser sum to do, perhaps, a quarter or a half of the work that an able-bodied person could perform. In the case of such people as that the Government is at liberty, through the heads of its departments, to fix the price of their labor, and not be confined to this minimum, such as forty or fifty dollars, to some who may have responsibilities but who are really unfitted to do other than very light work. Now, it cuts out persons of that kind. It cuts out a great many women—young women and, for that matter, very elderly women—who are unable to perform heavy duties but can satisfactorily perform light duties at a much less wage; and the result will be that all those persons will suffer discharge, and, instead of receiving a benefit, that class of employees will suffer by this legislation which may be of benefit to others.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is the Senator willing to state that it will reduce the expenses of the Government?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think it will. It will have the opposite effect.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to say to the Senator from Wyoming that I saw some figures the other day which showed that it increased the expenses of the Government more than $5,000,000 a year, and that was just the rough estimate of those who were favorable to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I might have said that those who favor the bill have stated that the expense would be confined to $5,000,000 annually. It is possible that counting beforehand on the direct expense, that might be true; but the influence of that bill will not only make it cost $5,000,000 but a great deal more, because of its effect outside of the Government service, as well as in such service.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that a reclassification report has been made reclassifying the employees of the Government and recommending their compensation, may I ask the Senator why this measure should be taken up now in advance of the consideration of that general measure?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that is a fair question, and requires a fair answer. I think it is entirely out of place at this time, when we are about to take up this reclassification and carry out what has been accomplished along that line, to undertake to pluck out of the hands of the legislators the power of equalizing salaries with the information which has been brought to us by our special Joint Committee of Classification. I think it will mar the general proposition of starting from the bottom and building up to final completion a system of employment which is just and equitable, and which, I believe, will be satisfactory. It is for the very reason that I have been repeatedly compelled, in conducting the appropriation bills, to refuse to entertain an amendment to increase the salaries of men that I believe ought to be increased; but it was not then the time to do it piecemeal, as we have been doing heretofore, and I contended that we should wait and take up this reclassification.

This proposed law is one of the steps that will lead to the same condition that called for the appointment of this commission to bring in a scheme of reclassification. It has run along here for years. This Senator and that would rise in his place and move an increase for somebody that he was acquainted with, and tell of the hardships that that person was enduring, and have his salary increased, and Members of the House would do the same thing, and it instilled into the minds of the employees the idea that it was all a matter of "pull" as to what recognition they should receive. The consequence was that notwithstanding the civil-service law, notwithstanding they had to submit to these examinations, yet in the case of promotions they beset Senators and Members of Congress as before, not exactly on the line that it was all patronage but that it was a question of "pull," nevertheless, as to promotions and increases of salary.

This is not a large minimum. I think probably there will be few salaries, as conditions are now and as we shall proceed with the reclassification, that would go below the minimum that this bill provides for; but to make that straight line, and say that every one below that line must either be paid that amount or quit, so far as the Government is concerned, or else have the Government pay an uncalled-for and unearned bonus, as would be the case in these soldiers' homes, is that which is not expected and that which I believe is not desirable for us to allow.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I only want to say a word about this bill.

This bill passed the House, as I understand, by nearly a unanimous vote. There were 8 votes cast against it. The fundamental of this bill is that the Government shall pay a living wage to those who work for the Government.

When the bill came to the Senate, and came to the Committee on Education and Labor——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator only last night had, I will not say a colloquy, but some exchange of sentiments here on the women's bureau bill. Does the Senator know—and I think he must know—that the mere fact that this bill has passed, and is supposed to be on its way for approval, has caused I do not know how many but a good many women to be discharged from their places and men put in their places?

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator has in mind what is called the District of Columbia Minimum Wage Commission. Congress some time ago passed a bill providing for a commission in the District of Columbia to fix a minimum wage. They have done that, and it is true, as the Senator has said, that many young women who have been working have lost their positions. We are not talking about that, however. That has nothing to do with the bill passed last night.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that perfectly; but I wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he, like myself, has stood for the rights of women to the extreme in all cases——

Mr. KENYON. I will not say to the extreme. The Senator can speak for himself.

Mr. WARREN. And I presume he does not want to favor legislation that directly affects them in the adverse way that I think this legislation does. For instance, the Senator speaks of the District of Columbia having a minimum wage. That is a considerably lower wage than this——

Mr. KENYON. That was fixed by the commission.

Mr. WARREN. And yet that is high enough so that it results in the discharge of women and men being put in their places.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but that is not limited as this bill is limited at all.

Mr. WARREN. I know; it is not limited entirely to the Government.

Mr. KENYON. It is not limited as to age.

Mr. WARREN. But does not the Senator believe that these salaries that are paid here in Washington, surrounded as we are with Government employees, will affect wages all through, outside of the Government service?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not know. I am merely contending about this bill that the Government should pay its employees a living wage, and there are 66,000 employees of the Government who at this time really are not receiving a living wage, according to the testimony before the committee.

I do not know what to do about the matter. I realize, as the Senator from Wyoming does, the expense of all these matters, and if the Congress feels that it can run the Government without paying to its employees wages that they can live on, of course that is the business of the Congress. That, anyway, is the theory of this bill.

The Senate committee provided in the bill which has passed that a bonus should not be included. I think that is a mistake, but I think there was a feeling that it could not pass without that provision, so that the Senate bill does not affect anything like the number of employees that the House bill affects. Then the Senate also raised the age from 18 to 20 years, so that the provisions of the bill will apply only to those persons who shall have attained the age of 20 years. That lessens very much the number that are affected by the bill.

I come now to the point which the Senator from Wyoming made, the question of the old soldiers at some of the soldiers' homes. I always feel like deferring to the Senator's judgment on those matters, but I think in this instance he is in error. Bear in mind that this bill provides that if employed by the hour the pay shall not be less than 37½ cents an hour. I understand that these soldiers now are paid 50 cents a day, and they do not work many hours. There is a proviso to this bill which reads:

Provided further, That in the case of an employee receiving quarters and subsistence—

As in the case of the old soldiers—

in addition to his compensation, the value of such quarters and subsistence shall be determined by the head of the department, and the compensation of such employees, plus the value of quarters and subsistence, shall in no event be less than the rate fixed by this act.

So that in every case where an employee is receiving quarters and subsistence, that is deducted. That is the point which I understood the Senator from Wyoming to make, and I really believe it is entirely covered in that proviso. It will cost more money. There is no doubt about that. You can not increase the pay of employees without its costing money.

Mr WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I did not pass my own judgment on that. I stated that I had received information from a man who said he had knowledge concerning it, and it seemed reasonable to me from my remembrance of this legislation. I think Gen. Wood had some conversation with the Senator from New York, the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, about the conditions. I do not know that the Senator has the papers here.

Mr. KENYON. I do not know how anybody could hold that the parties would be entitled to less than 37½ cents an hour.

Mr. WARREN. They do not work by the hour. They work by the month.

Mr. KENYON. Well, they work so many hours a day.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no. Some days they work all day, and some days they may not work at all.

Mr. KENYON. How many of these persons are there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two thousand.

Mr. WARREN. About 2,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think I can make the matter clear to the Senator.

I desire to read an extract from a letter which I received from Gen. George W. Wood, chairman of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, which describes the situation which that institution would be in were the Nolan bill to pass without amendment.

I quote from the letter:

If the Senate reconsiders and takes the bill up, it would surely be to the interest of the members of the home, who number over 2,000 of our employees, to have them excluded from the terms of the bill, because, under the last clause of the bill, it is distinctly provided that the head of a department can consider food and quarters, where granted, as an element in fixing compensation; but with us, our members receive food and quarters, not by virtue of their employment but by virtue of being members of the home; and, therefore, if we were to employ members under the terms of the Nolan bill as passed we would have to pay them the full pay of $90 per month, giving them, in addition, food, quarters, and clothing, which would practically give them, say, $130 to $135 per month.

Most of these men are old Civil War soldiers.

In addition to all this, many of them receive pensions under the new law of $50 or $60 per month.

Now, here is the situation. A member of the home is any soldier who is admitted, his eligibility having been established under the law laid down by Congress. There are nine of these great homes. They have something like 20,000 of these veterans as members living at the homes. They have rights. One of their rights is quarters and subsistence as members, not as employees. The management of each of these homes employ a limited number of them for some of the light work around the reservation. As the Senator from Wyoming said, one of the employments is as a member of the firing squad, rather a sad duty and function to perform. Two or three times a week there is a funeral at each of these homes; some poor old soldier dies and his comrades escort his casket to the cemetery and give him a military funeral, a very pretty and touching ceremony, one which the management of the home sees is carried out with all regard to the proprieties and the solemnities of the occasion. The members of the firing squad are members of the home. They get a little compensation for performing that function. Under the Nolan bill they get $90 a month for it. They work by the month.

Mr. KENYON. Do they not work by the hour?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; they work by the month, and plus that they get their quarters and subsistence.

Mr. THOMAS. And a pension besides.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And they also receive their ordinary pensions. The pensions do not lapse when men are living at the home. The management of the home fear that if such a cost is piled upon the management of these homes they will in the very nature of things be compelled to go outside of the membership and secure the help of people who will work 8, 10, or 12 hours a day and not take care of some of these old soldiers who can work but are not expected to work perhaps more than 1 hour or 2 or 4 hours a day.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to ask the Senator if the old soldiers themselves desire to be excluded from this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know; but it is obvious that the drafters of the bill did not realize what it was going to do in the old soldiers' homes.

Mr. KENYON. If it will do what the Senator says, I think that is absolutely true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what it does. This comes from the president of the board of managers, Gen. Wood.

Mr. KENYON. I am anxious to know whether they are desirous of being excluded or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say whether there has been any action by the organizations in the District of Columbia, but I can say that delegations of old soldiers have called upon me and asked to be excluded from the provisions of the bill. They have called my attention to numerous cases in the District where old soldiers are employed around private homes to care for the lawns and to do the chores around the place. They are receiving about $50 a month. Many times those old soldiers are given places just out of consideration of the fact that they are old soldiers. Under the bill they will be excluded from taking such employment; and I will say to the Senator that they ask to be excluded from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to read another paragraph from Gen. Wood's letter, which amplifies what I have just read. He continues:

Now, many—the majority—of these positions now filled by members are such as company commanders, company sergeants, headquarters orderlies, firing squad (who several times a week march to the cemetery and fire three volleys over the graves of comrades), and do not require an able-bodied man in any sense of the word, but which are of great help in enabling us to run the home on an economical basis and also give a certain amount of employment to crippled men, thereby rendering them much more contented with the home life and give them a little extra money. All this system is completely wiped out by the terms of the Nolan bill.

I purpose, Mr. President, if the vote to reconsider is adopted, to offer an amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Under the statement made by the Senator from New York, I would not resist the motion to reconsider. I think this matter should be straightened out, and straightened out properly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have an amendment prepared.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. There is one other question. As I understand it, the Home of the Regular Army here in this city is self-supporting. There is no appropriation made at all by the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is another kind of a home. I have not referred to that.

Mr. NELSON. These other homes are supported by public appropriations?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are.

Mr. NELSON. The effect of this measure would be to take more money out of the resources of this Regular Army home, and make them pay more than they are now paying out of their own funds, would it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not sure that it would, Mr. President. As I understand it, the Soldiers' Home here in the District of Columbia is for the soldiers of the Regular Army only.

Mr. NELSON. It is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the home is supported by 25 cents a month withdrawn from the pay of soldiers in the Regular Army; or, at least, that used to be the case.

Mr. WARREN. There used to be a draft made on them years ago, but we did away with that because they had a sufficient reserve fund; so that unless the law has been reenacted there is now nothing taken. But this home is in command of a general of the Army, and is a United States establishment. As the Senator from Minnesota says, it supports itself. First there was a gift of the property where it is located, then they received all fines imposed by courts-martial for little misdemeanors in the Regular Army. They all go to that fund. The last provision was, I think, for 10 or 12 cents a month from the pay of Regular Army soldiers—probably it was 25 cents in the first place—but finally we dropped that out, and to my knowledge it has not been since imposed.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is correct. The resources of the home, aside from the two hundred thousand or so which Gen. Scott brought back from Mexico, have come from the old soldiers of the Regular Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They come from the soldiers on active duty, the soldiers in the Army.

Mr. NELSON. From court-martial fines and a certain monthly deduction. But that deduction from the pay of the men has been obsolete for a good many years, repealed, because they had funds enough. The institution is supported, not by the Federal Government but by the accumulated resources of the old soldiers, which they have furnished themselves.

Mr. WADSWORTH. While they were in the Army.

Mr. NELSON. While they were in the Army.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Senator let us act on the motion to reconsider, and then let the Senator from New York offer his amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will be glad to have the motion to reconsider passed. I was just going to say that we ought to reconsider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill ordered to a third reading and was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am not sure that I have the last print of the bill, but I offer this amendment: On page 2, line 3, after the word "Panama Canal Zone," I move to insert the words "nor to members of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers employed at or in connection with the home."

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to add a clause to that so as to exclude the veterans of the Civil War.

Mr. WARREN. Why the veterans of the Civil War alone? Why not the veterans of any war?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know how far that would go.

Mr. KENYON. We would not want to exclude the old veterans from the benefits of this act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I think this bill is of very grave importance. It passed the other day without consideration of this matter, and there are other matters which may be involved that were not considered. I am very much afraid the bill would turn people out of their jobs instead of giving them more money. That is what it amounts to, and I think it ought to be looked into further. I hope it will not be pressed to-night.

Mr. KENYON. No, Mr. President; it will not be pressed to-night. The Senator from New York desires to offer his amendment to-night, and then it will be the unfinished business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator from Alabama will admit that the necessity of the amendment I offered is very obvious.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not opposing the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I will think this subject over to-night, and see if I can not cover the case of old soldiers who are working in the District for private individuals who would be affected. My attention was called to this matter only night before last, and my informant said to me, "I have an old soldier who works for me. All he does is cut the grass on the lawn and look after the flowers." He said, "Senator SMOOT, if the bill passes, I can not employ that old man any longer." I know the Senator from Iowa would not want to put that old soldier out of his position.

Mr. KENYON. Not at all. I will be very glad to talk to the Senator about it and agree on an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the introduction of this amendment? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the words "Panama Canal Zone," insert the words "nor to members of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers employed at or in connection with said home."

Mr. SMOOT. There are a number of Senators who desire an executive session, and if there is no other business——

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 11984, to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

TRANSFER OF SURPLUS WAR MATERIAL.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is in the Chamber, and I was going to ask him if he would not call up House bill 13329, to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer certain surplus material, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes. I yield to him for the purpose of calling up that bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from North Carolina called my attention to a bill which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs at its last meeting. It has to do with the transfer of certain surplus material, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture; that is, the transfer to come from the War Department.

It seems that under a decision of the auditor or the comptroller or some one who makes decisions and interprets the statute, under the provisions of the bill which passed many months ago authorizing the War Department to turn over to the Agricultural Department machinery useful and valuable in road making——

Mr. SIMMONS. Tractors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Tractors and mobile repair shops were not deemed to be included, although it was the expectation of the Congress, and certainly of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, that a tractor was just as fit to be included in that definition as a traction engine and various other kinds of heavy machinery which are used in road building. This bill passed the House and was referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and was reported from the committee with two amendments. It is that bill for which I ask unanimous consent for present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the same subject matter was called to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, and an amendment was offered to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. In the hearings upon that amendment it developed by testimony from officials of the War Department that they did not have tractors now, other than those that they want to use for the Army, and therefore the amendment was not put upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as far as it affected tractors.

I do not know just what the effect of the passage of the bill would be. I would not want it to take tractors away from the War Department that they claim they must keep for the use of the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill merely provides for turning over such motor tractors as are now in the possession of the department. Undoubtedly they have some. I think there must be some mistake about that.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about it.

Mr. SIMMONS. If they have no surplus machines of this sort the bill would be absolutely ineffective.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know how many they have. All I am stating is what was stated before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill provides for the turning over only of such as the Army does not need for its use.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13329) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer certain surplus material, machinery, and equipment to the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments on page 2, line 3, to strike out the word "five" and insert the words "not to exceed five"; in line 4, after the word "parts," to insert the words "not to exceed"; in line 5, page 2, to strike out the words "shop machinery and machine tools and equipment suitable for repairs and rebuilding shops for motor-propelled vehicles"; and on page 3, line 12, to strike out section 4 in the following words:

SEC. 4. That the Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to procure or provide suitable and adequate storage facilities for the proper storage and care of all road-building materials, equipment, and supplies transferred to it by the War Department for use in the improvement of highways and roads under the provisions of section 7 of the act approved February 28, 1919, and that the cost of procuring or providing such storage facilities may be paid from any funds available from appropriations heretofore made for the Department of Agriculture.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Department of Agriculture, under the provisions of section 7 of the act approved February 28, 1919, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1920, and for other purposes," for use in the improvement of highways and roads as therein provided, the following war materials, machinery, and equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment as are or may hereafter be found to be surplus and not required for military purposes, to wit: Not to exceed 500 10-ton caterpillar tractors complete with spare parts; not to exceed 200 mobile machine shop units complete with spare parts.

SEC. 2. That freight charges incurred in the transfer of the property provided for in this act shall not be defrayed by the War Department, and if the War Department shall load any of the said property for shipment the expense of said loading shall be reimbursed the War Department by the Department of Agriculture by an adjustment of the appropriations of the two departments: Provided, however, That any State receiving any of said property for use in connection with the improvement of public highways shall, as to the property it receives, pay to the Department of Agriculture the amount of 20 per cent of the estimated value of said property as fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture or under his direction, against which sum the said State may set off all freight charges paid by it on the shipment of said property, not to exceed, however, 20 per cent.

SEC. 3. That any State highway department to which is assigned such materials, machinery, and equipment transferred herein to the Department of Agriculture may, in its discretion, arrange for the use of such materials, machinery, and equipment for the purpose of constructing or maintaining public highways, with any State agency or municipal corporation at a fair rental, which shall not be less than the cost of maintenance and repair of said materials, machinery, and equipment. The title to said materials, machinery, and equipment shall be and remain vested in the State for use in the improvement of the public highways, and no such materials, machinery, and equipment in serviceable condition shall be sold or the title to same transferred to any individual, company, copartnership, or corporation.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 1, after the word "Establishment," I move to strike out down to and including the word "and," in line 2, the words proposed to be stricken out being "as are or may hereafter be found to be surplus, and," so that the sentence will read "and equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment not required for military purposes, to wit," and so forth.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator want to make it mandatory that tractors shall be turned over whether the Army needs them or not?

Mr. NORRIS. I want to take away the fiction that I understand has been existing for some time about declaring something to be surplus. This does not make it mandatory. It does not take anything away that is required for military purposes, but it makes it unnecessary to go through the formality of declaring something surplus.

As I understand it, practically this same provision was included in the Army appropriation bill and nothing has ever been done about it, because they do not declare anything to be surplus. My amendment only strikes out the declaring of a surplus, which is only a fiction anyway.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think that would impair the effectiveness of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I have talked with the Senator's colleague about it, who is not now in the Chamber, and he is very much in favor of the amendment. I have also talked with the author of the bill in the House in regard to it. I have his letter in my hands now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator from New York will accept the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It brings up a rather important matter of policy. It seems to me the War Department should take official action first.

Mr. NORRIS. They would do so if the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I doubt it. I think the things should be definitely and officially declared surplus.

Mr. SMOOT. And then divided in the way the War Department decides that they should be distributed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The language "hereafter found to be surplus" has been used in all such bills, and they have declared as surplus millions and millions of dollars worth of material. They have declared surplus $1,250,000,000 worth, and to my knowledge there are $600,000,000 worth more on the way to be declared a surplus within the next two or three weeks. I think it should be officially declared surplus, because then you can center upon the War Department the responsibility for saying yes or no, this thing is surplus or it is not.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but they would know exactly how many tractors there were that were surplus, and not take out one to-day and one to-morrow and two next week. The whole number, when it is declared surplus, is known, and then the distribution can be made equitably to all the States, and not allow one State to get all that they may have as surplus.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the language left is only "not required for military purposes" the material could be dribbled out.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but they may not require them to-day for military purposes, and they might take all of them, and then, perhaps in the future, we would have to buy those same machines back.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe this brings the question down to where it is going to be dribbled out, as the Senator from New York suggests. The matter would still remain in the control of the War Department as to what they needed for military purposes. They would pass on that.

Mr. SMOOT. They may not need many of them to-day, and with the wording of the bill as it would be with those words stricken out it would apply to the number of tractors that the War Department needs to-day and that may not be needed at all to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. I submit to the Senator that the same thing might happen if the words "as are or may hereafter be found surplus" were left in the bill. They would declare surplus what existed to-day, and if they decided they did not want to dispose of them they would decide as of to-day probably, but I assume that they would take into consideration the future needs of the Army and what they were going to use them for to-morrow. If they did want them for to-morrow they would still be required for military purposes and they would not turn them over.

Mr. SMOOT. There is quite a difference between the number of tractors that will be required for military purposes and a surplus.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to state that the Member of the House who introduced the bill referred me to the hearings where the evidence is to be found, but I have not had time to read the hearings. However, he states in his letter to me that—

There are 6,800 of five and ten caterpillar tractors in the possession of the War Department which are exposed to the elements and have been in open storage since November, 1918. They are scattered throughout the various camps in all parts of the United States and have not been disposed of because of a contract made by the Hope Manufacturing Co., of Illinois, from whom they were originally purchased, which prevents disposition of the same.

Does the Senator from New York know whether that is true or not? Did the Government make a contract with the manufacturers of these tractors by which they agreed they would not sell them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I never heard of it. I do not know about it.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what this Member of the House said in his letter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a most unusual thing. I never heard of any such contract.

Mr. NORRIS. It is an unusual thing; but the man who writes this is a careful man, and he is one of the men who has been making an investigation on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. But the department has already made disposition of a number of tractors.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, turning them over to the Agricultural Department or to the States, I presume, would not be a violation of the contract; but he says that it ought to be made mandatory, because of that provision in the contract, which probably would cause the War Department not to comply with the request as freely as it otherwise would.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems to me that if we follow the bill as reported it will accomplish that very purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I think if these words were out it would help considerably. The Senator is going to be a member of the conference committee. This does not enact it into law. I do not want to cripple the War Department any more than the Senator does. The Senator will still have it within his control.

I have faith not only in his ability but in his honesty to carry out the wishes of the Senate if he thinks he is able to carry them out. What is the objection to letting the amendment be made in the Senate, and then the conferees can consider it as fully as they see fit; and if they find that this language is necessary, which I do not believe they will—and I think if the Senator investigates it he will agree that it ought to go out—there will be no objection on my part nor, I presume, on the part of any other Senator to having it stricken out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had hoped, let me say in reply to the Senator from Nebraska, that the amendments which the committee inserted in the bill would be concurred in by the House without a conference. They are quite harmless with respect to the purpose of the bill itself. They are simply perfecting, except as to section 4, which we have stricken out, and which, to my mind, is indefensible.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that the 20 per cent provision?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; section 4, which we strike out, is the section which authorizes the Department of Agriculture to procure and provide suitable and adequate storage facilities for all this material. There is a duplication of storage, and we struck out that section.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will accept this amendment and let it go to conference, and if the amendment is not agreed to there I shall have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. The House may yield on the Senate amendments, and then the Senator from New York could not do a thing.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what the Senator has been saying. In my judgment, the House will not yield, but they will ask for a conference and we will grant it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is this way, let me say to the Senator: I fear his amendment. If it is put in, it is done by the Senate. The Senator from Nebraska says that I will be a member of the conference committee. If so, I shall have to stand up for what the Senate has done. That is why I oppose the amendment now. If the amendment is agreed to, of course the Senate conferees will do their duty.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think the amendment is a dangerous one, as the Senator from New York has stated, because I think if the language sought to be stricken out by the Senator from Nebraska were eliminated from the bill the War Department would have the decision of the question as to how many of these tractors were needed for military purposes, and would have to turn over under the legislation only such as in their judgment were held not to be necessary for military purposes.

However, I think the Senator from New York is probably correct, that the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska might jeopardize the passage of the bill at this session of Congress. I think the House will accept the amendments which the committee has reported, but it may not accept without a conference if the additional amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska is attached to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMERICAN LEGION ENCAMPMENT, VINCENNES, IND.

Mr. NEW. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 359) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the American Legion Post, No. 73, Vincennes, Ind., necessary cots for use at the State encampment of the American Legion to be held at Vincennes, Ind., on June 28 and 29, 1920. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. I do not think it will require a moment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KENYON. Is House bill 5720 still before the Senate, and if so, will it lose its place if the request of the Senator from Indiana is granted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill referred to by the Senator from Iowa has been temporarily laid aside, as the Chair understands.

Mr. KENYON. Was it laid aside as the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senate does not take up some other measure and adjourn while such measure is under consideration, the bill of the Senator from Iowa will be the unfinished business.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I will state the facts in connection with the joint resolution reported by me, which has already passed the House. The American Legion of Indiana is to hold its State encampment on the 28th and 29th of June at Vincennes, and the resolution provides for the loaning of cots to the American Legion post there for the accommodation of the men who will attend the encampment. The War Department has the equipment on hand, as it has officially stated, and approves of the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAGNESITE ORES.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 414, being the bill (H. R. 5218) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of magnesite ores and manufactures thereof in the United States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington was not present when the action was taken, but there is a bill before the Senate which has been temporarily laid aside for the various matters which have intervened, and the motion of the Senator would supplant that bill. Is that the Senator's desire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. KENYON. The motion to reconsider the vote whereby what is known as the minimum-wage bill was passed was agreed to. The bill is before the Senate with an amendment, which has been offered, with the understanding that it shall be taken up to-morrow. I do not want to have that bill displaced, and if the Senate now adjourns or takes a recess it will become the unfinished business.

Mr. THOMAS. I may say that if the magnesite bill is taken up it will give rise to extended discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that; I rather anticipated that it would. My object is to get the bill up.

Mr. KENYON. If that bill goes up the other bill goes down.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, June 3, 1920, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1920.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Infinite, Invisible Spirit, whom we call God, to whom the humblest and most forlorn soul may look up and call Thee Father, receive consolation, hope, and courage.

In its sublime research, philosophy
May measure out the ocean deep—may count
The sands or the sun's rays—but, God! for Thee
There is no weight nor measure:—none can mount
Up to Thy mysteries; reason's brightest spark,
Though kindled by Thy light, in vain would try
To trace Thy counsels, infinite and dark;
And thought is lost ere thought can soar so high,
Even like past moments in eternity.

We come in our weakness, praying for strength; in our perplexities, praying for light; that we may use the faculties Thou hast bestowed upon us to the betterment of mankind, satisfy our longings, and receive Thine approbation. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON CERTAIN LAND AT CRISTOBAL, CANAL ZONE.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill H. R. 6222, which is now lying on the Speaker's table, be now taken from the table and the Senate amendment concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls from the Speaker's table and moves to concur in the Senate amendment to the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6222) to remove a certain tract or lots of land in Cristobal, Canal Zone, from the operation and effect of the Executive order of the President of December 5, 1912, pursuant to the act of Congress of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., ch. 390, p, 565).

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. As the bill originally passed the House, I remember it was for the correction of title in the Masonic lodge in Panama. Is that the purpose of it?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Does not this Senate amendment change the purpose?

Mr. DENISON. In answer to the question I will state that after the bill passed the House an opinion was rendered by Judge Feuille, attorney for the Canal government, who said that he had serious doubts whether or not the first provision of the bill, as a matter of law, would accomplish the purpose. And he asked that the bill be amended as it is amended. I suggested the amendment to the Senate committee, and they made the amendment as suggested.

Mr. DUPRÉ. It is still intended to convey the land to the lodge?

Mr. DENISON. The purpose of the amendment is to better accomplish what was sought to be accomplished.

Mr. GARD. I have not seen the amendment to read it, but just heard it read, and I think from the reading of it that the amendment provides for the sale to some one other than the lodge by the Panama Railroad Co.

Mr. DENISON. No; it simply authorizes the Panama Railroad Co. to make conveyance to any person. Of course, they contracted to sell the property to the Masonic lodge, and the only reason they did not do it was because of this flaw in the title.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The situation, then, as I understand it, is that the House bill simply removes the prohibition against the disposition of the property?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And the attorney thought that the removal of the prohibition would not of itself authorize the sale of the property?

Mr. DENISON. That is it.

Mr. MONDELL. And the amendment goes to the removal of the prohibition as well as authorizing the sale?

Mr. GARD. But under the original title it authorized the sale.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, the amendment was made at the suggestion of the attorney for the Canal government. It has the approval of the Panama Railroad Co., I suppose, and of all parties concerned.

Mr. GARD. It has not gone back to the committee for its consideration?

Mr. DENISON. I consulted with the chairman of the committee in regard to the matter, and from my understanding with the chairman I suggested the amendment myself which was made by the Senate, and I think it will meet the approval of the committee.

Mr. GARD. But it has not been considered by the House committee since the Senate amendment was made?

Mr. DENISON. No; but it is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. WINGO. Unfortunately for me, my attention was diverted. What was the provision in the House bill?

Mr. DENISON. The provision of the House bill was that this tract of land upon which the Masonic Temple had been built be taken out from under the operation of the Executive order of the President in 1912 expropriating all land and land under water in the Canal Zone.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, your House bill removed the inhibition which prohibited the sale or transfer of this property to this lodge?

Mr. DENISON. That is the effect of the bill as it is now.

Mr. WINGO. What is the Senate amendment to which the gentleman asks us to agree?

Mr. DENISON. The Senate amendment simply authorizes the Panama Railroad Co. to go ahead and make conveyance, as the title was in the Panama Railroad Co. before the order of expropriation.

Mr. WINGO. I gathered from the question of the gentleman from Ohio that the Senate amendment authorized the conveyance to anyone instead of those people who had put the building there?

Mr. DENISON. Well, we did not know to what particular persons they wanted to make conveyance nor what words they wished to use, so we made the grant of authority general.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is satisfied that the Senate amendment will permit the carrying out of this intention of the company to convey this title to the lodge which has now been built on it, and that it is satisfactory to them?

Mr. DENISON. I am sure it will have that effect.

Mr. GARD. The original act which I have in my hand provides for the withdrawal of a certain tract of land, describing it as a tract of land, lot No. 641, and so forth. It is a withdrawal from the operation of the act of Congress known as the Panama Canal act, and provides for an absolute withdrawal. Now, this amendment provides:

That the Panama Railroad Co. is hereby authorized to sell, transfer, and convey said lots or tracts of land with all improvements thereon to any other person or persons or association of persons and retain the consideration therefor for its own use.

Mr. DENISON. You see the title was in the Panama Railroad Co. before the order of expropriation, and it was not intended or thought that these lots in the city of Colon would go to the Government with the other lands in the Canal Zone under the order of expropriation; but after the Panama Railroad Co. had given the lodge an option on it and attempted to make the conveyance the attorneys found this land was included in the general order of expropriation, and the title passed constructively to the Government.

Mr. WINGO. Is it true that the reason you do not specify the names of persons to whom the land is to be conveyed is because you do not know the names of the trustees of that lodge?

Mr. DENISON. That is it. And we did not know but what there had been new trustees chosen since our last communication with them. Nor did we know but that the method of financing the sale to the lodge might require the conveyance of title temporarily to other parties.

Mr. WINGO. You did not have the names of the trustees?

Mr. DENISON. No; we did not know their names.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I believe the amendment ordinarily should go back to the committee for its determination, but if the gentleman is satisfied with the conditions I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

SALE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS TO CITY OF LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 406, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon calls up a House bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 406) amending an act entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., certain public lands in California; and granting rights in, over, and through the Sierra Forest Reserve, the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, and the San Gabriel Timberland Reserve, Calif., to the city of Los Angeles, Calif.," approved June 30, 1906.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 7 with an amendment as follows:

After the word "page" strike out the figure "5" and insert the figure "6."

The purpose of that amendment is to correct a typographical error in the message, and I move to concur in the other Senate amendments.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman explain the other Senate amendments? From the reading at the desk we could not understand them.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SINNOTT: Amendment No. 7: Strike out the figure "5" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 406 granted certain rights of way and privileges to the city of Los Angeles to enable the city to secure an additional power and water supply for the city. The Senate by its amendment has restricted and lessened and regulated the right granted by the House. It has really diminished the right and given certain protection to parties interested in irrigation where the grant is desired.

Mr. GARD. I think the matter should be explained. I am frank to say that a great deal of adverse criticism has come to my attention regarding this bill, both at the time of the passage and since.

Mr. SINNOTT. Whatever additional explanation the gentleman wants I shall be glad to give.

The first amendment modifies the House provision. There was no restriction upon the right granted by the House. The word "such" is inserted in the Senate provision, and also "as have heretofore been constructed." Now, that confines the grant to the canals, ditches, and so forth, heretofore constructed by the city. The second amendment eliminates from the act certain lands that are now in controversy in the court. That does not apply to those lands if the court finds that they have been illegally purchased. The third Senate amendment is for the purpose of clarity. It strikes out the following language——

Mr. GARD. What is the second amendment? Is it about litigation now in court affecting the title to the land?

Mr. SINNOTT. Affecting the title to the land. A certain power company is endeavoring to circumvent the efforts of the city to secure its rights under a prior grant.

Mr. GARD. There seems to be a suspicion that this is in the interest of the power company instead of in the interest of the city.

Mr. SINNOTT. The power company has been fighting this legislation. And if it is found the lands have been illegally purchased they will be eliminated from the provisions of this grant.

The fourth amendment further limits the rights given to the city by reserving the right to the Government to grant rights of way for road purposes over the land granted. The next amendment to the last provides that in considering the application of the city the consideration of such applications by the department shall be upon the merits of such applications, unaffected by any possible conflict with the plans of the city. That is to protect certain irrigation districts which desire rights of way and certain rights over the land in question. The other amendment is that the approval of the rights of way for reservoir purposes shall not be made without the consent of the parties having irrigation rights. That is also to protect the proposed irrigators of that section of the State.

Mr. GARD. Is there any protection for the United States of America in this bill as to its public land?

Mr. SINNOTT. The whole matter rests with the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GARD. Is it necessary to submit the plans to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SINNOTT. They all have to be submitted to the Secretary and be approved by him, and the work must be undertaken within a certain time.

Mr. GARD. How much additional land is put in here by the Senate amendment?

Mr. SINNOTT. There is no additional land put in by the Senate amendment. The rights granted by the House are diminished by the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARD. Of course it is difficult to understand it by the reading of it, but as I understood it seemed to me the Senate amendment provided for other land than that contained in the House enactment.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is not true.

Mr. GARD. It did not?

Mr. SINNOTT. It did not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments with the amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

ADDITION TO THE CARIBOU NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4311) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Caribou National Forest, with Senate amendments, and move to agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon calls up the bill H. R. 4311, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4311) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Caribou National Forest.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to add some 60,000 acres to the Caribou National Forest in Idaho.

The first Senate amendment eliminates the following language in line 6 of the House bill: "or regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon." The language of the bill left will permit additions to the forest of lands chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, a real forest purpose. The language eliminated would have enabled the Secretary to add lands to the forest nontimbered lands and land of no value for forest purposes, but only valuable for grazing purposes. The Secretary of the Interior in his letter to the Senate committee asked for the elimination of that language. He said if Congress was going to adopt the policy of adding purely and solely grazing lands to the national forests, that should be done by general legislation.

The second amendment was one suggested by the Secretary of the Interior. As the House bill had it it read: "All lands embraced in any lawful application or entry pending at the date of the approval of this act be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the provisions of this act." Under the House language if there was a pending homestead entry at the time of the passage of this act on any land, even though the land was proper land to include within the forest reserve, it could not be included. The Forest Service or the Department of Agriculture suggested the following language in lieu of the House language:

The inclusion of any of the aforesaid lands in the Caribou National Forest shall not affect adversely any valid application or entry pending at the date of the approval of this act.

The language in both cases was designed to protect the homestead entryman, but under the House language should the homestead entryman abandon his homestead entry, the land would not be included within the forest reserve, but under the language suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture in case the homestead entry was abandoned or found invalid or not made in good faith, then the land would automatically be included within the forest reserve, and that is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. GARD. As I understand from the gentleman's statement of it, the first amendment of the Senate eliminates all regulation of grazing land as the House carried it in the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; not the regulation of grazing.

Mr. GARD. What was the language stricken out?

Mr. SINNOTT. "Or regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon."

Mr. GARD. Then that strikes out regulation.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; it strikes out that standard for including the land, "that any of the lands within the following described area, if not valuable for grazing purposes," that land is not to go within the forest.

Mr. GARD. This refers to the land?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; the standard for judging the land.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the votes whereby the Senate amendments to the two bills were agreed to, and move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14335) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14335, the deficiency bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Pending that, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How much time does the gentleman expect to devote to extraneous debate on the bill?

Mr. GOOD. One hour and a half was proposed, but I hope to cut that down.

Mr. BLANTON. Then we will begin reading the bill for amendment?

Mr. GOOD. No; there is some time left for general debate to the other side. This is the last of the appropriation bills, and we want to accommodate Members on both sides.

Mr. BLANTON. Will we have to sit up late at night and listen to some more of this wind jamming?

Mr. GOOD. No; I hope not; but we will probably have some conference reports to act upon.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14335, the deficiency bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the deficiency bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14335) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, every administration—or, I may say, almost every one—from the beginning of the Government to the present time has been marked by some outstanding event of legislation, some of them adversely rather than favorably. The first, quite naturally, was marked by the many acts necessary to put the Constitution in operation. The administration of the elder Adams was marked by the alien and sedition laws. Jefferson's administration will always be looked upon as the one administration that started the expansion of the country, so far as territory goes, in the purchase of Louisiana. Madison's administration was principally marked by the War of 1812. Monroe's administration probably will be longest remembered by the doctrine that bears his name, which makes the name of Monroe better understood in Europe than that of any other American unless it would be the names of Washington, Lincoln, Roosevelt, and President Wilson—the latter not with credit that it once promised, for reasons apparent to us all. Jackson's administration will always be regarded as the one in which the outstanding event was the fight against the national bank idea and the specie circular. Polk's administration will be remembered by the Mexican War. Lincoln's administration, among other things that will mark it, will be remembered by the great Civil War; Grant's by the reconstruction effort; Hayes's by the resumption of specie payments and the introduction of the civil-service system. Garfield's administration was short-lived because of the assassination soon after he took his seat. Cleveland's first administration will be remembered by the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the unfortunate tariff law known as the Wilson tariff bill; his second by his stand for the integrity of the Monroe doctrine. Harrison's administration will always be remembered by the antitrust law of 1890, known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, and the McKinley bill of the same year.

And so on down the line. Almost every administration has at least one outstanding piece of legislation. Those of McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft were all marked by important constructive legislation. The first administration of President Wilson will be remembered by the Underwood tariff bill, which will not be very savory, except the income-tax feature, which was made possible by an amendment introduced and passed by a Republican Congress and ratified by Republican States. The Federal reserve act, which has a good many qualities of redemption, since it was drafted upon the basis of the Aldrich Monetary Commission and is copied from the Aldrich bill, will also mark the first Wilson administration. The only features of value in it were what were found in the former measure, written into it by Republicans. [Laughter.]

Those features for which we are now apologizing are the things that Republicans tried to prevent. [Applause.] I know this statement is not welcome and it will create some opposition on the part of our Democratic friends, who claim everything for the law, which sees the Nation to-day in the midst of dangerous inflation. I think later on in our development the opposition to what I am now stating will vanish, as it is well known that the measure did not come into effect until long after the World War had broken.

The last administration of President Wilson, of course, will always be identified with the Great War, in which we are still weltering because the President prefers it to reservations on his league. This present Congress, which our Democratic friends like to assault, has passed more legislation, not only in quantity but in quality, than any other Congress in the same length of time that ever sat under this roof. It has passed some legislation that in the future will demonstrate it to be one of the constructive legislative bodies of our history. It has worked from a plan adopted in the beginning and is about to complete its program. The railroad bill, made necessary because of the unwise political operation of this vast industry for a time, which has been assaulted viciously, and which I am sorry a Democrat very recently referred to as a piece of legislation unduly delayed, is one of the great pieces of constructive legislation in a century. Those who claim that it was delayed are not speaking seriously and would not so speak to this group of Congressmen. The outside public not conversant with legislative procedure might think it was delayed. The time of the Congress was taken up from May 19, when the Congress first came in session, until July 1, when the fiscal year ended, in the passage of the appropriation bills that had to be passed in order that the Government could run. We did this on record time and saved the Government $40,000,000 a day every day in session.

Immediately following the passage of those bills the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee began its hearings, and continued in daily session listening to testimony, both forenoon and afternoon, and almost every day, from the early part of July until October. And, gentlemen of this committee, the best expert information that has ever been gathered by any committee upon any great question in the history of this Government was heard by that committee. These hearings supply the finest body of information upon a great question ever collected. During the hearings, supplying the information upon which legislation was to be drafted, there were 32 plans proposed, and those 32 were sifted down to 7 specific plans.

Those seven specific plans were strongly backed, not only by the ability of their advocates but by a marshaling of facts that demanded the attention of the entire country. Finally, the committee took those seven claims, eliminating what the committee thought was dangerous in all, and adopted what the committee thought was safe in all, and presented the bill to this Congress. It was reported here sometime in October. It was thoroughly debated and passed. In the meantime the Senate was working upon the Senate bill which passed that body. In December a conference was held between the committees of the House and the Senate, and from December until the middle of February, without the loss of a day, including Sundays, the conference committee worked upon the two bills and finally brought them in here, where they were passed against some considerable opposition on one side of the Chamber, but by a safe majority made up not only of Republicans but partly of Democrats as well. There was no delay. Time for consideration of such a measure is necessary. No consideration could deny the time. No piece of legislation that ever came to a body of legislators had back of it such expert information, such strength of advocacy, and no piece of legislation was given such wide and impartial and capable consideration as the railroad bill. And when you realize that we were dealing with the interest that represents $20,000,000,000 and involves the property rights of owners and thousands of security holders as well as 2,000,000 laborers, and encompasses 20,000,000 of our people directly interested in a pecuniary way, if you count those affiliated with the railway business, one-fifth of the population of the United States, and which involves the welfare of the entire population of the Nation, I say that a solution of that problem will forever redound to the credit and glory of this Republican Congress. [Applause.] It was a problem that was made more dangerous by the Democratic administration having involved the whole railway system in its political operation of the railroads, under which such deterioration of property, service, and general morale had to be suffered. It is a piece of legislation that will stand out as the very acme of constructive legislative ability of any Congress that has been in session within the memory of any man to-day living. And as other administrations are remembered by outstanding pieces of legislation, so this Congress will be equally remembered by the outstanding accomplishment of the railway legislation, which is but one of others of similar importance.

This Congress is called upon to reconstruct the Nation's business. The very phraseology suggests what we have been compelled to suffer. Extravagance in war and many other elements have embarrassed the country with high cost of everything in a falling off of production, due to different causes and administration of laws. We attempted to make possible increased production. This Congress passed the water-power bill, a bill designed to utilize the waste of nature at a moment when the world suffers from lack of production. All of this cheap talk about reducing the cost of living without adding in some way to the increase of production and decrease of extravagance by the Government induced by the war is tommyrot of the worst sort. It is mere demagogy and does no credit to the Member who employs it. You can not reduce the cost of living until you increase production and increase the efficiency of the producers. [Applause.] Instead of this Congress talking demagogy for political purposes, a practice not confined to Congress, it goes straight to the center of the difficulty and proposes to utilize the waste in production that otherwise would not be utilized. [Applause.] The water-power bill has been before the American Congress for over 12 years. It took a Republican Congress, House and Senate, to do what a Democratic Congress, House and Senate, had been unable to do in the 10 years that party controlled this House, beginning with 1910. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman from Ohio think it entirely fair for him, as one of the leading Republicans of this House, to claim the entire credit for the water-power bill, when he remembers that it passed a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate in identically the same form in which it was passed at this session, and was only prevented from becoming a law in the former Congress by a filibuster in the Senate which was made by a few Republicans?

Mr. FESS. My friend evidently feels hurt that this Congress is able to do what the last Democratic Congress could not do, and he does not want me to claim all the credit, just as I do not want my friend to claim the credit for the good that is in the Federal Reserve System, because the Democrats borrowed it bodily from the Republican idea. [Applause.]

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does not the gentleman think the party in control of the last Congress was guilty of contributory negligence in the very matter of that filibuster?

Mr. FESS. I certainly do, for the reason that some of the bills that went over from the Democratic House to the Senate did not get there until the 3d of March, and some of the House bills were not even reported to the Senate by the Democratic Senate committees. That was not the fault of the Republicans. That was the fault of the Democrats who controlled both branches of Congress and the Executive, who were guilty of delaying the passage of such an important bill until the closing days of the session when eight supply bills, some unreported to the Senate, could not be delayed.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. IGOE. I am glad to know that Republicans concede that there is some good in the Federal reserve act.

Mr. FESS. Oh, yes; the Republicans concede that. They had worked on the monetary commission for years and reported a good bill.

Mr. IGOE. I am glad to know that.

Mr. FESS. Republicans concede that there are splendid virtues in it, because in passing the Federal reserve act the Democrats adopted those splendid Republican ideas. [Applause.] It is the same thing with reference to the Federal Trade Commission. Mark you, the Federal Trade Commission was the creation of President Taft, and it was good in its inception, but the same faults that you find in the Federal Reserve Board, namely, its administration, you find now in the Federal Trade Commission which has been absolutely honeycombed by the socialists that have taken possession of it.

Mr. IGOE. That is what the packers say about it.

Mr. FESS. Well, the truth should not be unwelcome, no matter who tells it. Gentlemen of the committee, the water-power bill is not the only thing looking to increased production. The gas, oil, and coal lands leasing bill is a second measure that is again to utilize the powers of production as a substantial method to reduce the high cost of living. It is a creature of this Congress, and is a measure that a Democratic Congress for 10 years was unable to pass. [Applause.] That has also become a law.

In addition to that, we have gone as far as this Congress could go to enfranchise one-half of the American people by the extension of suffrage to the women of the country. [Applause.] The very first act of this Congress, by an overwhelming vote, was the enactment of this reform. The Republicans are hopeful that the closing drama may take place to-day over in Delaware; and if it does, look at the record. But whatever happens, Republicans are pledged to see this right given under the law. There were 204 votes on this side of the House for it, with but 18 against it, or the ratio of 11 to 1, and on the other side not sufficient to mention; 44 of the Democratic votes for it came from Republican States. Subsequently 29 Republican States have ratified it, and not a single Republican State up to date has rejected it. Eight of the 29 did not cast a single vote against it in either House or Senate. Six Democratic States have ratified it, and 6 Democratic States have rejected it. I do not know that I need to inject that activity of this Congress, but I do not want my friend from Alabama to insist that that is a Democratic measure, because it passed in spite of Democratic friends, although some Democratic States voted for it.

That is not all. This Congress has gone to the extent of its ability—aided by a loyal group of Democrats, it is true—in abolishing for all time from our midst the saloon business in America, and it has passed a law to enforce that decree. The time will come, if it is not already here, when this legislation will stand out as a great enough reform to distinguish any Congress.

Mr. Chairman, these are some of the measures looking directly to improving conditions of production.

This Congress has also enacted some of the most far-reaching measures on behalf of the toilers.

The industrial cripples' bill, now before the President awaiting his signature, is an epoch in constructive and remedial legislation. It proposes, by cooperation with the States, to train the unfortunates of industry, including the farm, so as to make them self-supporting rather than subjects of charity and victims of misfortune.

This Congress has also passed the retirement bill—a proposed form of legislation before the country for the past 20 years. It has also passed a minimum-wage bill, another measure for years demanding in vain a favorable action. It has also created a Woman's Bureau, to be a part of the Labor Department.

It will to-morrow put through the House the postal relief bill, upon which the committee has been laboring night and day in order to get the facts upon which rational action can be based.

I challenge any Congress to show a record of constructive and remedial legislation for the betterment of labor equal to this.

Mr. Chairman, Republicans are not ungrateful. They have made their record upon their gratitude toward the Nation's defenders on land and sea. Liberal legislation for the care of the disabled and infirm and their dependents has ever marked Republican policy toward the soldiers and sailors of all the wars in which our country has participated. The present Congress has appropriated generously for the disabled of the World War. The amounts already applied and authorized for the fiscal year 1920–21 for this purpose reach the stupendous sum of $1,180,671,893. This legislation is significant of the party's purpose in generously caring for the maimed and disabled men of the recent war.

Mr. Chairman, we all grant that the war Congress was faced with stupendous problems, the problems of a successful ending of the issue.

Republicans took the lead not only in urging preparation when the President cautioned Congress not to become "nervous" but in supplying the legislation necessary when we had entered it. The record is made up. The votes are entered, and any man with the hardihood to deny it ignores the printed official record known to most of the country. Knowing the inevitable tendency to use war for excuse for extravagance, Republicans at once attempted to create a committee on expenditure to guard against the useless wastes.

The President, instead of welcoming the cooperation of Congress, which was Democratic in both branches, demanded the proposal killed, which was accordingly done. A second attempt by Republicans met the same fate.

The array of facts epitomized but yesterday upon this floor by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], chairman of the War Expenditures Committee, leaves no further comment necessary upon the wisdom of the Republican proposal, but this array must hold the administration responsible for the orgy of extravagance. No man who lives to-day will see or hear the last of the claims demanded from the Government permitted by the War Department and other kindred responsible heads.

This Congress, alive to the real problem, saw at once the necessity of denying appropriations for every unnecessary agency. It ordered the dismantling of the war machine. Its difficulty is shown by the fact that while Government employees in Washington before the war numbered 37,000, to-day, two years after the war, we still have over 100,000 on the pay roll in Washington. Congress ordered in one bill a reduction of 40,000, to begin with July 1, by refusing to appropriate for them.

Every conceivable interest was exploited for the war, and now all power turned upon Congress to continue them, such as the infamous Muscle Shoals proposition, which interests are now, this very moment, attempting in the name of the farmer to turn into a nitrate plant. The present session has succeeded in saving below executive requests over a billion dollars.

In order to guard the future against such preposterous situations, the Congress only yesterday took the last and only other needed step to adopt a real budget system.

Next to the railroad bill, this legislation is the most important; indeed, many think it the most important of all the measures thus far passed. It will take its place alongside in importance of the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Sherman Antitrust Act, as the farthest reaching in its significance for the people of this Nation in this time of fiscal burdens.

Mr. Chairman, there are other measures too numerous for me to take the time to mention, because my time is limited now to a very few minutes.

I want to read you some facts. If there is any just criticism that anybody can make against this Congress, it is not that we have not done anything, because we have been so busy that we placed more laws on the statute books than any Congress that ever sat has placed on the books. [Applause.]

Let me illustrate what I mean. I want my Democratic friends to note this: This Congress convened on May 19, 1919. Take the date up to June 1, 1920, and then take the Democratic Congress, the Sixty-fifth, and bring it up to June 1, 1918, and compare the two. The calendar days will be 367 for this Congress to 368 for the Sixty-fifth Congress.

The bills introduced in the Sixty-sixth Congress up to June 1, 1920, were 14,344, as against 12,351 of the Sixty-fifth Congress; joint resolutions, 369 as against 298; simple resolutions, 576 as against 369; concurrent resolutions, 60 as against 11. Summing up, 15,349 as against 13,029.

Comparing the Sixty-sixth Congress up to June 1 with the Sixty-fifth Congress up to June 1, public laws were 250 in this Congress and 163 in the Sixty-fifth Congress. Public resolutions 48 in this Congress and 31 in the prior Congress. Private laws and resolutions 59 in this Congress and 6 in the Sixty-fifth Congress. Committee reports on the Union Calendar 348 in this Congress and 223 in the last Congress.

On the House Calendar there were 230 as against 161 in the Sixty-fifth Congress. On the Private Calendar 251, as against 91, a total of 829, as against 475. This shows committee action on legislation.

Reported bills acted upon by this Congress, 202 on the Union Calendar, 148 on the House Calendar, 82 on the Private Calendar, making 432. Pending, 397; total, 829.

Resolutions agreed to: Simple resolutions 227, as against 123. House concurrent resolutions 18, as against 25. This is one case where the Sixty-fifth Congress went beyond this Congress. Senate concurrent resolutions 9, as against 5. Totals, 254 for this Congress to 153 for the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Gentlemen of the committee, propaganda was early started by our Democratic friends in the hope of correcting a blunder that was made by the President of the Nation when he demanded by letter the return of a Democratic Congress, and from that moment that propaganda has been assiduously worked overtime by our Democratic friends, by the national Democratic committee and the congressional committee, to put upon this Congress the label of doing nothing when the facts of record indisputably prove that it has done more than any Congress that ever sat in the same time, and the reporters will tell you, if you refer to them, that so far as their knowledge goes, not a single Congress but one in the past, and that was years ago, have gone so rapidly in the business of the Government as has this Congress. Let me assure you that there will be a different story told when the facts are given to the people, which will not be deferred beyond the opening of the campaign of education.

In conclusion, summing up the work of this Congress, there was the greatest outstanding single attempt at legislation to cure the one difficult problem we inherited from the war, namely, providing revenue to pay the stupendous burdens of debt, taking steps in time to reduce taxation, stopping extravagance, turning war material back into peace channels, get away from a war basis to a peace basis, going straight to the remedy, namely, increased production. We adjure you to stop your tomfoolery talk about reducing the high cost of living by more legislation and proceed to use what legislation your administration has, if the remedy is in that line. [Applause.]

It must not be forgotten that all this was accomplished while the Senate was in the struggle, and a successful struggle, to preserve the independence and sovereignty of the Nation against the insistence of one man, who by his own will has decided that peace shall not be declared so long as he can prevent it or until his unmodified league is accepted, which, of course, means the beginning of wars. The issue will not be long deferred.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, two days ago I secured unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of Federal aid to road building. That extension did not appear in the RECORD and at this time I renew my request to so extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEMOCRATIC ACHIEVEMENTS IN ROAD BUILDING.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, the achievements of the Democratic Party while in control of the Government, expressed in constructive, beneficial legislation, are too well known to need emphasis now. It is sufficient to contrast this brilliant record by Democratic Congresses with weak, vacillating, colorless, leaderless, nothingness that characterizes the present Republican-controlled Congress, which has not a single constructive measure to its credit.

CHEAP POLITICS BY REPUBLICANS.

The present Republican millionaire steering committee, in complete control of this Congress, using methods so autocratic as to cause "UNCLE JOE" to smile when "Cannonism" is mentioned, is without courage to proceed constructively for the good of the people and is afraid to permit the minority to initiate wholesome legislation. The Republicans in this Congress have but one thought, and that is how to get control of the White House through the next national election. As an example of autocratic methods, they limited all debate Saturday, May 29, on the soldier bonus bill to 40 minutes and refused to permit any amendment. Gag rule with a vengeance! Afraid a tax on war profiteers would be substituted for the proposed Republican consumption tax! Instead of transacting the people's business, they play cheap politics incessantly. Instead of returning the country promptly to an honorable peace basis, repealing war measures, and proceeding vigorously to the adjustment of social and economic conditions, they fritter away the time in partisan wrangling and squander the public funds in political investigations and other nauseating personal and partisan political performances to the chagrin of the Democrats in Congress and to the disgust of the American people.

BRILLIANT DEMOCRATIC ACHIEVEMENTS.

In striking contrast with the pitiable spectacle of Republican inefficiency are the achievements of the Democratic Party. The results during Democratic control of Congress are written in the bronze of history. The record of accomplishment is without parallel in the annals of American Government. Constructive measures successfully dealing with finance, industry, tariff, human welfare, commerce, and credit were written by Democrats into law. In no instance did the Democratic Congresses evade or ignore. Tariff revision, the Federal reserve act, the Federal Trade Commission, rural credits, extension of parcel-post system and motor-truck lines, the Clayton antitrust law, child-labor law, eight-hour day, workmen's compensation, the development of natural resources, seaman's law, the shipping act, the income-tax law, the vocational education act, the election of Senators by direct vote, the abrogation of boss rule in Congress, publicity of campaign expenses, the corrupt-practices act, marine insurance, soldier's insurance, the warehouse bill, the agricultural extension law, nitrate plants, the Bureau of Markets, farm-loan bonds, Federal land bank, establishment of the Department of Labor, the Children's Bureau, and the Federal-aid road law are but a part of Democratic achievement. Along with other Democrats since I have been in Congress, I have supported these measures whole-heartedly.

DEMOCRATIC ROAD BUILDING.

My purpose to-day is to present but one of these great constructive Democratic measures.

Three hundred years ago the people had a faint vision of the value of good roads when the Virginia Colony recognized the principle by colonial legislation. One hundred and thirty years ago this vision found expression in the privately owned toll road, again in the old national road under President Jefferson, and again in the stagecoach roads, then in the State and turnpike roads; but it was left to a Democratic Congress to clarify this vision and crystallize this sentiment in 1913 by creating in the House the permanent Committee on Roads. Although the Federal Constitution authorizes Federal road building, nothing was done from Jefferson to Wilson. The long period of Republican rule is properly named the "dark ages" in Federal road building. The Democrats proceeded to act efficiently. In 1916 a Democratic Congress passed the Federal aid road act appropriating $75,000,000, and established as a governmental policy the principle of Federal aid to road building in the States.

EFFECT FAR-REACHING.

Upon the passage of the act making this appropriation the Federal Government proceeded promptly to cooperate with and utilize the existing State highway departments, but it was found that 17 States had no highway department with which the Federal Government could cooperate under the terms of the act. The earliest and most far-reaching effect of the new legislation was to bring about the creation of an adequate highway department in each State. In one year more constructive State highway legislation was put upon the statute books than had ever before been enacted in the history of the country. A wholesome condition was brought about which otherwise would not have been reached in many years. The conditions laid down by the Federal aid act operated most powerfully in strengthening State highway departments, the placing of road construction under skilled supervision, the standardization of road-construction methods, and the creation of large funds for construction and maintenance.

In harmony with road improvement since the passage of the Federal aid act, 59,427 miles of additional rural mail service, 1,993 miles of star routes, and 1,250 miles of motor-truck lines have been established.

REQUIREMENTS OF ACT.

The Federal aid road act requires, first, that the State legislatures shall assent to the provisions of the act; second, that each State shall have a State highway department, which department shall have direct supervision over the construction of roads on which Federal funds are to be expended; third, Federal aid shall be met by an appropriation of at least an equal amount of State funds, the highway department representing the State and its subdivisions.

PROGRESS STIMULATED.

In 1915, the year before the passage of the Federal aid act, the total expenditure for roads and bridges by all the States and local governments in the United States was estimated at $267,000,000. It is estimated that the funds available in the States for highway improvement for the year 1920 are in excess of $600,000,000.

My own State of Louisiana, having made provisions to meet the Federal aid road fund, will receive $3,742,524.57 of the funds already appropriated to June 30, 1921. The number of miles in Louisiana of roads completed, under contract, or approved to date is 534.22.

WAR PERIOD ROAD BUILDING.

The Federal aid road act was signed by President Wilson on July 11, 1916. It provided an appropriation of $75,000,000 over a period of five years to aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and $10,000,000 for the construction and maintenance of forest roads.

The operation of the law had hardly begun when war with Germany was declared. Other interests were subordinated to war work, and Federal aid road construction was immediately curtailed to release vitally necessary men and materials for war purposes. The War Department during the emergency, on its own account, constructed 1,075 miles of excellent roads in the United States, 846 miles of which are paved, at a total cost of $17,562,341. But the Federal aid act was on the statute books, the principle was established, and upon the signing of the armistice road work was promptly resumed under this beneficial act.

FEDERAL MONEY AVAILABLE.

The total Federal appropriations to date for road building in the States to June 30, 1921, are $275,000,000, apportioned according to area, population, and mileage of rural delivery and star routes in each State, each of these factors having a weight of one-third. The sum of $19,000,000 has been appropriated for forest road building.

BUREAU OF ROADS EFFICIENT.

Under the law the Secretary of Agriculture is charged with the administration of the provisions of the Federal aid act. He has delegated this duty to the Bureau of Public Roads. This bureau, through experience, has become very efficient and is in closer touch with the highway situation and requirements of the country, as a whole, than any other agency in the United States. It consists of a headquarters force in Washington and 13 district engineers in charge of the work in 13 groups of States.

The Bureau of Roads, being thoroughly progressive and scientific, has corrected many errors in road building and become the controlling influence in standardization of the details of specifications and methods used in the construction of the various types of road the country over. The bureau is a clearing house for the collection and dissemination of the best ideas of all State forces, and through its contact with all the States it is able to raise the standard of construction in many States by directing attention to improved methods in use in other States. With experience, this improvement will continue to advance. The Bureau of Roads, in close cooperation with State and county authorities, is the most efficient agency in promoting substantial and permanent road building in the States. No commission or body of men sitting in Washington could do the work half so well or in double the time.

ACTUAL WORK.

The Federal aid act properly requires that road projects for Federal aid be initiated by the States. Up to March 31, 1920, 2,602 projects, involving a total of 26,012.6 miles of roads, had been approved by the Secretary of Agriculture. The preliminary estimate of the cost of these projects is $326,750,928.76, of which $139,840,901.63 will be approved as Federal aid. On the same date 1,590 projects, representing approximately 15,350 miles, had either been completed or were under construction. The estimated total cost of these projects is $160,000,000, and, as they average about 40 per cent completed, the value of the work which had been done up to March 31 is $64,000,000.

The total cost of Federal aid work approved by the Secretary of Agriculture in the year and a half subsequent to the signing of the armistice and prior to March 31, 1920, is $274,000,000, exceeding by $7,000,000 the cost of all road and bridge work done by States and counties in the United States in the year 1915. This sum is only $100,000,000 less than the total cost of the Panama Canal. The work of this Government in the construction of the canal has been regarded the world over as a record-breaking achievement in respect to the dispatch with which it was carried out. The cost of that work was $373,000,000, requiring 10 years to complete it, the rate of expenditure being $37,000,000 a year. The record has been surpassed by the Federal Government and the States in the construction of Federal aid roads since the armistice. This rate has been attained in the face of the worst economic conditions in a century, and in spite of railroad strikes, inadequate transportation facilities, and shortage of construction materials and labor.

DEMOCRATIC COOPERATION.

In road building the Federal Government and the several States are acting in the closest cooperation. The dual interest of the Federal and State governments is recognized throughout. The States have the larger interest in the development of good roads, since 90 per cent of the traffic is local in character. Yet the Federal Government also has an interest in the betterment of the avenues along which this local traffic flows. A large part of it is the traffic from farms to shipping points and nearby cities and towns. Any improvement which expedites this traffic will go far to ease the existing critical situation in respect to the supply of agricultural products. This we must regard as most important. The Federal aid act is helping mightily in increasing farm-land values, the betterment of the conditions of rural life, the promoting of educational and social opportunities of our rural communities, and the development of the inherent attractions of country life. No special roads are needed for purposes of military defense, except to connect points of strategic importance. In the main, the highway requirements of war coincide with those of peace.

The Chief of the Bureau of Roads has therefore called into consultation the several agencies interested in the development of roads for the several purposes, including the War Department, the several State highway departments, and other similar agencies representative, respectively, of the National, State, and local needs. In conference with these agencies a systematic program of permanent highway development is being outlined. The roads which are required for national development are in no way separate from those required for State development. The Federal aid act recognizes this fact and provides for cooperation between the National and State Governments, permitting the Federal Government to participate in the cost of construction to the extent of 50 per cent. The States are required to pay at least the other half of the cost. That such a division of the cost is considered equitable is evidenced by the fact that the States themselves, of their own volition, are actually paying 60 per cent of the cost of the construction which is now proposed and underway.

GOOD RESULTS.

When the Democratic Congress in 1916 enacted the Federal aid act it was not possible to estimate accurately the extraordinary interest in highways that would follow and the vast resources which the States and their subdivisions were willing to invest in highway improvement. In order to meet Federal aid, State after State has passed special tax laws or issued bonds, or, where prevented by constitutional law or otherwise, the counties of States have themselves issued bonds and placed the proceeds at the disposal of the various State highway departments.

MARVELOUS ACHIEVEMENTS.

The development of highway financing, started and stimulated by Federal aid, has been truly astounding. Immediately upon becoming familiar with the terms of the Federal aid act, bond issues were voted throughout the country, conditioned upon the matching of the bond money by the Federal Government. This process has developed until we now find a reserve fund held by many States and counties amounting to over half a billion dollars, which funds will greatly exceed all Federal money now provided. This process is continuing. Several States will vote on new bond issues this fall, and many county bond issues already remain unsold and unavailable until more Federal aid and insurance of careful Federal supervision are provided. That the Federal aid road act is a marvelous Democratic achievement no one will deny.

REPUBLICAN FAILURE.

The present appropriations for road building will end June 30, 1921. No provision has been made by the present Congress to continue Federal aid after that date. Thirty-six State legislatures meet in biennial session next January and six meet in annual session at that time, when the 42 States will desire to make provisions to meet Federal aid for road building in the States, but will have no assurance from Congress. To meet this serious situation in the States 36 bills, most of them by Democrats, are now pending but ignored by this Congress.

As a final effort to get action for the States I have introduced H. R. 14255 continuing the present Federal aid road program through a period of four years. As a ranking member of the great Committee on Roads, I am eager to continue and increase the inestimable blessings of Federal aid to road building for many years to come. Nothing could mean more to our material progress and to the proper development of our immeasurable resources.

Failure to act by this Congress before the January sessions of the 42 State legislatures will be another shining example of Republican stupidity and inefficiency.

When the truth is fully revealed to the country, the record of this Republican-controlled Congress, bossed by a millionaire steering committee, should condemn the Republican Party for all time to come as inefficient and incompetent to handle the country's serious business. Let Republicans name one unselfish, patriotic, constructive measure initiated and enacted into law by them.

Elect a Democratic Congress in November and the money for the proposed soldier bonus to become effective July, 1921, will be raised by taxing the 69,000 war profiteers in the United States; elect a Republican Congress and the burden of this tax will fall upon the consuming public. Are you in favor of taxing the war profiteers or the public?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the influence of the private soldier and the soldiers and sailors legion in furthering bonus legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BEE. Reserving the right to object, do I understand this refers to the bonus bill?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; to the part of the private soldier and sailor in that legislation.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the press of the country published the report of the Russell Sage Foundation showing the relative rating of the school systems in the several States. This report places Montana, the State I have the honor in part to represent, at the head of the list. On a percentage basis it stands 75.8, more than 5 per cent above its nearest competitor and more than 10 per cent above the District of Columbia. This excellent showing is, of course, very gratifying to me and the people of my State, and if permitted I shall print this brief paper as part of my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, about the time this report was made there appeared before the Appropriations Committee a delegation asking that the teachers of Washington be given a bonus of $500 each to enable them to live in a State commensurate with their station and duties in life. The only bill pending before the committee was this deficiency measure, and in the judgment of the committee this was not a deficiency and could not be attached to this bill under our rules. I am therefore directing attention to the matter in the hope that some way may be found by this or some other bill to give the matter the consideration that the gravity of the subject demands.

Always in our American democracy education is the thing of supreme importance. In a democracy like ours all things wait on education—public health, material wealth, civic righteousness, political power, social purity, spiritual ideals, individual happiness, the strength and safety of the Nation. The public schools, nonpartisan, nonsectarian, nonexclusive, are of all our organzations of education the most important. The efficiency and the effectiveness of the schools depend almost wholly on the teachers, their education, their general culture, their professional knowledge, and their technical skill. Teachers in our public schools are our most important public servants. Upon them as on no others depend the public weal in which the individual welfare is bound up, the happiness of the people, and the prosperity, the strength, and the safety of the Nation. True at all times, the emphasis on this truth is greater at this time of crisis than at any other time in our history, and it is more important now than ever before that all our children shall be taught by competent teachers, that all the schools shall be maintained at the highest state of efficiency.

Yet reports from the Bureau of Education indicate that more than 18,000 schools, or about 3 per cent of the total in the United States, were in January of this year without teachers of any kind, and that more than 40,000, or about 7 per cent of the total, were supplied with teachers whose qualifications were below the minimum standards of the States in which they taught. If both the vacancies and the places filled by teachers below the minimum standards are counted, there were nearly 60,000 schools, or about 10 per cent of all the schools of the country, without teachers or taught by teachers who would not in normal times be permitted to teach. This shortage of teachers applies to elementary schools and high schools alike. It is especially difficult to find competent teachers for the sciences and technical subjects.

In reality, the shortage of competent teachers is much greater than these figures would indicate, and this greater shortage has long existed. This statement will be better understood when it is remembered that it has long been recognized that for elementary schools the minimum standard of qualifications should be graduation from a good modern high school and not less than two years of professional training in education in addition. Certainly, teachers who are charged with the task of preparing boys and girls for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, and for making a good, honest living, and adding to the common wealth by intelligent and skilled labor, should have no less preparation than this. Yet there are now and always have been a very large number of teachers in our schools with less preparation than this. In only five States is professional training, in addition to graduation from high school, required of teachers in country and village schools. In only 18 States is high-school graduation required as a minimum standard.

Studies made by the Bureau of Education just before we entered the World War indicated that in the country at large 4 per cent of the rural teachers had less than eight years of elementary school; 22 per cent had no high-school education; 55 per cent had less than four years of high-school education. Only 45 per cent were high-school graduates and only 10 per cent graduates of normal schools or colleges. In one of the richest States of the Northwest only 8.2 per cent of the rural and village teachers were graduates of normal schools and colleges; 52.6 per cent had less than high-school education. In one of the Western States 58 per cent of the teachers had high-school education; 42 per cent had no higher education; and only 8 per cent had as much as four years beyond high school. In many States conditions are still worse. Besides having had little general education and little or no professional training, the great majority of rural teachers have little of the power and skill that can come only from experience. On the average, they teach less than 48 months before quitting school for other occupations. In some States the average life of the teacher is less than half this. The average age of the country teacher is less than 25 years. In one State the average of country and village teachers was, before the war, 23 years, and the average time which they had been teaching was only 2 years.

Much more than one-half of all the teachers of the United States have had less preparation than two years beyond the high school, and more than one-half did not teach long enough to acquire the skill which comes from experience.

Remembering that the teacher makes the school and that the school can never be better than the teacher, what can we expect from conditions such as these?

There are probably many causes for this low standard of preparation of teachers and short terms of service, but the most important is the low pay. In the country at large teachers have never been paid salaries in keeping with the importance of their work. Their salaries have never been sufficient to attract and hold in the school men and women of the best native ability, positive and aggressive in character, well educated, and possessed of professional knowledge and skill. Three years ago the Commissioner of Education reported that the average salary of teachers for the United States was less than $500. In many States the average was less than $400, and in many counties the average annual salary for rural teachers did not exceed $300.

Within the last few years the cost of living has increased more than 100 per cent, and wages paid for most kinds of labor, skilled and unskilled, have increased in somewhat the same proportion. But the increase in the pay of teachers has been much less. In a few places the increase has been from 25 to 60 per cent, but in most places it has been less than 25 per cent, and in some there has been no increase at all. As a result, the pay of teachers, always low, is lower in proportion than ever before, and many thousands of the best teachers, both in the elementary and in the high schools, are quitting teaching for more remunerative work, and comparatively few young men and women are being prepared to fill their places.

The attendance in the normal schools, which prepare teachers for the elementary schools, is 20 per cent less this year than it was in 1916, and the proportion of young men and women in the colleges and universities who are preparing themselves for work as teachers in the high schools is still less. The Commissioner of Education estimates that next fall the number of vacancies in the elementary schools will be at least 80,000 more than the number of new teachers graduating from the normal schools and other schools that prepare elementary teachers, and that the number of high-school positions to be filled will be nearly 20,000 in excess of the number of young men and women graduating from colleges and universities and expecting to teach.

Statistics gathered by the National Education Association last fall from 392 cities show that 9 per cent of the teachers in the elementary schools of these cities were paid less than $600 a year; 62 per cent between $600 and $1,000; 26.7 between $1,000 and $1,400; and only 13 teachers out of a thousand in the elementary schools of these cities were paid as much as $1,500. These were the few best men and women who, beginning with the greatest native ability, most comprehensive education, and the finest culture by long, efficient, and faithful service, have won the confidence of the people and of their representatives on school boards. Street-car conductors and motormen, carpenters, and unskilled workmen in these cities are paid more than the best of the teachers, and the average wages of telegraph messenger boys were greater than the average wages of the school-teachers.

In the schools of the small towns, villages, and open country conditions are worse still. Twenty-five per cent of the teachers in these schools are paid less than $500 a year; 70 per cent between $500 and $1,000; 95 per cent of all the teachers, men and women, in the country and village schools are paid less than $1,000; and only 1.5 per cent are paid as much as an average of $100 a month for the entire year. The wages of unskilled farm laborers are considerably larger than the average of the school-teachers. The pay of rural mail carriers is twice as much, and they are not paid enough.

Even in the richer States of the Middle West, which are most proud of their school systems, the conditions are only a little better than the average indicated in this statement. A recent report of the superintendent of public instruction of the State of Illinois shows that the average salary of teachers for last year was only $848.62. In only one county, Cook County, in which the city of Chicago is located, was the average more than $1,000, and in more than a dozen counties it was less than $500.

In proportion the salaries of high-school teachers are no better than those of teachers in the elementary schools. Men and women of the best native ability, who have spent four years or more in college or university and have continued their preparation through long years of study and who have proved their worth by many years of successful teaching, work for less than $2,000 a year, and consider themselves very fortunate if they ever reach a maximum of $3,000.

Nor are conditions better in colleges, universities, and normal schools. In the last few years thousands of professors, associates, and instructors have left the institutions of higher learning to enter other occupation in which they receive as beginning wages 50 to 500 per cent more than the wages to which they had attained through long years of service in teaching.

Evidently we must spend more money for teaching if we would make our schools efficient and be sure that our children shall receive the kind of education necessary for their success in the new era. And we shall be wise in doing so. Nothing is more costly than ignorant and unskilled teachers. They waste not only the money paid but also the time and opportunity of the children, and lowers the standards of intelligence, virtue, and skill of the people of the Nation.

The schools of Washington should set the standard of ideals and efficiency for the whole country. This can be done only by making the salaries of teachers sufficient to attract and hold the best. The salaries of these teachers are paid out of the treasury of the District of Columbia and of the United States. I am sure that neither the people of the District nor of the country at large will object to paying all that may be necessary to make the schools of the Capital of the greatest, most powerful, and most wealthy country of the world the model for all the world.

This request of the teachers for a bonus of $500 is moderate and just. Let us give it to them and then raise their salaries permanently, so that they may correspond to the difficulties and responsibilities and dignity of their task.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN].

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, we often hear expressed in rather vague and indefinite terms the statement that we are the richest Nation in the world, and we are prone to state our wealth in that indefinite way without making a comparison with the wealth of other nations.

Of course, we are as yet too close to the Great War to strike any trial balance of the economic conditions of all the great warring nations, though in a way we may approach the economic strength of the various great nations by comparing their wealth or economic strength before the war with their strength as it is to-day. But there is chargeable, of course, to each nation its loss entailed by the war—the money expended, the wealth destroyed, and, greatest of all, the economic loss in man power.

I can in this address but skeletonize the assets of the various nations, and I will start by saying that the national wealth of the United States when the war began was estimated to be $250,000,000,000; the wealth of Great Britain at that time was $90,000,000,000; of Russia, $60,000,000,000; and of Italy, $30,000,000,000.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman also give us France?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I was just about to state that the national wealth of France was $65,000,000,000, or less than one-fourth the wealth of the United States. The wealth of Germany was $85,000,000,000 and of Austria-Hungary $40,000,000,000.

It is rather a coincidence that the ratio of the present debt ($189,000,000,000) of the great nations, other than the United States, to their national wealth August 1, 1914 ($370,000,000,000), averages about 50 per cent of their total wealth, this being also true of each nation individually, while the debt of the United States, when loans granted to our European associates are paid, will net only about 6 per cent of our national wealth August 1, 1914.

For four and a half years the warring nations turned aside from the arts of peace and peace production and mobilized every ounce of their economic strength and strategy for the production of war material and the effectuating of economic destruction.

The greatest surprise of that titanic struggle has been the power and efficiency of man to produce an almost inexhaustible supply of material and strength from what had been considered a resource bounded by reasonable limitations.

The wealth of the world when the war began was estimated at $750,000,000,000, while the cost of the war was more than $200,000,000,000, not including the possible loss of from fifty to one hundred billion dollars of property, such as cities, towns, farm properties, the sinking of ships, their cargoes, and sundry other things of a material nature.

Only a small percentage of the total wealth of the world—$750,000,000,000—could be utilized for war purposes, as much of this wealth consisted of lands, cities, buildings, and railroads and other transportation facilities. Hence the $200,000,000,000, or more than one-fourth of the world's total wealth of every description, with which to prosecute the war had to be raised either by taxation or issuance of bonds.

But great as were the ravages and destruction of things that existed when the war began, the output of the warring nations was immeasurably increased during the progress of the war, as the energies of men were expended at full capacity and nothing remained dormant or stagnant. Fortunately the salvage of war material and everything connected therewith was of a considerable percentage, and many factories and other agencies and energies of destruction have since been and will continue to be converted into instruments of peace production and human welfare.

Immeasurable as were the loss of property, the expenditure of money, and the mortgaging of the world's future income to liquidate the war's indebtedness, much greater was the loss entailed by the checking of the spiritual and material progress of the world and the blight—at least the temporary blight—put upon the world's civilization. But great as were all of these losses, the greatest of all was the loss of life, the killing of 10,000,000 soldiers upon the battle fields—the total loss of that blessing which their living would have vouchsafed to society, not to mention the wealth they would have wrought in the world nor the millions of posterity that would have been born into the world had these brave souls been permitted to live out their natural lives in peaceful days.

Nor is this all the loss the war entailed upon the world. The loss sustained by the lack and want of material production that would have come in times of peace from the hands and labors of those who died upon the field of battle—that economic loss likewise is a debit against the frightfulness of those dark and bloody years.

Added to this likewise must be a charge against the war of the multiplied millions of crippled soldiers who will be throughout their natural days a tax and burden upon society.

And added still to all of this catalogue of losses must be the shortening of the days, as a result, of millions too numerous to count of men, women, and children undernourished and underfed; not only during the war, but even for the next few years to come will this shortage of food prevail.

While added still to these is the demoralization of wars, the loss of interest and initiative in the souls and hearts of people who, when the tragedy is over, their homes burned down, their families destroyed, their hopes blasted, look out into the world of Stygian darkness and despair and wonder if, after all, life is worth the living.

So, Mr. Speaker, when we take this hasty retrospect and view the physical plight and the spiritual life of the balance of the world, look upon the millions of graves of those who lie buried across the sea, the destroyed homes and hopes of millions still living, behold the debt generations yet will have to pay, lands and properties reduced in values and the taxations to be borne for the next hundred years, and then turn our faces and behold the plentitude of American wealth, with no indemnities to bear and the few billions only that we in years will pay, we should again, again, and still again thank our Maker that we are American citizens—the richest, happiest, and the most prosperous Nation upon the fact of the earth. [Applause.]

Not only were 50,000,000 soldiers taken from the fields and factories of production during these long, wearisome years of fighting to destroy not only the white races of the earth but to destroy for all time to come every vestige of physical property owned by the contending forces, in order that after the war was over the physical possessions of each should be reduced to the minimum, but also whole populations of countries were taken from the fields of production into the very charnel house of war.

And just here, may I not for the moment be justified in adverting to the thought that aside from profiteering—not one dollar of which can be justified—the cost, the high cost, of living may at once be laid at the doorway of the war, to the $200,000,000,000 issued by the nations of the world to carry on the war, as well as to the fact that to-day the world is undersupplied with food, clothing, machinery, implements, and everything that man eats, wears, or that gives shelter and protection to men and their families? This flotation of cheap money, this inflation of billions of dollars, coupled with the shortage of the world in everything necessary to life and the demand for all things material to supply the wants of man—the underproduction and the great demand for consumable things—these, these, Mr. Speaker, are the inevitable outgrowth of and reasons for the high cost of living.

And in the face of this awful world indebtedness and the high cost of everything, many people are more extravagant than ever before and are demanding luxury after luxury which a few years ago they never dreamed to have. And I maintain that the only way to reach and to attain some avenue to the normality of things must be the road to increased production and wise conservation and enforced economy. And this, sir, must apply to a curtailment of expenditures made by Congress, by legislatures, by cities, and by communities in public works and improvements of every kind, as well as personal expenditures, unless absolutely indispensable to the progress and welfare of homes and the country at large.

But pardon me for diverting myself from the world's economic condition, to which I must now again give my attention.

Mr. Speaker, something over a year ago I gave considerable thought to, and made no little research into, the economic conditions of the United States and the six principal European nations engaged in the war—Great Britain, France, Italy, and Russia of the Entente group, and the Imperial German States and the dual monarchy, Austria-Hungary.

There is still, I understand, no complete appraisal or inventory of all the data incident to the Great War. I must in this connection, in addition to several books and pamphlets and articles of a general nature which I have read, ascribe much of my material and thought in this discussion to a pamphlet issued in the early part of last year by the Mechanics and Metals National Bank of New York. In a most detailed and elaborate way this record of analysis of the financial obligations entailed on the world by the Great War is set forth in the pamphlet referred to, and I believe it to be fairly accurate in many respects, though the writer of that article, in my opinion, missed rather wide the mark in making estimates of the postwar expenses of the seven great nations enumerated by me in this discussion. This authority holds that the gross indebtedness of the seven great nations engaged in the war, thus named by me a few moments ago, had an outstanding debt when the war began of $27,000,000,000, whereas that indebtedness now reaches the staggering sum of over $200,000,000,000; and, furthermore, it took 100 years, including many wars, to accumulate this $27,000,000,000 debt, whereas this late war produced nearly seven times the indebtedness that was required by 100 years of war and peace.

The gross indebtedness of the seven principal nations—not including Japan—engaged in the Great War August 1, 1914, when war broke out, and their indebtedness to-day is in round numbers as follows:

Gross debt of—	Aug. 1, 1914.	Jan. 1, 1920.
United States	$1,000,000,000	$26,000,000,000
Great Britain	3,500,000,000	42,000,000,000
France	6,500,000,000	33,000,000,000
Russia	4,600,000,000	30,000,000,000
Italy	2,800,000,000	13,000,000,000
United States and her associates	18,400,000,000	144,000,000,000
German Empire and her States	5,200,000,000	45,000,000,000
Austria-Hungary	3,200,000,000	26,000,000,000
Teutonic nations	8,900,000,000	71,000,000,000
Gross debt	27,300,000,000	215,000,000,000

Thus we see that whereas the total prewar debt of the seven nations named above totaled $27,300,000,000, the estimated indebtedness of those same nations on January 1, 1920, was $215,000,000,000. These figures, of course, are only approximately correct, and a large part are taken from the estimates made by the Mechanics and Metals Bank above referred to, which, in my opinion, are conservative and approach the total indebtedness of the above-named nations.

This total indebtedness of the European nations above named does not take into consideration the amount of indemnities assessed against Germany and Austria-Hungary by the peace conference, the amount of that indemnity to be assessed against the German Empire being, in round numbers, $25,000,000,000 and against Austria-Hungary being several billions more. Nor do these figures take into consideration the amount, or any part, of the property destroyed, the sinking of ships, and other losses of a general nature.

Let us now turn to the estimated national wealth of those same countries at the beginning of the war, August 1, 1914:

United States	$250,000,000,000
Great Britain	90,000,000,000
France	65,000,000,000
Russia	60,000,000,000
Italy	30,000,000,000
United States and her associates	495,000,000,000
Germany	85,000,000,000
Austria-Hungary	40,000,000,000
	125,000,000,000
Adding together the two groups, we have total wealth	620,000,000,000

The ratio of debt of each country in 1920 as compared to the total wealth of each nation in 1914 may at a glance be shown as follows:

	Total wealth Aug. 1, 1914.	Gross debt Jan. 1 1920.	Per cent debt to wealth.
United States	$250,000,000,000	$26,000,000,000	10
Great Britain	90,000,000,000	42,000,000,000	47
France	65,000,000,000	33,000,000,000	51
Russia	60,000,000,000	30,000,000,000	50
Italy	30,000,000,000	13,000,000,000	43
United States and her associates	495,000,000,000	144,000,000,000	.....
Germany	85,000,000,000	45,000,000,000	53
Austria-Hungary	40,000,000,000	26,000,000,000	43
	125,000,000,000	71,000,000,000	.....

Deducting the $10,000,000,000 that our European associates borrowed from the United States, which in turn was used in the purchase for them of our goods, munitions of war, farm products, and sundry things, leaves a net balance owed by us of sixteen billions, or only a fraction over 6 per cent of our total national wealth when the war began—to be exact, 6.4 per cent of that national wealth—and deducting the $2,000,000,000 loaned to our European associates by American banking institutions will reduce the ratio of our war indebtedness to national wealth still more appreciably.

But the comparison does not stop here, Mr. Speaker. If we charge the present indebtedness due by each country on account of the war against the total wealth of that country, and also charge the amount of property destroyed in European countries, the disparity in wealth between the European States and our own country is more pronounced than ever. The United States sustained but little loss in the war in the way of physical property, as compared to the havoc and wreckage of property, especially in France and in Belgium, Serbia, Roumania, and other countries not herein mentioned. And if Germany and Austria-Hungary are to pay the immense indemnities assessed against them, there would not be much in the way of net valuation left to either of them at this time.

Thus we see, Mr. Speaker, that the combined wealth of Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy, at the outbreak of the war, was estimated to be $5,000,000,000 less than the national wealth of the United States; while the combined wealth of the Teutonic group—Germany and Austria-Hungary—was only one-half as much as that of the United States. And when we consider the amount of physical damages wrought to the property of the warring nations—the sinking of ships and cargoes, the destruction of cities, towns, farms, railroads, forests, orchards, fine arts, and many other things too numerous to enumerate, not to mention the assessments in the way of indemnities levied against the Teutonic powers—the wealth and superiority of the United States stand out in bold relief as a great mountain suddenly emerging from a plain. [Applause.]

But this does not begin to tell the tale of the great superior financial and material wealth of America as compared to that of the other nations of the world.

When the war came on Europe held, it is estimated, at least $5,000,000,000 worth of American securities—that is to say, the people of Europe had invested that much money in our properties, such as stocks and bonds of railroads, banking institutions, mines, sawmills, manufacturing plants, and otherwise. These investments yielded the owners, these European stockholders, an average of 5 per cent per annum, which amounted to $250,000,000 a year. This much money, let us say, was expatriated, was sent abroad, from year to year, to the owners of these stocks and bonds. But, owing to the stress of war, these European owners of American stocks and bonds were compelled to sell back to us a large proportion of the same, and United States citizens bought back $4,000,000,000 out of the $5,000,000,- 000 of stocks and bonds held abroad. Five per cent interest on this $4,000,000,000 amounts to $200,000,000 per annum in the way of interest which the American people now do not send abroad, but keep at home, as they now own these properties. [Applause.]

But this is not all, Mr. Speaker. American tourists, or "globe-trotters," as we call them, had been going to Europe before the war and spending some $250,000,000 annually. Since the war began this money has been kept at home, amounting to more than $1,500,000,000.

But this is not all. When the war came on America's merchant marine carried but 8 per cent of our foreign trade, and we paid every year to foreign bottoms for the transportation of the products of our fields and factories the sum of $250,000,000. For 10 years before the war this amounted to the staggering sum of more than $2,500,000,000! This money will now be kept at home, sir; for, under a Democratic administration during the past few years since my service here, we have increased the tonnage of our merchant ships until to-day we have nearly 15,000,000 tons of shipping. [Applause.]

Thus we will not only keep at home the $250,000,000 per annum which we had been accustomed to pay to foreign vessels for the carrying of our commerce, but we will also participate largely in the carrying trade of the other nations of the world. Thus we see, Mr. Speaker, that the exporter of goods and farm products will not only find a market where he had no market before, but when his goods are sent abroad they will be sent in American ships, manned by American sailors, and flying the American flag, our white sails entering the ports of every land and clime, thus enabling him who sends his products abroad to receive a greater sum for the sale of the things that are borne in American ships. [Applause.]

If I may be a bit personal, Mr. Speaker, I may say that in no part of the work in which I have engaged since I have been a Member of Congress have I taken more interest than the building up of the American merchant marine. [Applause.] That work and that legislation were very attractive to me as a member of that committee. I saw the necessity of owning our own ships to carry our constantly increasing exports in quest of new markets to the four quarters of the globe.

Nor is that all of the story, Mr. Speaker. For 20 years before the war came on our export trade, on account of the smallness of our merchant marine and our policy of isolation, exceeded our imports by an average of only about $400,000,000 per annum. For the past four years our balance of trade has been ten times that amount, or, in round numbers, $4,000,000,000 per annum. And last year—the first year since peace was declared—our exports totaled the huge sum of $8,000,000,000. [Applause.]

Nor is that all of the superiority of our material greatness and riches. Likewise, under a Democratic administration, we made another long stride in adding to the strength and integrity of our immeasurable wealth.

When I came to Congress a few years ago, we had one of the shabbiest and one of the most ill-conceived financial systems of any country in the world. This great Government, with its bigness and stupendous wealth, this giant of the West, stood with its ponderous body resting upon veritable financial spider legs! There had been from time to time a little patchwork stuck here and there on our financial system, but nothing of a substantial nature had been done.

One of the first achievements, and possibly the greatest legislative achievement of any administration in the history of the United States, was the great Federal banking system, which took the place of the inadequate, obsolete national banking system which was the sudden and immature thing brought forth under stress of the Civil War to meet a temporary emergency in 1862. And this giant of the West, this American Commonwealth, grew and fattened and expanded all the while, resting upon that weak, uncertain, panic-breeding financial system. But the Democratic Party set to work to destroy, to overturn, this archaic system, and in doing so broke up and put to rout the greatest trust the world ever saw—the Money Trust, which held the prosperity of this country in its mighty, greedy grasp! Had it not been for the substitution of the present system for the outworn system of 1862, the world might have fallen backward for over a hundred years, for the greatest panic the world has ever seen would have followed the stress and strain put upon our resources incident to the great World War. But it stood it all without a shock, without a tremor; and so great was our wealth and unshaken our strength that we loaned to our European associates, in order that they might prosecute the war, ten billion dollars from the American Government. [Applause.]

And in addition to this $10,000,000,000 which our Government loaned to the European nations, American bankers loaned $2,000,000,000, making in all $12,000,000,000. On this $12,000,000,000, bearing an annual interest of 5 per cent, there will be due to America from those European Governments $600,000,000 of interest annually—nearly 50 per cent more than the world output of gold in 1918, which, as I recall, was $458,000,000. And this $600,000,000 in interest is even 50 per cent more than our annual balance of trade for 20 years before the outbreak of the great European holocaust. [Applause.]

But, again, even this does not tell the whole story. The records show that so wonderful are our resources in raw material, in machinery, in the science and genius of our mechanics and artisans, in the reduplication of our factories and the instrumentalities of our production that we can manufacture almost in one year as many goods as can all the other nations of the world combined. [Applause.]

And yet again, in addition to all this, America has nearly 40 per cent of the world's gold supply. To give some idea of the money cost of this war—not to mention the economic loss of man power—I will state that this war cost the world, and the nations will have to pay, six times as much money of every description as there is on deposit in all the banks of the United States. Or, to put it another way, this war cost the world twenty-five times more than our tremendous and unparalleled export trade for the year 1919. Or, to state it in still a different form, the cost of this war, it is said, to the world amounted to more than all the gold and silver that have been mined—of which the world gives any record—since the beginning of time.

Is it any wonder, then, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of everything is high when we reflect that during these awful years the soldiers now living and dead were taken from the ranks of production and placed upon the firing lines?

But for one moment let us behold America's physical and productive greatness. In 1912, the last year of President Taft's administration, and about the time I came to Congress, the total value of the agricultural products and live stock of the United States amounted, in round numbers, to $9,000,000,000, whereas in 1919, or last year, the agricultural products and live-stock production equaled the stupendous sum of $25,000,000,000, nearly three times as much as seven years before!

The estimated wealth of the world when the war began being $750,000,000,000 and the wealth of the United States $250,000,000,000, or one-third of the world's total wealth, let us now compare the wealth of America at the outbreak of the war—and it is now even much greater—with the total world wealth.

Europe to-day is mortgaged to pay a debt, in round numbers, of $200,000,000,000. The indemnities to be assessed against the Central Powers aggregate tens of billions of dollars, while the damages inflicted upon property destroyed during the war amount to between fifty and one hundred billion dollars. When these items are added together and subtracted from the $500,000,000,000 that the world, other than the United States, owned before the war began, we witness the United States equaling, if not excelling, in wealth all the other nations of the world combined! And yet the United States has only one-eighteenth of the world's population and one-sixteenth of the world's territory, while its wealth approaches the combined wealth of all the other nations of the world. [Applause.]

If wealth would make a people happy, if riches would make a people great, then the American people as a Nation should be the happiest and the most content of all the peoples of the earth.

But what shall we do with this inheritance? Shall we bury our talent, as a certain man whom the Savior described in one of those wonderful parables? Or shall we not put it out at interest, and thus assure that this unparalleled abundance of things material shall be used for the service of mankind, that ignorance may be dispelled, superstition blotted out, vice extirpated, and that honor, justice, virtue, integrity, equality, and fraternity may be enthroned, to the end that man may yet attain unto the heights where God destined he should reside even while on this earth?

Then, behold the position of primacy the United States occupies in the world to-day! With a net debt of only about 6 per cent of her total wealth standing out as an obligation to be paid by her on account of her participation in the war, as against almost an average of about 50 per cent of indebtedness of the total wealth assessed against and to be paid by the six great European nations named in this discussion, not to mention the heavy indemnities to be borne by the German Government and Austria-Hungary, the position of the United States is not only unique but without a parallel in all the history of the world. [Applause.] Indeed, Mr. Speaker, when we contemplate the subtraction of States lost by Austria-Hungary and the attainment of independence of those nationalities that had aspired for hundreds of years to independence, there is but little left of what was Austria-Hungary at the outbreak of the war.

But the question may be asked, Will the $10,000,000,000 now due the United States by our former European Allies, together with the $2,000,000,000 now due individuals and banking institutions by the European Governments, be paid?

My reply is that one can only judge the future by the past. Thus far no nation has ever repudiated its debt to another nation, and those that sought so to do suffered immeasurable penalties. A nation is like an individual—it must live or perish. If it lives, it must have credit and standing in the world. Nothing breeds friction between nations, as between individuals, more than the refusal to pay a just debt, because nations, after all, are made up of individuals.

The unrest throughout the world is but a reaction of the war. Most nations are sick, very sick, as is a patient just slowly arising from a long fever or a serious operation. If peace continues, they will regain slowly, but surely, their strength. The people everywhere must be patient, hold up their heads, and fight the harder, every man doing his part, lest the world take a backward step.

The world must be rebuilt and order must come out of chaos. Europe needs multiplied thousands of millions of dollars' worth of products of American fields, forests, mines, and factories; and while the high cost of living, even with the pruning down of every possible dollar of Government expenditures, will continue for some time, things will gradually assume normality. But many years will pass before we approach prewar conditions. Nor should we too rapidly approach conditions that existed before the war, for if we did the suddenness of the transition would result in the greatest financial panic the world ever saw. Many contracts were made in the purchase of homes, farms, live stock, farming implements, and dozens of other things too numerous to mention, at maximum prices—and how could these contracts be paid with farm products, with—let us say—cotton at the prewar price of 7 to 12 cents a pound, or wheat at $1 per bushel?

Prices are high, but labor, also, has never been so generously compensated; and now not too much, for labor must have its just reward, the same as capital. In fact, labor must live, and the families dependent upon labor must live, be fed and clothed and schooled and have outlook and hope in life, and if prices should drop suddenly down to prewar prices the suddenness of the shock would not only paralyze all industry, result in the wreckage of banks and the closing of mills and factories, but labor, too, would be dislocated, and the unemployment of men by the millions would come overnight.

But the agitator, Mr. Speaker, the man with nothing but hot air as his asset, who toils not, neither does he spin, is going up and down the earth telling the people that the future is gloomy, the highways dark and muddy, and that despair awaits the children of men.

The high cost of living was to be expected after such unparalleled wreckage and expenditure of over two thousand millions of dollars, which must be met gradually by the world, and for which the various nations are mortgaged to pay. How happy should every American be—yea, and very proud—that he is an American when he contemplates the richness of this mighty Republic, its peace and quiet, as compared with the ruin, wreck, and sorrow of the millions of peoples of Europe. [Applause.]

The American people, sir, since the birth of this Republic have from time to time gone, as it were, through the fiery furnace. Their souls have been tested, their faith has been challenged, but out of every ordeal has sprung a greater America—the hope of the world, the glory of all civilization. We will not hang our heads—none save the trouble breeder—but with head erect and courage undaunted we turn our faces to the east, to the rising star of hope, knowing that the dawn but awaits the passing of the night, and that this Republic, baptized at its birth in blood and dedicated to the cause of human freedom, with her multiplied billions of wealth, must serve her people with that wealth, vouchsafing to every American not only liberty but fraternity and equality before the law. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, February 7, 1920, Mr. NOLAN, of California, introduced a bill, H. R. 12397, which was referred to the Ways and Means Committee. The title of the bill was—

To provide for the raising of public revenues by a tax upon the privileges of the use and enjoyment of lands of large value.

The bill provides:

That all persons, firms, associations, and corporations owning land in value in excess of $10,000, whether in possession or leased to others, shall be subject to an excise tax upon the privilege of the use and enjoyment of such excess at the rate of 1 per cent.

The author of the bill, it is stated, is J. H. Ralston, a lawyer of Washington, D. C., and the bill was introduced by Mr. NOLAN at his request. The bill is being promoted by a "Committee of manufacturers and merchants on Federal taxation, incorporated," located at 1346 Altgeld Street, Chicago. In an "announcement" sent out in March, 1920, it was stated that—

On April 1 this committee will begin a vigorous and aggressive campaign in behalf of the Ralston-Nolan Federal revenue bill.

The purpose of the bill is stated to be—to reduce the excessive tax burden on business and other producing enterprises about $1,000,000,000 by raising the same revenue by a Federal tax of 1 per cent on the privilege of holding land and natural resources valued (irrespective of improvements) over $10,000.

It is further stated that—

More than 7,000 business houses, with an aggregate capital of $1,300,000,000, have already indorsed the bill.

It is also stated that—

Organized opposition to the proposed law is expected, but the effective distribution of from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 pamphlets and circulars, together with the activities of a well-organized speaker's bureau and publicity department, will be sufficient, it is believed, to overcome whatever opposition may arise.

It is added—

The interest of the business men of the country having once been sufficiently aroused, the energies of this committee will be directed on Congress.

This "announcement" was followed on April 5 by a circular letter, together with a pamphlet entitled "Sane Taxation." This pamphlet was an elaborate restatement of the "announcement" with reasons why $1,000,000,000 of Federal taxes should be removed from "business" and placed on land. It denounced the excess-profits tax and the income tax, and declared that—

The value that attaches to the privilege of land ownership is not an earned but an unearned value. It is not the result of individual effort, but the result of community growth and development only. As an unearned value, therefore, it is certainly a more just subject for taxation than the earned values of industry and enterprise.

On April 15 another circular was sent out, headed—

Wanted, 10,000 business firms to distribute 5,000,000 circulars; sample copy attached.

It was stated that the corporation wanted the circular to reach every business man in the United States.

Another circular, undated, addressed to the "Business men of America," was headed:

Do you favor a reduction of 25 per cent of your Federal taxes?

In this circular it was stated:

Business must have relief from the present excessive Federal tax load; the privilege of land ownership can well afford and ought to carry its fair and equal share.

It also states that to date, April 15, over 8,000 business firms had indorsed the Ralston-Nolan bill. It quoted President Wilson to the effect that in peace times high rates of income and profits taxes "discourage energy, remove the incentive to new enterprise, encourage extravagant expenditures, and produce industrial stagnation with consequent unemployment and other attendant evils." It also quoted ex-Secretary McAdoo as saying:

The immediate burden of taxation is too great. It is having an injurious effect on business. It is a contributing factor of large proportions in the high cost of living. Its inevitable tendency is to stifle new enterprise and to throttle initiative. It is both unscientific and inequitable.

In this work of securing the repeal of $1,000,000,000 taxes on "business" and substituting therefor a tax of like amount on land it was stated that a fund of from $300,000 to $500,000 would be needed, subscriptions for which were to be solicited.

The bill was so clearly unconstitutional that it received no consideration by the Ways and Means Committee and no attention from Congressmen. It was not until it became evident that at least some business men took the matter seriously and were attracted by the pleasing prospect of relief from their income and excess-profits taxes by shifting the burden on the farmers and other owners of lands and homes, and were evidently contributing large amounts to carry on the propaganda, that it received attention. When it was known that a fund of a half million dollars was to be raised and expended to secure the passage of such a bill, it became a matter of inquiry with many as to whether such a bill would receive the serious attention of Congress and would be valid if passed.

Never before since the foundation of the Government has a serious attempt been made to secure the passage of such a law. The reason is not far to seek. On its face the bill is utterly unconstitutional.

The Constitution provides, Article I, section 8, paragraph 1:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

It is also provided, Article I, section 9, paragraph 4:

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be made.

Under these provisions Congress has the general power to levy taxes, but no direct tax can be imposed except in proportion to the population. If a bill or act provides for the levy of a direct tax and it is not laid in proportion to population, it is invalid. If a tax is imposed on land and such a tax is a direct tax, it is invalid unless it is apportioned according to population.

If the United States desires to raise revenue by a tax on real property it can not tax lands within its jurisdiction on the basis of value, nor on the basis of extent; but it must apportion among the several States in accordance with their population the total amount of the revenue to be raised by taxes upon real property, and must then provide the rate at which such lands in each of the several States shall be taxed in order to raise in each State the sum apportioned to that State.

The difficulty and practical impossibility of levying such a tax in accordance with the constitutional requirements are so great that no successful effort has ever been made or probably ever will be made to raise revenue in this manner.

As the Constitution does not prohibit the States from levying direct taxes, that field is open to the States, and the power to levy taxes on the values of real estate is universally exercised by the States. It is believed that the limitation on the Federal Government is a wise provision, as it leaves to the States the power to raise a large portion of the revenue necessary for their support exclusively to them. For the Federal Government to invade this field of taxation would not only be double taxation upon the owners of the lands, but would raise questions of equity and administration difficult to determine and embarrassing in their execution.

The bill under consideration imposes a tax of 1 per cent upon the value of lands in excess of $10,000. There is no attempt to apportion the tax in proportion to population. If a tax on land is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, then the proposed tax is unconstitutional and invalid.

A tax on real estate has been held by an unbroken line of authorities, both National and State, to be a direct tax.

In Hytton v. United States (3 Dall., 171), decided in 1798, only nine years after the adoption of the Constitution, it was held that a tax on land was a direct tax, which could not be imposed by Congress unless apportioned. Mr. Justice Patterson, in his opinion, said:

I never entertained a doubt that the principal—I will not say the only—object that the framers of the Constitution contemplated as falling within the rule of apportionment were a capitation tax and a tax on land.

In Springer v. United States (102 U. S., 586) it was held that the income taxes provided by the law of 1862 were not direct taxes. After reviewing the authorities, the court declared:

Our conclusions are that direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution, are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate.

In this case it was held that a tax upon the land itself was a direct tax, but that a tax upon the income derived from the land was not a direct tax.

In the case of Pollock v. Farmer's L. and T. Co. (157 U. S., 429), decided in 1895, it was held that a tax upon the income derived from real property was in effect a tax upon the land itself and void unless apportioned.

This decision led to the submission and adoption of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, which provides:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

It will be observed that in both the Springer and Pollock cases the controversy was regarding the income from real estate, and that in both cases the rule was reaffirmed that a tax upon the land itself was a direct tax. It will also be observed that the amendment adopted does not provide that a tax on land itself shall be authorized, but that a tax upon all income, from whatever source derived, even a tax upon the income from real estate, is valid.

Throughout our entire history there have been repeated decisions of courts holding a tax on real estate a direct tax, and there has been no exception to this rule. Every commentator on the Constitution has expressly stated that a tax on real estate was a direct tax. There has been much discussion as to whether other objects were within or without the rule, but there has been no discussion or difference of opinion as to the proposition that a tax on land was a direct tax.

An attempt is apparently made to disguise the nature of the tax proposed by calling it an "excise" tax on the "privilege of the use and enjoyment" of the land. An excise tax is sometimes levied upon the right to sell liquor, tobacco, patent medicines, and the like. The Government may require a license to carry on a particular business, and stamp taxes may be required on various articles of merchandise sold. Taxes of this class are extensively resorted to in cases of emergency, and we have now a great variety of such taxes levied to meet the extraordinary expenses incurred by the Government in carrying on the late war. But a proposed tax is not made an excise tax merely by calling it such. And a tax upon the thing itself is not changed in its nature by saying that it is levied upon the "use and enjoyment" of the thing. In this bill the tax is imposed on the owner of the land because he is the owner, and he must pay the proposed tax upon the value of the land in excess of $10,000. This is not an excise tax. The bill provides for a levy of a direct tax upon the land itself, and if it passed the act would be void because not apportioned.

To any well-qualified lawyer all this is clear; and it would not require much research for one not learned in the law to discover that the proposed bill is clearly unconstitutional. Yet we are told that 8,000 "business firms" have indorsed the bill and are presumably contributing to the $500,000 fund that will be needed to distribute the 5,000,000 pamphlets, to pay the "well organized speakers' bureau and publicity department," and to finance the "Committee of Manufacturers and Merchants on Federal Taxation (Inc)," in its "energies" that "will be directed on Congress."

Doubtless these "business firms" are anxious to shift the burden of the $1,00,000,000 taxes which they are so unhappily carrying to the farmers and owners of homes who have small incomes and no excess-profits taxes to pay. But it is certainly true that the fund of half a million dollars which they are to contribute for that greatly desired object is not likely to do them any good. In fact, at the end of their great campaign they are sure to realize that their shifting device will not work, and that to the burden of their income taxes and excess-profits taxes, which they are so anxious to put on other shoulders, they will have added this $500,000, which they will pay solely for the benefit of the "committee" which has so deluded them.

An interesting fact is disclosed by a study of the terms of the bill. In the first section it is stated that the lands to be taxed do not include improvements. This would relieve our "business firms" from all taxes upon their skyscrapers, their manufactories with all their costly machinery, and their business houses with all their elaborate fixtures. All they would be required to pay taxes on would be the value of the bare land. In such cases the value of the land would be small compared with the value of the improvement. But in the case of the ranch, the farm, or the city or town home the value of the improvements would be small compared with the value of the land. This would be another reason why the shifting of the tax burden would appear so attractive.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I notice in all these letters and propaganda that are being circulated, and which I am sure every Member of Congress is receiving almost daily, that this bill is called the Ralston-Nolan bill. I am frank to say that when I first got one of these circulars I looked to see if there was a Member of Congress by the name of Ralston or a Member of the Senate, and I found neither; and I learned from the gentleman a moment ago that he is a lawyer here, and I would like to know if he knows what interest this gentleman has in it and whom he represents?

Mr. TOWNER. I am sure that I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Just wait a moment until I answer the question. I am sure I do not know, but I have indulged the suspicion that perhaps he might be somewhat interested in this committee that is making these solicitations for $500,000 of campaign funds.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Perhaps they are paid attorneys.

Mr. TOWNER. I have no knowledge of the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to state to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] that the attorney, Ralston, here in the city of Washington, besides being the attorney for Mr. Gompers, who appeared before the Rules Committee against antisedition legislation, is also the Ralston who appeared before the Rules Committee representing Mr. Post in the charges of disloyalty and affiliation with anarchy in connection with Mr. Post, and he is the same Ralston who is representing many anarchists throughout the country.

Mr. TOWNER. I can not yield further.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The interest I had in the matter was in the way he was connected with this legislation to tax the farmers of the country.

Mr. TOWNER. Unfortunately, I can not give the gentleman further information.

Evidently this brilliant proposal must have had its origin in the brain of some believer in the "single tax." The "single-tax" theory is largely the creation of the late Henry George, a strong thinker and a brilliant writer. In his work, Progress and Poverty, he argues the proposition that land is the common property of all the people, and that all private property in land is a usurpation and should be abolished. This he proposes to do "by the simple and easy method of abolishing all taxation save that upon land values." This is to be imposed on the value of land, regardless of improvements. No tax is to be levied upon buildings or other improvements, none upon personal property of any kind, none upon imports or exports, none upon franchises or business, none upon incomes or profits, none upon moneys or credits—everything and everybody is to be free except land and the owners of land. The adoption of this theory, it is promised, will abolish poverty and speedily bring universal peace, prosperity, and happiness to mankind. Unfortunately, a stupid and stubborn world has refused to see the value of the proposed plan and is still walking in darkness, refusing to see the light. [Applause.]

But the passage of this bill would certainly be a fair beginning. Once put in operation the simple plan proposed, and the rest will easily follow. If the scheme to shift the $1,000,000,000 from incomes and excess profits to land succeeds, then it will be easy to shift all taxes now levied on wealth and the products of wealth to land. Then, indeed, will the farmer "pay it all." His will be a happy lot. He will be required to produce everything the world uses, wears, and eats, and in addition pay all the taxes.

But, unfortunately for those who are enamored of this program, the great statesmen who framed the Constitution made it impossible to accomplish such a result without amending our fundamental law, and that is, as we know, a somewhat difficult accomplishment. Every year throughout our history demonstrates by instances like this the wonderful prescience and supreme wisdom of those who gave us our Constitution, "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man." [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, during the debate last evening the distinguished chairman of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, under the head of "What we got for our money," made this statement:

> As a result of our entire aviation program we obtained 213 observation planes * * * and 527 second-hand foreign planes, which were either bought or borrowed from our associates in the war.

Another distinguished member of this committee, of which I am a member, recently mailed out speeches, upon the franked envelope of which this statement appears:

> Our contribution to war-time aircraft consisted of 213 * * * DH—4 observation planes that reached the front, with others on the way.

Wide publicity has been given such statements emanating from reports and speeches of members of this committee, claiming that as a result of our aviation program only 213 American airplanes reached the front, and that such planes, with 527 foreign-acquired planes, constitute what we procured for $1,000,000,000.

I regret that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, for whom I have sincere friendship, and other gentlemen should have permitted themselves to have become the authors of such statements. These statements are inaccurate, misleading, and not founded on fact. The facts as to the number of American-owned planes are not matters of doubt and involve no matter of legitimate controversy.

During the war America acquired over 16,000 planes. She had over 6,000 planes in Europe. Instead of receiving only 527 foreign planes, 5,071 were purchased and paid for by American money and used in Europe by the American forces; 1,213 American-built planes were sent to France from America; 213 American-built planes were operating on the front lines at the hour of the armistice. On the day of the armistice 1,620 service planes were immediately available for the use of the American forces, and up to that date our forces had used over 2,300 service planes. Five hundred and twenty-seven foreign-built planes were in our service at the hour of the armistice. It is improbable that a single one of them was purchased second-handed. Practically all used planes taken from the Allies were training planes and not service planes.

Instead of giving the number of American planes in Europe, these gentlemen give the number actually on the front on the day of the armistice. Instead of giving the number of American planes used on the front, they give the number used on the day of the armistice. The 213, instead of being the number used, is 204 short, according to the testimony of Pershing, which shows that 417 American-built planes were actually used at the front. [Applause.] Instead of spending over $1,000,000,000 for airplanes and engines, in round numbers, we spent only half that amount for airplanes, engines, and spare parts. The additional sum was spent for other aircraft purposes.

I refer to these facts not for the purpose of discussing aircraft matters, but for the purpose of calling attention to the misleading information persistently furnished the country. If these misleading statements represented only isolated instances, it would be a matter of small consequence, but unfortunately these misstatements are simply examples of many similar misstatements.

This investigation committee was appointed on the 4th day of June, 1919. The papers of June 5, 1919, announcing the appointment of the committee, substantially agree with the report as carried in the Washington Post of that date, which stated:

> While the ostensible purpose of the investigation is to give pitiless publicity to war expenditures, political observers saw in the day's developments inauguration of the big * * * fight to regain control of the White House.

The reports that the legitimate purposes of an investigation were to be used to serve partisan purposes created a distrust in the minds of the patriotic, intelligent citizenship of the country, which soon found a disappointing confirmation in the declarations and conduct of those in charge. Day after day inflammatory reports were carried in the newspapers, purporting to emanate from the committee, containing reckless charges of alleged extravagances and misconduct of the war frequently given out in advance of hearing witnesses who were supposed to support the same.

Partisanship, bias, and prejudice, utterly inconsistent with the rightful functions of an impartial investigating committee, were clearly manifested. Before getting fairly under way, by the manifestations of such an attitude, the committee was hopelessly handicapped and its usefulness largely destroyed.

Everyone will agree that war expenses were proper subject for investigation. The hearings and reports of investigations of our former wars have been preserved and have been studied in all the military schools of this country and in some other countries. Such investigations, so far as they reflect the facts in the conduct of wars, have value in presenting the experience of the past for the benefit of the future. The faithful student of the investigations conducted by this committee will be able to reach one conclusion with unerring certainty. That will be that no partisan investigation of a war will hereafter be justified.

The duty of an investigating committee is of a judicial character, to find out the facts, to consider them impartially, to faithfully represent them, and draw fair and just conclusions. The high quality of judicial fairness should be required of an investigating body, particularly where the subject is the serious, monumental matter of a great war. No man who seeks a righteous verdict desires the trial of his case before a biased or prejudiced judge. To commit a serious investigation to a partisan investigating body is to try a case before a stacked jury; to sacrifice the facts to a biased judge who has determined the case in advance and seeks only means to justify his decision.

The past has given us precedents which should have been followed in conducting this investigation.

The Spanish-American War investigation was conducted by a board appointed by President McKinley, selected without reference to partisan motives or dominance, consisting "of the most distinguished soldiers and civilians that can be selected."

In the first year of our entry into the European war, charges were made concerning the conduct of aviation matters, whereupon President Wilson ordered an investigation, freed it of partisan purposes, and placed the motives thereof beyond question by appointing Charles E. Hughes to conduct it.

Each of these two great investigations were conducted with an ability and impartiality that have given credence to their reports as faithful attempts to portray the facts.

Unfortunately, the investigation of our greatest war has been made a partisan one. The investigation has been such that its reports and findings inspire no such confidence. While not without merit, the record of the hearings will show that instead of being conducted in the impartial and judicial way the seriousness of the subject required, in many instances the investigation, in fact, degenerated into an attempt to make political capital at public expense. Instead of the committee emerging from the myriad circumstances of the war with information faithfully portraying the facts, the reports have exuded with alleged information bearing the marks of the partisan advocate instead of the impartial judge.

This situation is most unfortunate. The displacements and annoyances of war and abnormal conditions it imposed have left in their trail discontent and unrest. Thousands of anarchists are abroad in the land, teaching discontent and disloyalty. Representatives of Russia are teaching the doctrine of hate, distrust, and discontent, trying to win men away from loyalty to the country they should love.

They seek to tear down the great Republic and build in its stead that which has made Russia the most unhappy and unfortunate of lands.

America is the fairest flower of civilization. The citizens of America whose duty it is to be true to her should be so true that no personal or partisan purposes will lead them to detract from our country or our countrymen or their achievement. The man who portrays the truth serves his country. Men who by misstatements and half truths detract from our country, create disloyalty and unrest for political or partisan purposes, join their efforts with those engaged in the same campaign of detraction for the purpose of destroying our country. Only he whose motives are wrong rejoices in ill news of his country. Such a campaign is unholy and unworthy of any American.

Not long ago an anarchist paper in this country, in speaking of the fertile field in America to propagate revolutionary ideas, said:

All we need to do is to keep poking the fires of discontent and in a short while capitalism will be at our feet.

In other words, keep poking and shortly the fires will burn down the structure of popular government, to be supplanted by the vain efforts of those who believe that government can flourish without respect for the sanctity of the home or the rights of property.

In this unholy cause, let the Congress of America take no part. Rather let the motto of each of us be that which is engraved on the east façade in yonder Union Depot of our Capital City:

Let all the ends thou aimest at be thy country's, thy God's, and truth's. Be noble, and the nobleness that lies in other men, sleeping but never dead, will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

[Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to a resolution introduced last week by my colleague [Mr. DALLINGER] making refererence to the shortage of bituminous and anthracite coal in New England, and asking that the Interstate Commerce Commission exercise the powers granted it under the recent railroad act and enforce embargo against the exportation of coal from this country.

This shortage is bringing about a most serious condition among the manufacturing plants of New England. They are shutting down in every direction from lack of coal. One city in my district, running a municipal gas and electric plant, only had within a short time three days' supply of coal on hand, and was obliged to borrow from neighboring cities to keep the plant in operation. Advertisements were inserted in the newspapers that it would be necessary to close down unless relief was obtained. One of the chief causes of this condition throughout the country is the enormous exports that are leaving this country and the need of an embargo is very apparent. It is also necessary, it seems to me, that some effort be made to find where this great difference comes between the cost to the independent and to the regular coal merchants. I am credibly informed——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman hear the very elucidating speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] last night on this question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I was in the Hall only a part of the evening. I did not hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will combine with the gentleman from Indiana and get the majority leader to let us get some legislation passed that will protect the people on this coal question.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is some legislation already passed, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, giving authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to bring about the very result I am asking for, namely, an embargo against exportation. I agree with the gentleman from Texas that in all probability, so far as this effort to secure advance of prices by a scheme between speculators and the independent and regular miners, there is need of legislation, and I will join with him and with the rest of the membership of this House in an effort to regulate that sort of profiteering directly affecting our manufacturing industries and affecting the high cost of living in all our communities. No more serious situation faces the American people to-day than the lack of coal.

Now, let me just illustrate the difference in prices to-day in the city of Holyoke, Mass. A year ago to-day, I am credibly informed, bituminous coal was sold to dealers there at a price, at the mine, of $2.95 a ton. To-day that same grade of coal is being sold at the mines for $10 per ton. Can anybody explain to me that difference in price unless it is caused by profiteering by somebody? Further than that, the amount of production is to-day 65 per cent of what it might be if this effort to squeeze the price through supply and demand was not being engineered by somebody more powerful and bigger than I am able to comprehend. Mine owners claim a car shortage, railroad preference, and every other assignable reason. We, however, know that the shortage exists where the coal is used and the price is soaring continuously. Whatever the cause, let us cause some one to stop "passing the buck" and deliver the coal. This House should promptly pass the Dallinger resolution. Let us find out, Mr. Chairman, where that trouble lies, and protect our industries and protect our home consumption. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as you know, during the time I have been in Congress I have not taken much stock in trying to pass the political buck from one side of the aisle to the other. There is one thing, however, to which I want to call the attention of Congress before we adjourn, a thing that I believe should have the earnest and careful attention of Congress, more consideration than has been given in the past, and that is the simplification and revision of our present revenue laws.

There are many reasons why we should give some attention to this subject. In the first place, this system was drafted during the time that we were at war and were facing a national emergency. It was placed upon the country, partially at least, as a war measure and, notwithstanding those facts and the further fact that we have been out of war for some time and have witnessed the practical operation of this law for more than two years, yet we have not amended it; we have not cured the defects that have developed by actual experience and have refused to profit by the actual operation of the law, and to-day the business interests of the United States are being seriously handicapped because they do not know, many of them, what tax they actually owe to the Government or will be compelled to pay finally. They have made their returns, it is true, for the last year and for this year, but the income-tax department is so far behind with its work that the audits have not been completed for 1918, to say nothing of auditing for 1919, and consequently the business concerns of the country, by reason of many doubtful provisions of the law as it now exists, do not know how much tax they owe. Throughout our section of the country there are many business concerns who are to-day holding thousands of dollars in their treasuries until such a time as they may know what part of it they will have to pay to the Government under the decisions of this intricate law.

The President of the United States in December, 1919, and prior to that time, called the attention of Congress to this condition, and I want to read to you his recommendation on this subject, so that you may know and the country may know that this matter has not escaped his attention and that he has not failed to call it to your attention and that the responsibility rests upon you to see that this law is made workable and is made so that it does not handicap and throttle the business interests of the Nation. He said in his message to Congress in December, 1919, as follows:

I trust that the Congress will give its immediate consideration to the problem of future taxation. Simplification of the income and profits taxes has become an immediate necessity. These taxes performed indispensable service during the war. They must, however, be simplified not only to save the taxpayer inconvenience and expense but in order that the liability may be made certain and definite.

With reference to the details of the revenue law the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will lay before you for your consideration certain amendments necessary or desirable in connection with the administration of the law—recommendations which have my approval and support. It is of the utmost importance that in dealing with this matter the present law should not be disturbed so far as regards taxes for the calendar year 1920, payable in the calendar year 1921. The Congress might well consider whether the higher rates of income and profits taxes can in peace times be effectively productive of revenue, and whether they may not, on the contrary, be destructive of business activity and productive of waste and inefficiency. There is a point at which in peace times high rates of income and profits taxes discourage energy, remove the incentive to new enterprise, encourage extravagant expenditures, and produce industrial stagnation, with consequent unemployment and other attendant evils.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, right there will my colleague yield?

Mr. PARRISH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman also knows that an official no less than the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—Roper—has made suggestions for 103 different changes of this law, simplifying it, and that not a single one of them has been enacted yet by Congress.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. There have been some very important changes made.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; 103 suggestions have been made; how many have been acted upon?

Mr. PARRISH. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I want to get through with what I have in mind on this subject, and that is that the law as it now exists, as between man and man, in many instances is not working practically. There are many puzzles in it which a business man can not work out for himself, and by reason of the complicated features of the law it has been necessary for all concerns doing a business of any consequence at all to employ an attorney at a high salary, or at a large fee, in order to tell them how to pay their taxes to the Government. I believe, gentlemen, that we ought to have a taxing system that will be so clear and plain that a man could tell what he owes the Government without paying out several thousand dollars to get an attorney to advise him.

This matter has been called to the attention of the country many times, but Congress has not done anything except pass the amendments the other day, which were only a short step in the right direction, and yet we are about to leave business thus embarrassed and handicapped and go home.

Not only that, but there comes a time in the conduct of the business enterprises of the Nation when excess profits taxes or excessive taxation will stifle and stagnate industry. All over the country there are ranches that would be cut to pieces and sold to farmers and the farmers given an opportunity to buy farms; the country would get the benefit of increased production, so much needed by the world at this time, if it were not for the high excess-profits taxes which they would have to pay.

It seems to me, gentlemen, that we ought not only to simplify the laws but also by the strictest economy in Government reduce the taxes and devise a system of taxation that will be just and that will not stifle any industry in this Nation. Certainly a scheme of taxation can be evolved which will not stifle any industry, which will not destroy any industry, and which will not cause business stagnation in any section of the country, and it is the duty of Congress to work out these plans and give them to the people now. [Applause.]

Many men do not know what their taxes amount to, and their lawyers can not tell them. They can not get an audit of their taxes, and they will be in suspense by reason of the inactivity of this Congress for another year, and their industries will in many cases be handicapped, money will not be invested, and the maximum production will not be reached, and to that extent, at least, the country will suffer and our people as a whole will be the loser. I have a little sketch from a paper which shows in a way the popular idea of the complexity of these laws:

THE SEARCH.

We saw Diogenes the other day with his lantern.
"Still looking for an honest man?" we asked.
He shook his head mournfully.
"No; I gave that up long ago. I wish I'd stuck to it. It wasn't half so hopeless as what I am doing now."
He certainly looked despondent, and our heart went out to him.
"What are you looking for now, then?" we asked.
He sighed.
"I'm looking for a Congressman who made out his income tax without anybody's help."

[Laughter and applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SANFORD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3865. An act providing for the officers in the Russian Railway Service Corps the status of officers of the United States Army when discharged.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13229) to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the women's bureau, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. KENYON, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13108) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, the great difference between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party is a difference in essentials and fundamentals.

Both parties in a way represent ideas which have prevailed and been uppermost in the minds of men before organized government took its place upon the earth.

From the earliest times the history of the human race is marked by the struggle for supremacy between two opposing and antagonistic forces. Those forces, on the one hand, whose advocates, dominated by selfishness, based upon expediency, intoxicated by the love of authority, contended for centralization of power, for special privileges for the benefit of the ruling class, and denied the people's ability to govern themselves; and, on the other hand, by those who longed for an equality of rights, who opposed privilege and class, and who believed that the people themselves were entitled to a voice in the administration of their own affairs.

The great struggle between those opposing forces has been going on for ages, and it will continue until time shall be no more. Long before "the cross cast its redeeming shadow upon Calvary's hill" there were present, as there are present now, representatives of those forces—those who stood for civic virtue, for human liberty, for equal legislation, and for the rights of mankind; and those who stood for privilege and class, for favored legislation, and who sought to further their own selfish ends at the expense of their own government.

The Democratic Party was born at a time when it seemed as though the patriot's dream of all the ages was about to be realized, the first opportunity "to demonstrate man's capacity for self-government." The shackles of English tyranny had been broken, and the longing which had existed for centuries in men's hearts for relief from a despotic form of government was at last upon a virgin soil crystallized into an infant Republic "where equality with sword uplifted" consecrated that sword to the imperishable doctrine that "freedom is the heritage of mankind."

Never perhaps in the history of any country was there such intensity of patriotic fervor. The liberties won from Great Britain had been too dearly bought for men not to determine to secure these liberties to themselves and their children forever. It was a time when men placed their country's good above their private gain, and when patriotism was measured only by service and devotion to country. At such a time and animated by such motives and impulses the Democratic Party was born.

After the Civil War, when the purpose for which the Republican Party had been organized—the abolition of slavery—was accomplished, the Republican Party found itself in control of every branch of the Federal Government, but without a platform and without a creed.

Though the Republican Party as a political organization had neither creed nor platform, yet office and appetite remained, so adopting Alexander Hamilton as their patron saint, they gathered together what was left of destroyed and repudiated Whiggery and, stationing Federal soldiers at every southern ballot box, raised the twin banners of special privilege and the bloody shirt and for many years marched to victory.

But as new generations came on, the crimson colors of the bloody shirt began to fade, and since then the pathway of the Republican Party has been beset with peril. They had wrung and extorted from the pockets of the American people countless millions of dollars to give to their favorites. They had repeatedly been driven from rampart after rampart of protection, and they had often been forced out from every entrenchment of special privilege. But like the proverbial cat with nine lives, or, rather, like the hydra-headed serpent—when one head is cut from its body two more will spring up—the Republican Party, squirming out of one position which had become hateful to the American people, would adopt a new platform and, making new promises, brazenly ask that they again be put in control of the Federal Government.

It has been 132 years since Washington became President of the United States. During those years the American people have had opportunity to vote to place in charge of the administration of the Republic leaders of 20 different political parties—the Federalist Party, the Anti-Federalist Party, the Democratic Party, the Whig Party, the Liberty Party, the Anti-Masonic Party, the Free Soil Party, the Know-Nothing Party, the Free State Party, the Constitutional Union Party, the Liberal Republican Party, the Liberal Party, the National Republican Party, the Republican Party, the Greenback Party, the Gold Democratic Party, the Populist Party, the Socialist Party, the Prohibition Party, and the Progressive Party.

During all those years the Federalist Party was in control for 12 years, the Whig Party was in control for 8 years, the Republican Party was in control for 44 years, and the Democratic Party was in control for 68 years.

Beginning with the history of free government in this country the Democratic Party, founded upon principles of truth and justice as everlasting, as eternal, as the granite hills of the Republic, has witnessed the wreck and decay of many political parties whose glittering generalities captured for a while the fancy of the American people. [Applause.] They have passed away, dead and buried in a past which can never be resurrected, a past which sooner or later will engulf the Republican Party, and it, too, like many others, will go down to oblivion unhonored, unwept, and unsung, for no party whose chief aim is appetite for political spoils can long survive. [Applause.]

But all the time from Washington down to Wilson, 132 years, the Democratic Party has either been in control of the affairs of our Government or else the dominant minority party, warning the American people against false gods and false idols. The Democratic Party has witnessed the development and growth of an infant Republic of 4,000,000 souls into the greatest country on the face of the earth with over 110,000,000 of people. Whenever this great country was afflicted with false gods and false doctrines, whenever famine and disaster fell upon the land, whenever the burdens grew heavy upon the tired shoulders of the toiling masses, then the American people, awakening to their sober judgment and good common sense, would repudiate the false doctrines and, relegating their promoters to the background of political oblivion, turn again and again to Democracy as the only safe and sure haven into which our ship of state in time of distress could be safely steered.

Whatever may be said about the Republican Party, yet they have been faithful and consistent in their allegiance to two great practices. One is to make a promise, and the other is to break it.

The Republican convention held at Chicago in 1884 denounced the importation of contract labor, but millions of laborers were imported during Republican administrations to take the place of American labor, and it was left to a Democratic administration, 30 years after the Chicago declaration, to enact a real immigration law.

The Republican platform of 1892 declared for efficient legislation in order to protect the lives and limbs of employees of transportation companies. The Republicans were in control for 16 years since 1892, but they never enacted any real safety appliance legislation. They were too much under the influence and control of the railroads then, as they are now, to do this; but a real safety appliance act was one of the first laws enacted by a Democratic administration.

The Republican platform of 1892, as well as subsequent platforms, denounced the trusts. This denunciation would be the rankest kind of ingratitude if it had been sincere, for the trusts kept them in power for many years. To hear a rock-ribbed, stand-pat Republican denounce a trust only shows in what wonderful ways language can be used to conceal thought.

From 1896, when the Republicans again secured control of the Federal Government, until 1912, when an outraged and betrayed public drove them from office, there was the greatest development and growth of the trusts ever known in the history of any country. Much of this development and growth was the result of Republican legislation. Why, the Republican platform in 1908 in one plank denounced the trusts, and in another declared that the American people should be taxed in order that these trusts might make a profit.

Under Republican administration every trust and manufacturing establishment, no matter how stupendous its operation, no matter how profitable its business, no matter how opulent its wealth and varied its resources, was by Republican law guaranteed a profit and insured against loss, and the only premium such insurance had to pay was a campaign contribution to the Grand Old Party.

Under the fostering care of Republican legislation it is little wonder that from 1898 until 1908, 10 years of Republican mismanagement, 458 industrial trusts bought, controlled, merged, and put out of business over 6,650 lesser industrial plants, covering practically every line of productive industry in the United States.

During those 10 years seven of these large trusts put out of business over 1,600 distinct and original plants, while one trust, the Steel Trust alone, during this decade of Republican administration was permitted to buy up, acquire, control, or destroy 792 plants, thus creating a monopoly which effectively destroyed all kind of competition in the United States.

Nor was this all, for the Republican administration threw its fostering care around the great financial institutions of the country. Three banking institutions in New York, with their affiliations, held 341 directorships in 112 railroad, insurance, banking, and other corporations, having aggregate resources of over $24,000,000,000, which were considerably more resources than enough to control the money market of the United States, as well as the policies of the Republican Party, for over 95 per cent of these interlocking directors were high in the counsels and the confidence of the Republican Party.

The guaranty in the Republican platforms of 1900, 1904, and 1908 for the reestablishment of our merchant marine is as ridiculous as their declaration against the trusts. The policies of the Republican Party destroyed a great merchant marine. Before the Republican Party secured control of the Federal Government the American flag was seen on every sea and in every port.

We had over two and one-half million tons of American shipping in our foreign trade, and we were carrying in American vessels over 65 per cent of our exports. After nearly 50 years of Republican mismanagement, our two and one-half million tons of shipping was reduced to less than one million tons, and American vessels were carrying less than 10 per cent of our exports, which had increased over 500 per cent.

When the Republican Party took control, American vessels were carrying over $500,000,000 of our commerce annually. Your prohibitive tariff rates, which kept out imports, only gave the American vessel one cargo for the round trip.

Republican tariff legislation drove American shipping from the seas; and up to 1912, when the Democrats went into power, American vessels were carrying only $275,000,000 of a commerce which I say had increased over 500 per cent. As the Republican tariff went up, the American merchant marine went down. Clinging over Democratic protest and Democratic opposition to the antiquated law of 1792, which forbade registry to a vessel not built wholly in the United States, American shipping perished between the two fires of high-priced construction materials and the walled-out return cargoes. The same pen that records the upward progress of the tariff rate has also written the melancholy epitaph of American shipping on the high seas.

But now, after less than eight years of Democratic control, the American merchant marine has once more been restored, and again American shippers can send their exports in American vessels. Ten years ago, under Republican administration, American vessels carried only $260,000,000 of American exports. Last year, under Democratic administration, American vessels carried nearly two and one-half billion dollars of American exports.

Ten years ago, under Republican administration, American vessels carried less than 9 per cent of a total commerce of less than $3,500,000,000, while last year, under Democratic administration, American vessels carried nearly 28 per cent of a commerce of over $10,000,000,000.

In 1910, after nearly 50 years of Republican mismanagement, the gross tonnage of American vessels engaged in the foreign trade had decreased from 2,379,000 tons to 816,000 tons. In less than eight years of Democratic administration the gross tonnage of American vessels engaged in foreign trade had increased to 6,666,000 tons, over eight times as many tons as we had under Republican administration less than 10 years ago.

Every four years the Republican Party in convention assembled would solemnly promise the American people that it would repeal the clumsy, antiquated system of currency then in operation throughout the United States; a currency system which in time of stress always failed to give relief and which in the past so often failed to prevent financial panics which paralyzed industry, destroyed commerce, and left ruin, failure, and disaster in their wake.

All the American people ever got from the Republican Party in the way of currency legislation were a few broken promises, for the financial interests of Wall Street were in control of that party and they did not wish their interests to be disturbed. The money of the United States was gathered and sent there and controlled by less than a dozen men, who in turn controlled the policies of the Republican Party as well as the financial credit of the United States.

The Democratic administration replaced the antiquated currency system with a sound economic system of currency reform, the stability and success of which has far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of its most earnest advocates, and without which we could not have been able to have financed the enormous sums necessary to win the war.

I do not see how we could have financed the war under Republican administration. To begin with, there would have been no income-tax law, and the eight or nine billions of dollars thus raised from incomes and excess-profits taxes would have had to have been raised by some other means; and as the tariff was practically the only way in which the Republicans tried to raise revenue, we would have had to resort to excise taxes. The war stopped imports, cutting down the receipts at the custom-house, and it would have been impossible to have raised such an amount by excises. Therefore as we could not pay any considerable part of the expenses as they accrued, nearly all of the money needed for the war would have had to be raised by bonds.

No administration whose only experience in governmental affairs was how to so legislate that a few would be benefited at the expense of the many could have handled a world war. The utterly inefficient manner in which the Spanish-American War was conducted proved conclusively to the world that the Republican Party was unable to handle war matters even on a small scale.

The Republican committee appointed to investigate the conduct of the administration during the Spanish-American War admitted the incompetency of the Republican administration, but also contended that the Republican administration was not expected to successfully administer a war which suddenly called for as many as 250,000 men.

So, while we did not know at the time the Democrats were elected eight years ago that we would be called to successfully carry on the greatest war in all history, yet that Divinity which "shapes our ends, rough hew them as we will," was at work, and thus by the election of 1912 the American people were really building better than they knew.

The Republican platforms would promise the farmer a rural credit system. All the Republican Party ever gave the farmer was a tax on agricultural products, which was a pretense and a sham, but which was intended to console him for the millions of dollars wrung from his pockets every year by the plundering hand of a tariff. He was promised a rural credits act. Why did they not give him one? They were in power for nearly 50 years. This pledge was but one of many other broken Republican promises.

The Democratic administration gave the farmers a real rural credits act, which has resulted in the sum of $426,946,566 being loaned to the farmers at 5½ per cent interest and for a period as long as 40 years.

It is a significant fact that, notwithstanding the opposition of the moneyed interests which controlled the Republican Party, when the Democratic rural credit bill came up in the House only 10 Republicans had the courage to vote against the bill.

For years the American people have been longing for an income tax. Beguiled by the false promises of the Republican Party, they had seen the expansion and development of great trusts and combines as a direct result of Republican legislation. They had seen these trusts destroy their competitors and strangle all competition, while at the same time they themselves were tax free.

No man paid to carry on the expenses of the Government according to his ability to pay, but according to what he ate and what he wore. The millionaire with a small family paid less Federal taxes for the support of his Government than the poor man with a large family. The American people were dissatisfied with so dishonest a system. They wanted the wealth of this country to pay its proportionate share of the burdens of Government. Relying upon Republican promises, they put the Republican Party into power year after year, but they looked to them in vain for the fulfillment of these promises.

The Republicans have never believed that the wealth of this country should ever contribute anything except Republican campaign contributions. That party has always been opposed to as fair and as honest a tax as an income tax. Remembering that only a few years ago the governor of the great State of New York had proved his title clear to Republicanism by vetoing an income-tax law, they took him off the Supreme Court bench to nominate him as their last standard bearer.

The history of our Government shows that from time to time the American people have forsaken the principles of Democracy and have strayed away after false gods. History from time to time may repeat itself, but the present hopeless inefficiency of the party of special privilege is a guaranty that there is little danger of such a mistake being made by the American people in the near future. But if such a mistake should be made; if the American people should again be deluded by the never-to-be-fulfilled promises of the Republican Party; if that party, as hurtful and as harmful to the public interest as it has always been, is again restored to power, as bad and as injurious as this may be, yet there will be in the hearts and minds of all thinking people of this Republic one great consolation, which is that, as much as they would like to, the Republican Members of the National Congress will never have the courage or the temerity to repeal even one of the great Democratic constructive measures.

You are opposed to the Democratic income tax, but there is not one of you will dare to vote for its repeal.

You deceived the people about giving them currency reform, but there is not one of you who will vote to repeal the Democratic Federal reserve act.

You deceived the farmers about giving them a farm-loan act, but there is not one of you who would vote to repeal the Democratic farm-loan act.

You promised labor a safety-appliance law. The railroads made you break that promise, but there are not enough railroad magnates in the Republican Party now to force you to vote to repeal the Democratic safety-appliance acts.

The Democratic Party in less than eight years has enacted more real substantial constructive legislation than the Republican Party has in its entire history. And most of this legislation was the redemption of many broken Republican promises.

The Republican Party has been in control of both branches of the Federal Congress for over a year, and it would be interesting indeed to find out what they have accomplished in the way of reconstruction measures. Unfortunately no microscope with magnifying power sufficient has yet been invented where one can see what has been done by the present majority party in Congress.

After listening to the defense of the Republican administration in this Congress by my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS] this morning, I was somewhat disappointed. In view of the fact that all the Democratic and independent press has unanimously stated and in further view of the fact that nearly all the great metropolitan papers of the Republican press have declared that this Congress has been the most inefficient and incompetent Congress ever held in the history of the American Republic, I was hoping that those on the other side would be forced to admit it. But the gentleman from Ohio tells us that this Republican Congress have accomplished more than any other Congress in the history of the Republic. And why? Because they introduced and passed more bills than any other Congress. What kind of bills have they passed?

Mr. MERRITT. Good ones.

Mr. COLLIER. They came here to reduce the cost of living. When a man goes to buy clothes he will find if they have any pearl buttons on them that he will have to pay an additional price to help out a little district in Iowa. Whenever that same man goes to buy a suit of clothes that has dyestuffs in it he will find that the taxes have been immeasurably raised on dyestuffs.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Did not the President recommend a revision of the tariff on dyestuffs?

Mr. COLLIER. The President recommended a safe and a sane revision; not the one that you gave here, which will increase the price of clothing to everyone in this country. And what has this Congress done to reduce the high cost of living as to food products?

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLLIER. In one second. What have they done in reference to foodstuffs? Despite the fact that the high cost of provisions is bearing down so heavily upon everybody, in order to take care of two little districts in this country only last week they raised the tariff upon beans from 25 cents a bushel to $1.20 a bushel. [Applause.] The Democratic administration, believing in something that the Republicans are opposed to, believing that education should be encouraged, knowing what the effect of German knowledge of chemistry had upon the war, permitted students of chemistry to buy chemical retorts and instruments free of duty. But what are the achievements of the Republican Party so lauded here to-day? One of the great number of bills that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] doubtless referred to is to increase to the students of chemistry the cost of chemical instruments and chemical retorts by an outrageous Republican tariff. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman talks about the high cost of living. The Democratic Party have had ever since 1913 to reduce the high cost of living. We have only been operating here, with the administration against us, for a very short time.

Mr. COLLIER. I will admit that you have done the best you could in the time you have been here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLLIER. Please be brief. They have given me only a few minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman suggested that there was a difference between the idea of the President on tariff revision and the idea expressed in the legislation passed by this Congress. Will the gentleman be good enough to tell us wherein they differ?

Mr. COLLIER. The President of the United States and all others who believe in the principles of Democracy, which are that not a dollar of tariff duties should be levied except to carry on the economically administered expenses of the Government, do not believe in any kind of tariff that will increase the cost of pearl buttons, and beans, and flour, and every agricultural implement.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COLLIER. Let me tell you another thing. High-grade steel can not be made without mixing in a certain percentage of tungsten with the iron ore, and, therefore, when every farmer buys a high-grade agricultural implement and when the ladies buy their typewriting machines and when mechanics buy their tools and cutting and planing machines all the ore than has gone into their manufacture has been mixed with a certain percentage of tungsten, which has been outrageously taxed. Yet one of the achievements highly lauded to-day is the putting of a tariff of 2,200 per cent upon tungsten in order to help out one or two concerns which happen to control it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have also levied a tax upon building. The finest brick in the country is made by mixing magnesite with it, and away over in one corner of this country, in order to help out a district in the extreme Northwest, you have raised the tariff on magnesite over 500 per cent.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated the President's idea of the tariff on dyestuffs was a tariff that would produce revenue. His suggestion was a protective tariff. What difference was there in the mind of the President that actuated the gentleman to say that the President was in favor of one kind of protection different from the protection provided for in the legislation?

Mr. COLLIER. Oh, in seven or eight minutes I can not go into that. First let me say that the dyestuffs bill which you passed through this House was not the dyestuffs bill recommended or the kind that the Democrats tried to pass.

Mr. REAVIS. What was recommended?

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield any further.

It is a peculiar as well as a fearful thing when, according to the theory of the Constitution, the legislators are but the servants of the people, that yet the people should stand in dread of their legislation. I know a load will be lifted from every breast when this inefficient Republican Congress will adjourn, so that the people will be spared the spectacle of ridiculous investigations and cheap efforts at economy in small sums while criminally extravagant in large sums.

The Republican majority have gone mad on investigations. In their partisanship and desire to besmirch the Democratic administration they have attempted to make light of America's wonderful achievements during the war. In order to divert attention from their miserable inefficiency, the Republican leaders in the House have repeatedly attempted in their partisan, unfair, and wholly unjustifiable investigations to blacken and soil some of the brightest and most glorious pages in the history of the American Republic.

If the American people have wasted their time listening to the weak and ridiculous speeches of the Republican members of the various investigating subcommittees, they have no doubt concluded that if anything wrong was done by the Democratic administration there was no danger of that Republican investigating committee ever finding it out, no matter what facts might be laid before them.

Of all the criticism directed against every man connected with this war as brought out by the investigating committee, eight out of every ten of those criticized have been and are to-day prominent Republicans and voted the Republican ticket at the last presidential election.

If the Democratic administration made a mistake, it was in trusting Republicans by placing them in those positions of trust. But in justice to these Republicans who have been so severely criticized by the Republican members of the committee, I say that for the most part the criticism directed against them is captious and unfounded, and that instead of being criticized most of them should be commended for the patriotic zeal and energy and time they gave, practically without pay, to their country during the war. Considering all the conditions and the urgent necessity for haste, they, as I say, for the most part, did well and are deserving not of censure but of praise.

Certainly the Republican Party refused to profit by the lessons of history. Ten years ago, when that party was in absolute control of every governmental department, when flushed with the intoxication of another victory, drunk with the exercise of an almost despotic power, enriched by the spoils of nearly half a century's patronage, and swollen with the conceit of repeated indorsements, they quarreled among themselves over the distribution of spoils.

They found fault with the Cannon rule, by which the House was absolutely in control of one man. There was no Calendar Wednesday then for a committee to bring a bill before this House, as there now is. The only way a bill not from an appropriating or revenue raising committee could be brought to a consideration was for the author of the bill or the chairman of the committee reporting it to go hat in hand to the Speaker and ask for recognition, which was more often denied than given.

While that system became so hateful to the American people that the Republicans themselves were forced to abandon it, yet I must confess that as bad as Cannonism was, it is really superior to the steering committee system now in practice, where four millionaires pass on and control all the legislation of this House. Now you have gone to the four millionaires' rule, which I say is worse than Cannonism. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It will vigorously be contended by the Republicans that I am wrong in calling Cannonism a better system, because the judgment of four should be greater than the judgment of one. But the trouble is that these four millionaires have neither the courage, the intellectuality, nor the judgment of the former Speaker of this House [laughter and applause], and therefore I contend that the present system has all the viciousness of Cannonism without its redeeming intellectuality. Despotism, even benevolent despotism, is a curse to any country, but there can be no greater infliction put upon any people than to torment them with a stupid, a vacillating, and an inefficient despotism.

No matter how important the legislation may be, no matter how carefully it may have been considered by the committee, no matter how urgent or necessary it is, the legislation must first be submitted to the steering committee, and the permission of that august body must first be secured before it can be considered by this House.

On the resolution to give food to the starving children of Europe the Ways and Means Committee held meetings twice a day. The chairman of the committee on three different occasions thought he could bring the resolution up in 24 hours, and in justice to the gentleman from Michigan I will say he did the best he could.

Conditions in Austria, in Armenia, and in Poland were horrible. Children by the hundreds were dropping dead in the streets, dying from famine and starvation.

Prentiss once said when a man dies of disease he alone endures the pain:

> Around his pillow are gathered sympathetic friends, who, if they can not keep back the deadly messenger, cover his face and conceal the horrors of his visage as he delivers his stern mandate.
> In battle, in the fullness of his pride and strength, little recks the soldier whether the hissing bullet sings his sudden requiem or the cords of life are severed by the sharp steel. But he who dies of hunger wrestles alone day after day with his grim and unrelenting enemy. Famine comes not up like a brave enemy, storming by a sudden onset the fortress that resists. Famine besieges. He draws his lines around the doomed garrison, he cuts off all supplies, and life never summons to surrender, for he gives no quarter.

And this was the kind of famine the Ways and Means Committee resolution was trying, with wheat, wholesome but unsalable in the United States, wheat we already owned and which had cost us nothing, for it was a profit made by the Grain Corporation—this was the kind of famine we were trying to conquer, trying to conquer it with wheat, which was the only weapon with which we could safely wage war against it.

The resolution was unanimously reported; the membership of the House were eager to vote to send this food to those starving little ones, whose piteous wailing cries could almost be heard across the waters. But the steering committee withheld their hand. In one town, in one month, out of 1,000 babies 960 starved to death. In another instance over 800 out of a thousand perished for lack of food, and still the steering committee said "no." Finally, after weeks and months, and after over 30,000 babies had starved to death, the steering committee relented and told the chairman, Mr. FORDNEY, he could bring in his resolution. In less than 48 hours the bread was on the way to those starving little children.

Nero is said to have fiddled while Rome burned, but the Republican steering committee vacillated while 30,000 babies died from famine, hunger, and starvation.

This is only one incident out of any number of instances of inefficiency, vacillation, and weakness of this wondrous four-man rule now in vogue here in the House. And yet the people back home think that Congress is a deliberative representative body and do not know that the Republican majority is by their own volition controlled by a steering committee of which four constitute a majority.

The election of a Republican Congress in 1918 was not only a calamity to the United States, but it was a political tragedy in so far as international affairs are concerned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The damage done to the United States by the weak, vacillating, inefficient Republican Congress can in time be repaired. Ours is a country of wonderful resources and unlimited opportunities, and the people of the United States have marvelous recuperative powers, else the country could never have survived nearly 50 years of Republican mismanagement. [Laughter and applause.] Fortunate was it, indeed, that this long period of Republican tenure was not continuous, and that from time to time Democratic administrations would be called to undo the pernicious and injurious effects of a legislation made grievous and unbearable by unjust discrimination and unpardonable partiality. The student of history will bear me out in the statement that the Republican Party from time to time has lived and fattened on the good results of Democratic legislation until, by their own effort, they got turned out of office. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. From 1893 to 1895?

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that notwithstanding the damage incurred by the country being inflicted with a party which since May, 1919, has done nothing but investigate and play peanut politics, yet in so far as the United States is concerned this damage, bad as it is, can be cured in time.

But the evil effects of the Republican victory of 1918 from an international standpoint is a different matter. It came at a time when American arms, American genius, and American leadership were exciting the admiration of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Chaos and confusion reigned in Europe. The Old World was in travail. New governments arose only to be overthrown and other governments took their places. Revolution and revolt were in the air. Bolshevism and anarchy were spreading over Europe like a prairie fire. Communism and sovietism were lifting their ugly heads in every capital in the Old World. Orgies of riot and bloodshed and lawlessness as a result of the war developed all over continental Europe. Those who had been oppressed for centuries drank so deeply themselves "from the new-found cup of liberty that they became drunk and frenzied with the unusual draught."

But America, secure in her consciousness that by the glory of American arms and the splendor of American achievements the war was won and democracy was secured throughout the world, America serenely, steadfastly, confidently, magnificently prepared to gain for all time, for all humanity, a victory far greater in its character and more glorious in its consequences than those gained by the valor of her sons at the red plains of Chateau-Thierry or the bloody forests of the Argonne.

Never before in the history of any country in any age was there so glorious an opportunity to put into practice the divine precepts of the Prince of Peace as that which a year ago was afforded the American Republic.

All the enemies of bolshevism and sovietism and communism looked to America as the storm-bound mariner looked upon the peaceful haven. The friends of law and order—all who despised riots and revolutions and anarchy and bloodshed—anchored their hopes to the young Republic of the West.

After over five years of continuous warfare in Europe, in which the map of the continent had been changed, in which kings were overthrown and confusion was everywhere, all thinking men knew that if law and order were to come out of this chaos and confusion that it would be necessary for the stronger powers to form some kind of an alliance to protect the weaker countries from the territorial encroachments of their rapacious neighbors and see if some plan could not be devised where the sacrifices and the horrors of another five years' war could either be avoided or else postponed for centuries.

In this great work of democratizing the world, America, as she had done throughout every stage of the Great War, was preparing to again take the lead.

But the Republican victory of 1918 changed all this. What matters American honor, American leadership, and American prestige if a Republican Congress can be elected? [Laughter and applause.]

The campaign of slander and misrepresentation, of abuse and villification, was directed against President Wilson and the peace treaty, even before he put foot upon European soil. His utterances were condemned before he opened his mouth to speak them, and his policies were slandered and misrepresented long before his position was known. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Placing political spoils above the glory of their country's achievements in the greatest war in the greatest epoch of all time, they projected and continued a campaign of misrepresentation and slander, which has had the effect of not only changing American leadership in international affairs into a pitiful state of vacillation and weakness but at the same time destroyed forever all hope of our country playing the greatest part in the greatest drama that was ever staged in the theater of the world.

When America repudiated the Versailles agreement "walls, arches, roof, and deep foundation stones" of a league to preserve peace and tranquility throughout the world all mingling fell. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The effects of this failure are indescribable. Bolshevism is now rampant over a great part of Europe. Poland is now advancing with an invading Army 150 miles from her frontier. Berlin is in the throes of a revolution. All Germany is torn by the ravages of a civil war. Austria lies prone, prostrate, starving. Trade relations between the Allies and the Central Powers are paralyzed. Anarchy, sovietism, communism, and every other political "ism" that flesh is heir to threatens the peace and security of all mankind.

Conditions in the United States are unsettled. Labor is dissatisfied. Capital is uneasy. The war measures necessary once but worse than useless now are still in force. The high cost of living seems to be going still higher. The I. W. W. raising its vulture head is striking at the roots of organized society. All trade relations between the Allies and Central Powers are practically paralyzed. The unsettled state of financial conditions may at any moment result in disaster and "confusion worse confounded."

The peace and security and happiness of all Christendom are threatened by enemies from without and by enemies from within. What a price, what an awful price, to pay for the election of perhaps the weakest and most inefficient Congress in the history of the American Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken the floor of the House for the purpose of replying particularly to the address of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], but rather have I arisen for the purpose of voicing my resentment generally to the unjust criticism to which Congress is being subjected. This criticism is neither unique nor unusual, but is part of a somewhat general sentiment which the people and the press entertain with reference to legislative bodies. Throughout the Nation, in the quiet cloisters of editorial rooms, men but little familiar with the activities of life or the real needs of the Nation pass adverse judgments, not only upon the Congress as a body but upon the individual membership thereof. In many, if not in most, instances the criticism is based upon misinformation, and at this particular time is inspired in large measure by the growing feeling that all ills from which the people suffer are legislative in character and will respond to legislative treatment.

Occasionally, though fortunately not often, some Member of this body, for partisan purposes, will reiterate and repeat these criticisms, and such statements made on the floor are usually accepted by the people at large as the views of Congress concerning itself. I want to express my very high regard for the membership of this body on both sides of the aisle. I want to bear testimony not only to the accomplishments of the House of Representatives but to the sincerity of purpose that actuates the conduct of most of the Members. It is unfortunate, of course, that Congress is usually advertised by its weakest Members. Occasionally some Member will deliver an address which discloses a lack of knowledge of the subject matter and possibly give indications of being inspired by personal political interests, which the newspapers will immediately seize as indicative of Congress. The reverse is quite true. I have never been associated with any body of men of greater intellectual capacity nor who were actuated by more sincere motives than is the average Member of the House of Representatives, without regard to the side of the aisle that he sits on.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], however, has seen fit to eulogize his own party by attacking the accomplishments of the House of Representatives. He has even gone so far as to suggest that the loss of prestige which America has suffered abroad is due solely to the inefficiency of the present Congress. I do not know by what process of reasoning he reaches this conclusion, but I must beg leave to differ with him. I regret that his statement with reference to the loss of prestige is true, and it seems to me that its consequences are not only serious but well-nigh tragic. America has fallen from a very high estate since the fall of 1918. Probably never in the history of the world was a Nation so esteemed by all civilization as was America on armistice day in November, 1918. She had given to the race an example of unselfishness that was and is unparalleled, and the value of her contribution toward saving the civilization of this earth was recognized as incalculable.

I recall standing one Sunday evening in the month of July, 1918, on one of the bridges of Paris. I not only heard the steady pounding of the German guns as I stood there, but I saw their flash on the horizon, so close were they to Paris. From March until July of that year the German Army had marched toward Paris almost without resistance. Gen. Haig, in a despairing plea to his soldiers, announced to the world that his back was against the wall. The German hosts were boasting of what they were to do with the beautiful French city, and their boasts seemed likely to be fulfilled. A million people had left Paris within six weeks. The munition works adjacent to the city had been dismantled. The fine art treasures had been removed to places of safety, and the population was ready to abandon their capital to the enemy. Far over in the southeastern part of France the American Army was training, and at this crisis some 300,000 of our soldiers were brought over to participate with the fast-breaking allies. These boys of ours struck the Germans first at the village of Vaux, next at Belleau Wood, and at Chateau-Thierry on the 18th of July. For the first time since March the German Army was stopped. After severe fighting it started a retreat that did not end until the armistice was signed on the 11th of November following. [Applause.]

It is impossible to describe the jubilation of the French people when the German Army was stopped on July 18. The nation had been depressed and heartbroken with impending disaster, but the whole situation changed within a week. They went from midnight until noon without an hour between, and the smile that had been driven from the face of France returned again because of the success that the American soldiers had achieved over their enemy. I do not believe it extravagant to say that the allied powers were literally at the feet of the American soldier in adoration. I stood on the roof of the Hotel Crillon, in Paris, and watched the parade made up of the soldiers of all of the allied forces. At Place de la Concord, across from the hotel, were massed 10,000 people, who uncovered as one man when a company of our marines went by carrying the flag of the United States. This deference was paid to no other flag save their own.

The years and the ages would have been too short for France and civilized Europe to have forgotten the contribution that the United States had made if we had brought our boys home when this war was over and had stated that the purpose which we sought had been accomplished and that we were through. Oh, that we had kept the promise that we made the year before, when it was said, "We shall leave France with our hands as empty as they were when we went there, except we shall bear the ashes of our dead." No nation was ever so exalted in the world's esteem as was America when the hostilities were brought to an end. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] states that we have sacrificed all of this because of the action of a Republican Congress, but I would call to his attention another equation that entered into the problem—the vaulting, overwhelming ambition of one man was yet to enter as a circumstance, the ambition of one who arrogated to himself the right to speak for a hundred and ten million people not in matters which intimately and directly concerned them but in matters in which they had a remote concern. He set himself up as the arbiter of the nations of the earth, telling Italy what she could have; telling France what she could have; parceling out the territory of our ally Russia; and granting to Japan the holy ground of another ally, China. Because of this intermeddling with the affairs of Europe, the loss of prestige has come. Not only was it sought by the President to dictate the policies of the Old World but he offered as a price for such dictation the sovereignty of his own people, which offer, fortunately, his own people have repudiated.

I have not the time, Mr. Chairman, to elaborate on the accomplishments of this Congress, but I give it to you as my sincere belief that it will go into history as one of the most serviceable legislative bodies that have ever convened during the life of the Nation. I am not much of a statesman; I am not much of a Congressman, I sometimes fear, and I make no pretensions to prophecy, but I can look down the aisle of the years to come and see the children of the long future emerging from the shadows to receive from those who have carried "the torch till they fell" a Nation whose sovereignty is not divided, which is completely and utterly its own master, which is privileged to work out its own salvation and to contribute on occasion to the welfare of all humanity—not under the order of a supergovernment but on its own motion and by its own volition. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the children of that future, for whom has been preserved the sovereignty and the independence of this country, will hold in their hearts the names of LODGE, and KNOX, and BORAH, and REED, and SHIELDS, and NORRIS, and those other Senators who have offered their political careers on the altar of their conviction in the same high regard that we hold Jefferson, and Hamilton, and Webster, and Sumner, and Lincoln. Holding this belief, Mr. Chairman, I have felt at liberty to resent the criticisms of the gentleman from Mississippi against a Congress which I believe will go into history as one of the great legislative assemblies of the country. Holding this belief and contrasting our present position in the world with the one we occupied a year and a half ago, it seems to me that many years will elapse before we can fully assess the injury Woodrow Wilson has been to his people and his time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LUCE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I thoroughly agree with the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] about the bad habit of certain people in abusing Congress. But I submit to him, and to all other candid gentlemen, if it is not just as improper for Congress to abuse the President of the United States as it is for divers people to abuse Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I have no desire or intention to abuse the President of the United States. I was simply replying to a charge made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] that the loss of prestige was due to the action of Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman's remarks were very unkind to the President. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Some of these days I am going to deliver a lecture, or it may be write a small book, collating the abuse, first and last, that has been heaped on the more distinguished Presidents of the United States. [Applause.] It began in the beginning of our glorious national life, and when George Washington, the greatest man that ever lived [applause] stepped down and out of the presidential office a large number of people thanked God that the old tyrant was out at last.

Jefferson was most savagely abused. New England preachers bombarded him from the pulpit as the anti-Christ, which was going some. Andrew Jackson, the heroic soldier, was held up as a monster of iniquity. He was called every bad thing his enemies could think of except a coward. There was not a liar in America fool enough to say that about the conqueror of Gen. Sir Edward Packenham.

What the Republicans said—I am not talking about what the Democrats said—what the Republicans said about Abraham Lincoln was something dreadful, something awful. Senator Ben Wade and Henry Winter Davis became associated on a paper that was a disgrace to the American Republic. The whole of it was taken up in horrible abuse of Abraham Lincoln.

You can say what you please about it, and I hold no brief for him, Woodrow Wilson will take his place in history along with Washington and Jefferson and Jackson and Lincoln. Those are my four favorites.

I am going to talk a little about things that have happened. St. Peter, the great and heroic apostle, in his first epistle charged the disciples to stand "ready always to give answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning the hope that is in you."

Of course, that was religious advice from the great apostle, but it is just as good political advice as it is religious advice. In this great campaign that is impending Democrats stand squarely and proudly on the record they made when we had the President and both branches of Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a record of patriotism, wisdom, and unimpeachable glory. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A man that can not defend it successfully is a stark idiot. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In six years a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress put more good progressive remedial legislation on the statute books than did the Republican Party in 25 years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

One of the greatest assemblies of men that ever met in this world was the Republican national convention of 1880. Every big Republican in the land was there and a good many big Democrats looking on. The most spectacular feature of that great conclave was Roscoe Conkling's superb oration nominating Gen. Grant for a third term.

In that speech he said that "Gen. Grant's fame rests not alone on things written and things said, but upon the arduous greatness of things done." That is a magnificent sentence. It sticks to the memory like a bur. That sentence of the great New Yorker fits the Democratic record like a glove. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We stand on what we did [applause on the Democratic side]; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against us. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If I was going to pick out just one thing that has done the American people more good, and that was done by Democrats, than any other, the first one I would pick would be the Federal Reserve System. Some time ago some Democrat was making a speech, I have forgotten who he was, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the high mucky-muck of this congressional campaign committee [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], interrupted long enough to say that we stole that bill from the Republicans. I do not know whether he put that in the RECORD or not.

Mr. ALMON. He said it to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, somebody told me—I was detained this morning on some business matters—that he practically reasserted that thing. I thought he ought to quit it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If some ordinary plug said a thing like that, I would not kick about it, I would not care what he said, but here is a man who was president of a college, and ought to know something if he does not [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], chairman of the Republican congressional campaign committee, who makes an assertion that is not warranted by the facts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He can not steal that bill from us. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A great many of you Republicans voted for it. What did you do it for? Because you were afraid to vote against it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Of course, there are facts in that bill that were in the Aldrich bill, but it was only part of it. Well, now, if that bill is a good bill—and no man in this House will get upon the floor and deny that it is—not one—if it is a good bill, what are you kicking about? If it is not a good bill, why did you vote for it? If it is a good bill, why did not you pass it yourselves when you had 16 years of power? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FESS. Because the Democrats prevented it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, a minority can not prevent the passage of a bill here.

Mr. FESS. Sometimes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I never saw it done yet. You had the President, and you had both Houses of Congress, and in one Congress you had 144 majority in this House, and you could not pass a currency bill or a banking bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You did not have the power of initiative, and you have not got it now. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I would not fear to rest the Democratic claim entirely on that one bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It alone should renew our lease of power. For 20 years the Republicans have been tinkering at the currency question, always promising reform, but never accomplished anything, never. Everybody who has half sense knows the country had outgrown the national banking bill. It is like trying to fit a garment of a 10-year-old boy on the Kentucky giant; you could not do it. The old Republican scheme was a breeder of panics [applause on the Democratic side], an invitation to panics. I do not have to enumerate them, but all of us can remember most of them. There was no elasticity to the currency. Does any man in this House believe we could have gone through this colossal war with that old bill on the statute books without a panic? [Cries of "No!" on the Democratic side.] If he does, he has faith that would move mountains. The Republicans had a system of shreds and patches, always getting into trouble with it——

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. FESS. What is there in the Federal reserve act as it now stands that was not in the Aldrich bill except first the Aldrich bill provided for a central bank while the present bill has a regional bank and the Aldrich bill did not have the present organization of the board?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No.

Mr. FESS. What is the difference between the two except those?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, those differences are enough to make our bill immortal and condemn yours forever. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit, I would suggest that the pork-barrel system which distributes favors throughout the States is not an advisable thing to do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, is the gentleman against the Federal reserve bank bill?

Mr. FESS. I voted for it——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did you do it?

Mr. FESS. Because the Democrats accepted the gold standard amendment that I wrote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gold standard had been fixed for years.

Mr. FESS. I was against it until that amendment was accepted.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, no doubt the gentleman remembers the debate on the Federal reserve act, and one objection of one of the Republican critics, who finally voted for the bill in spite of his objection, was that under the Aldrich scheme the country banks could still keep their reserves in reserve cities; and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Prouty, made a constitutional argument that our bill was unconstitutional, in that it took control of certain assets of member banks; and yet that is the very bedrock of the Federal Reserve System and the difference between that and the Aldrich bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Arkansas. Here is the situation: For 30 or 40 years the Republicans had been bellowing at the top of their voices that we have no initiative. They admitted that in the spacious days of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson we had, but they declared that we had lost it, and if we got in we could not do anything. You know you all said that, and by blinding the people with that kind of chaff you stayed in power for 25 or 30 years; but in 1912 the scales fell from their eyes and they put the Democrats back in power, and they accomplished more than you have accomplished since the death of Lincoln. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Charley Landis used to tell a story that fits you gentlemen exactly. He said down in the mountains of Pennsylvania they built a spur out in the mountains, and an old chap who had never seen a car or an engine or a railroad track took his wife and went down to the depot and saw the train come in. He looked it over and he said, "Sallie, they will never start her." It went around the hill at the rate of about 40 miles on hour. He looked at it, and said, "Sallie, they will never stop her." [Laughter.] And that is what you people said about us. You said that we could not do anything and then that we did too much.

Another bill that I would be willing to go before the people on by itself as entitling us to another lease of power is the income-tax provision in the Underwood tariff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And, by the way, a great many of you Republicans voted for it. Why did you vote for it? Because you were afraid not to vote for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The best system of taxation that ever was devised by the wit of man, as well as the fairest and justest, is the graduated income tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have been for it ever since I can recollect. I was one of the men that helped to put it in the tariff law of 1894, and it was knocked out by a 5 to 1 decision of the Supreme Court that still stinks in the nostrils of mankind. It immediately became a part of the Democratic creed. We worked at it for years and years, and finally had to get a constitutional amendment adopted in order to get it. And we have got it. That is a Democratic measure. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It will never be repealed. It may be modified and amended and improved by reason of experience, but there is no more chance of repealing the principle of the income tax than there is of repealing the rule of three—not a bit.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman say that the amendment relating to the income tax was not ratified by more Republican States than Democratic States?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know.

Mr. FESS. It was ratified by the Republican States, and it became a law because there were more of those States than there were Democratic States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It may be. I am getting to be suspicious as to historical facts as stated by the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.] His memory sometimes plays tricks with him. I do not see that that matters one way or the other. Anyway, we got it, and, what is a good deal more, we are going to keep it. If we had not done anything else, it should entitle us to a long lease of power.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman confine his eulogy of the Underwood law to the income tax?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not confine it to that. It is the best tariff law ever put on the statue books even without the income tax, but the income tax improved it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And the best proof that it is the best tariff law is that the Republicans are in power and have not attempted to repeal it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes. Any party that will go to the country with a proposition of repealing the income tax law would not carry five States in the Union. It taxes what people have and not what they consume.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If it is an easy question; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri that another Democratic accomplishment was getting us into the war. We would like authority on that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think a remark like that is an insult to the American people and everybody in the House as well. It was not a Democratic war; it was not a Republican war; it was an American war. The Republicans acted very well during the war. [Applause.] I will say that for them, and that is a matter of justice. A man who has held the position that I have in this House can not afford to do anything but tell the truth. But the very moment the war was over you commenced acting badly and you have been at it ever since. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not think that the Democratic record is absolutely perfect. The record of no party that ever existed was perfect. But I will tell you what I do know. Anybody can take an ordinary telescope and go out and find spots on the sun. They are there. They have always been there and they always will be there, but nevertheless the sun continues to light and heat and fructify the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You can pick flaws as much as you want to in the Democratic record, but when you take it altogether it is a great body of progressive action in the Congress of the United States and in the Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Missouri. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I will consume that much time.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] wanted to know about the war. I will tell you about the war. We all went into it, Democrats and Republicans, as Americans, and not as Democrats or Republicans. It happened that we had the administration, and it also happened that we performed the greatest stunt ever performed by the soldiers of any country at any time or at any place. We did not begin the war; we finished it. [Applause.] I said that a year or two ago here in the House one day, and several gentlemen jumped me, not in the House, but in the newspapers, where it was safer to do it. But when Gen. Pershing sent his report of his conduct during the war he said that we gained that war. Now, if there is any man in the United States that knows anything about war, it is Pershing. [Applause.] And you Republicans—I have no license to advise you—if you want a good candidate, set aside all these boodlers and nominate Gen. Pershing. [Laughter.] The war was conducted to a successful conclusion under a great Democratic President. You can not deny that. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And you can get your spy-glasses out and examine the record, and you will find it is a fine record. What is it that makes you want to pick flaws with him all the time for, anyway? We have not heard Republicans praising him for things he has done that are unquestionably good. For instance, he insists that the Turk shall be sent across the Bosporus and put back into Asia, where he belongs. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am in favor of it. He never had any business in Europe, to begin with. The quicker you get him out the better the peace of the world will be. But I have not heard a single Republican stand up on the floor of this House in all the talk there has been about the President, and praise him for even that meritorious suggestion. I will tell you my theory about the President. The minute a man is inaugurated President of the United States he becomes President of us all. I hope to Heaven that you Republicans will not elect a President, but if you should happen to do so through any inscrutable arrangements of Providence, the minute he is sworn in on the 4th of March he will become my President.

I will name two or three things the Democrats have done. They have established a Trade Commission; they have established all these energies of government, and the Government never has been in better working order than it is now.

Election of United States Senators by the people—a great progressive measure—for years promised by both parties, was finally achieved by the Democratic Congress and Democratic President.

We admitted Arizona and New Mexico—a performance long promised by Republicans and at last accomplished by Democrats—a great boon to those nascent Commonwealths.

We passed bills for the prevention of corrupt use of money in elections. We established the Trade Commission. We established the War Risk Insurance Bureau—a splendid benefaction. We passed the ship-purchase bill, which has given us a fine merchant fleet, the first we have had since 1863 and 1864. Once more, thank Heaven, American ships will plow every sea and the American flag will float in every harbor of the world. We passed the Clayton antitrust law; a better and more liberal Philippine bill; and the Underwood tariff bill—the best tariff law ever put upon the statute books; a conservation bill; a land-bank bill, which is a great blessing to the farmers of America; this land farm loan bill alone should give us a new lease of power.

We have passed good labor laws, pension laws, and other good and meritorious measures, which I have not time to mention in 20 minutes.

Now, in most of these great measures the Republicans voted with us. I want to impress that on your minds and stir up your recollections. If they were not good bills when we passed them, why did you vote for them? There is only one answer to that question, and that is that they were good bills.

Now, it is a curious tale that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] was telling, and it is exactly correct that for about one-half of the time since this Government was organized the Democrats have been running it, and for about half of the time the opponents of the Democrats, under various names, have been running it, and we lack four years of being quite up with the others; and we want the four years. [Laughter.] And judging from the way things have been running in the last three months, we shall get those four years. [Applause.] Three or four months ago the prospects of the Democrats were not very cheerful; but everything that has happened in Washington or anywhere else, or in Michigan or Missouri [laughter], improves the prospects of the Democrats. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You might as well cheer up. One Republican presidential candidate sent $38,000 down to Missouri in order to get some delegates. The papers say this morning that the very fellows who got the money are afraid to vote for him in the convention. [Laughter.]

Remember, it is the Republicans that are probing the Republicans over there. I did not start it, and no other Democrat did; but I am in a frame of mind when I can say, "Go it, husband! Go it, bear!" until you dig them all out and put them all out of business. [Laughter.]

I have said we accomplished more in 6 years than you people did in 25. How did we do it? The Democratic House did its duty. The Democratic Senate did its duty. The Democratic President did his duty. It was marvelous teamwork; marvelous teamwork; and the only thing that I wonder about is that we accomplished so much in such a short time. We have the highest authority for measuring human conduct. "Judge a tree by its fruits." It is a good rule, and we are willing to be judged by it. And on these great accomplishments of the Democrats we plant ourselves, believing that the people of the country have intelligence enough to give us another lease of power. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back a minute and a half.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. It is only now in order for some one on the minority side to second the nomination. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. The people of the United States will do that.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the speech delivered a few moments ago by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. It was a very elegant speech, and had it been occasionally punctuated with facts it would be worthy of a careful reading by the entire country. But when a few moments later I heard the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] make the declaration that the Underwood tariff bill was the best piece of legislation of that character that was ever placed upon the statute books—and it received universal approbation from the Democratic membership in Congress—I was constrained to believe that that side of the House can see fact where fact does not exist. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time for the purpose of discussing briefly some legislation that has recently been enacted and considered by this Congress.

Within the past two months or ten weeks there has been one of the most systematic and carefully organized propaganda against any plan that has for its object the giving of a bonus to the ex-service men of the late war. The question of a bonus to these men, or an adjusted compensation, is not new in character, for it has been discussed throughout the country from every angle since shortly after the armistice was signed, nearly two years ago. Until within the last two months there was no well-defined opinion against this course on the part of the Government. So sure was Congress, until quite recently, that these boys would be given this recognition for the sacrifices they were called upon to make that the Ways and Means Committee of the House, by unanimous voice of the House, was not only asked but ordered to report a bonus bill carrying with it a plan for raising the money to meet the necessary expense.

This committee was a unit for the idea involved and commenced this task with a unity of purpose to speedily report a bill, that it might at once be enacted into law. Soon thereafter many plans, some feasible and some not, for raising the funds were presented and discussed. Among them a tax retroactive in nature on huge and unconscionably high war profits was suggested, and from that moment the committee was met with opposition from all sides. This opposition grew in strength as time went on, until it amounted to the most aggravated and sinister propaganda that has ever been waged against any bill in recent years. At the very moment that it was thought that a part of war profits was in danger of confiscation in order to meet this laudable purpose, a propaganda against the bill had its birth. Since this time every plan proposed to raise money to meet this expenditure has been assaulted.

These men who made unlimited millions off of the blood of the Nation suddenly grew surprisingly and suspiciously patriotic. As soon as their own profits appeared as a tempting field from which to get a part of the funds, they at once discovered that to give these men a bonus must be forever killed. They said then and they say now it would be a commercialization of patriotism and would be an insult to every boy who fought for his flag, while many of them remained at home reveling in ill-gotten gains from the very Government these boys fought to preserve. Many of these same profiteers who cry aloud against the bonus still are filching in the most high-handed way from either the Government or the public at large. Some of these men who cry "Do not commercialize patriotism" ought now to be in jail because of swindles practiced against the Government when it was bleeding from a thousand wounds and more. Many of these men have not yet given up their wild efforts, but are still robbing the people in defiance of stringent laws enacted by Congress to limit high prices. If the Attorney General of the United States would do his duty, many of these same men would be serving time in Federal prisons throughout the land, instead of being permitted to continue boosting prices out of the reach of three-fourths of the population of the country. [Applause.]

I do not intend to say and do not have in mind that all men who oppose a bonus are men who have made profits out of war, because many of the best men and women of the country do not believe in any plan of adjusted compensation for these boys, but I do say that without exception those who have made most out of war are the most bitter opponents against this legislation.

It is estimated that it will require something near $1,250,000,000 to meet this expenditure, and they ask how can you raise this enormous sum of money?

They say the thought that is in the mind of every man and woman of the country is that the cost of living is now out of reach of practically all and this bonus would make prices still higher. Do not let them mislead you on this score. The cost of living is high, and this condition distresses the population of this country and is the one thing that lies nearest the heart of all. The price unjustly demanded in practically every instance is 100 per cent and more higher than the facts and conditions would justify.

As I have already suggested, there is a remedy for this evil, and that remedy is in the possession of the Attorney General of the United States. Congress has given the executive branch of this Government every authority to control prices of most necessities, and yet with all these laws so thick and drastic the cost of living daily increases. [Applause.]

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. Does the gentleman know that six courts have declared that the Lever Act is unconstitutional?

Mr. KEARNS. I know that some parts of the Lever Act have been declared unconstitutional.

Mr. WELTY. Every part except that part with reference to labor.

Mr. KEARNS. I will say to the gentleman that within a week the Attorney General of the United States has seen fit, regardless of the decisions to which the gentleman refers, to bring indictments against a certain woolen manufacturing company of this country, and therefore the Attorney General seems to think that in some instances the law is constitutional.

Decided action on the part of the Department of Justice would save to the American people in one single month sufficient money to pay this bonus. Congress has given to this department authority for such action. Congress can only make laws, not execute. That function belongs solely to the executive branch of Government, and if the present Attorney General of the United States is afraid of big industrial firms that are doing an illegitimate business, let the President remove him and put a man in that office who will perform his duty, and the present great unrest will only live in memory.

I repeat that if the laws against unfair profits were enforced, in one month's time the people of this country would save enough money to pay the most liberal bonus that has ever been proposed to these men who gave up their business interests and offered their lives if need be to their country. [Applause.]

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. KEARNS. No; I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KEARNS. In this connection permit me to call your attention to a few, just a few, items that are prime necessities in every household in all America. The American people buy, wear out, and discard, on the average, two pairs of shoes per person per year. Some seem to require more, but counting men, women, and children the average is said to be about two pairs per person. This makes the total pairs of shoes purchased last year about 220,000,000. Is it too much to say, with shoes selling from $7 per pair to $20, that the average graft in the shoe business during the past year was $2 per pair? These figures are ridicuously low, yet this makes the steal from the public in one year $420,000,000—nearly enough money, you will see, deliberately filched from the pockets of the people in this one item alone to pay one-third of the whole amount to be given these men as an adjusted compensation. [Applause.]

When these men were suddenly called from their homes, forced to give up their business interests, enter the service of the United States at $1 per day, men in the same class who remained at home went into the industries and commanded in almost every instance as much money per hour as these men got per day, and often two and three times as much per hour. While the one at home was in a place of safety and comfort, the other was made to endure the hardships of war and the dangers incident thereto. The profits of those in the big industries suddenly jumped from thousands into millions, and there can be no sufficient reason why those who made the sacrifice should not receive this small amount as a further recognition of their services. Because of this wild extravagance in the governmental and private affairs during their absence, the prices of the things that they must have when they returned had gone so far out of their reach that what scant saving they could make out of this $1 a day was wholly inadequate to start them in life again.

Allow me to call your attention to another item of necessity that is used in every home in America. It is estimated that there are 4,000,000 tons of sugar consumed by the American public in one year. A few months ago sugar was retailing in practically every city, town, and village in the United States at 11 cents per pound. The Attorney General, acting under the authority given him by Congress to control the price, allowed the southern sugar refiner to arbitrarily raise his wholesale price from 8 cents per pound to 18 cents, under the promise that he would not prosecute. Bear in mind, this sugar was already manufactured and in the storehouses of the South ready for consumption, and it was the same sugar that had been wholesaling for 8 cents a pound; there was to be no additional work done in connection with it, therefore the cost of labor was not an item, and yet it was allowed to jump from 8 cents per pound to 18 cents to the refiner without any limit as to what the ultimate consumer should pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman give me five minutes more time?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. KEARNS. By reason of this transaction between the Attorney General and the southern refiner, sugar has gone from 11 cents per pound to the consumer to prices ranging all the way from 20 to 35 cents. I think it would be fair to say that the average price, therefore, would be at least 25 cents per pound throughout the country. There are about 4,000,000 tons of sugar consumed in the United States per year, and from these figures it will readily be seen that the average increase to each household in the country is 14 cents per pound; therefore the American people are paying for this one single household necessity per year the enormous sum of $1,120,000,000 by way of tribute to these grafters, a sum almost sufficient to meet the entire demands that would be made on the Federal Treasury should this bill become a law, and this gigantic steal was made with the knowledge and even the consent of the present executive administration. [Applause.]

The grafter of millions from the people of this country has become the petted offspring of this administration while the consumer suffers.

There are used in the United States per year 500,000,000 tons of coal. The average cost to mine, carry from the mine to the freight car on the sidetracks and load thereon is a little less than $1.50 per ton. That includes the wages of the miner, his blasting material, and the overhead expense of running the office and paying the salaries of all the help. In short, this is the cost to the mine operator to have the coal mined and loaded in the freight cars ready for shipment. When it reaches the consumer who lives anywhere within a radius of 100 or 200 miles of the mine, it is sold at the enormous price of from $8.50 to $9 per ton, and here recently it is being retailed in many places for 48 cents per bushel. These prices can not be defended on any honest theory. These prices represent graft and greed and theft of the most glaring and unprovoked character, and yet the executive branch of Government has had all these years since the beginning of war control of fuels.

The price of coal can not be attributed to the high price of labor, because, as I have already said, the entire cost of mining, transferring, and loading into the freight cars ready for shipment is less than $1.50 per ton. The difference between that and the sale price to the consumer represents legitimate profit plus the boldest kind of highway robbery—a robbery that is in defiance of both law and decency. If we grant that only $2 of this price represents unfair profit, if you want to state it in such mild terms, then we have admitted that the mine operators of this country have grafted from the American public $1,000,000,000 within the past year, and at the rate they are going, if unhindered, it will increase to two billions in the coming year, and the great toiling masses will continue to suffer from the curse of high prices. [Applause.]

The Attorney General found ample law to put in jail the coal miners who struck for higher wages last November, but he did not use the same law to put in prison the real evil doer who is illegally extracting from the peoples' pockets a billion annually. [Applause.] And I will repeat right here, by way of parenthesis, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY], who has tried to interrupt me, that the Attorney General thought he had the authority to act under this law, because he finds law enough to put the miners who struck in jail, while he allowed the mine operators who have filched the public to go unhindered without enforcing the same power.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. No; I can not yield.

Mr. WELTY. He did not use the same law to put them in prison.

Mr. KEARNS. I can not yield.

Mr. WELTY. Just for one question.

Mr. KEARNS. I can not yield. Of course, the cost of living is high, and it will be still higher if the profiteer is allowed to pursue his mad career unmolested by the Government. If our jails were filled with these men who openly defy the law there would be no necessity for increase of wages, because prices would move back to their legitimate sphere. [Applause.]

I have shown in these three great necessities of life—shoes, sugar, and coal—that there could be saved to the consuming public of America in one year, $2,540,000,000, and still leaving great profits to those who handle these necessities. The greed of many great and powerful corporations has been allowed to go so long unrestrained that every household feels its effect and many have been reduced to an actual state of want and privation. These men and women are demanding an immediate relief, and they can get it if only the laws are enforced.

I do not know how many billions of dollars are being annually taken illegally and without color of law from the consuming public. I know it is many, however. I do know in the three items to which I have just called attention that at the very lowest estimate the amount of graft reaches the enormous sum of $2,540,000,000. [Applause.]

I respect the opinions of those who oppose a bonus who have been led to this conclusion because the cost of living has soared until it is out of their reach, but I shall not pay heed to the voice of the profiteer and grafter who desire to continue to make millions by use of illegal business methods.

If the Attorney General of the United States would only act, the situation could be remedied; but if he will not act, the President of the United States should remove him from office and put in a man who will act. And that is the reason why the people are not going to follow the advice of Mr. CLARK of Missouri when he says they are going to turn out the Republican Congress and put in a Democratic Congress, because the people of the United States are neither fools nor knaves. They know where the trouble lies, and they are going to cure the evil. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks usnanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. On what subject?

Mr. LONERGAN. Not on the bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the same restriction?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes. I do not want to talk about the bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request under the same restriction.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks generally, but not on the bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, not on the bonus. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago I was very much interested in the appeal of the gentleman from Texas for a revision of our revenue laws. He cited some instances of irregularity, possibly items that ought to be leveled down, so that some definite rule could be given to business men by which they could make their own returns intelligently and accurately. I recall some observations that I made soon after the enactment of the Underwood tariff, and the first provision for an income-tax law enacted by a Democratic Congress. In the Treasury Department it was currently reported that the Underwood tariff was intended to cut $100,000,000 out of the tariff revenues. It accomplished that purpose without any serious difficulty. It was also indicated that the shortage was to be replaced by a like return from an income tax. What did the accounting show? When the first returns came in and a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury threw out his dragnet over the country to catch the millionaires and round them up with funds sufficient to supply the Treasury forevermore and thus prevent a deficit, what did he discover?

Under the income tax the returns were $67,000,000. How much had we been gathering in prior to that time from the corporation tax carried in the law of 1909? We had been collecting $30,000,000 annually. Thus there was a net return from the income tax under the Democratic law for that first year, only $37,000,000. You never saw greater gloom on the countenances of Democratic chiefs in the Treasury than they had at that time.

They started out in a second effort to find some more millionaires. They failed to accomplish the purpose of their search. Congress was called upon for some more legislation and enacted war taxes in times of peace. Still they were short about $30,000,000 of the $100,000,000 that had been cut out of the tariff.

A third effort was made, and still the $100,000,000 did not come. The volume of imports up to the present time, if the Republican tariff that was on the books in 1913 had remained on the books, would have given us about $1,200,000,000 more in customs revenues than we have received, and without any increase in the cost of living. Thus we would have been $1,200,000,000 ahead of what we are to-day.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. A Republican Congress has been in session since last May a year ago. Why did not the gentleman's party put that law on the statute book instead of the Underwood tariff?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If the Republicans should write a tariff bill and send it to the White House, the gentleman can guess the result as well as I can—a veto.

Mr. GARNER. Why did you not try?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Why disturb the business of the country by making the attempt when it could have no good result?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield? Would your tariff bill disturb Congress?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I decline to yield further. I have stated the fact, and you know it to be a fact if you can read the tariff.

Now, in regard to that income-tax provision, the amendment to the Constitution authorizing and empowering Congress to write the income-tax laws that have been written was introduced by a Republican Senator, the Hon. Norris Brown, of Nebraska, passed by a Republican Congress, ratified by Republican States under Republican leadership.

RESULTS OF DEMOCRATIC POLICIES.

A brief glance at the history of our present public debt will illustrate the superiority of Republican principles over Democratic policies.

Without recounting the financial cost of the Civil War (approximately $7,000,000,000), we observe that our interest-bearing debt in 1865 was $2,380,000,000, incurring an annual interest charge of $143,000,000, at the maximum. In 1856 and 1861 the total expenditures, including everything except the Postal Service, amounted to $69,000,000 and $66,000,000, respectively, and the democracy was borrowing a portion of the money to pay current bills. The rate of interest had advanced to 12 per cent with discounts approximating 11 per cent (10.97). But how could the Republican Party, standing there in the midst of the ruins of war, meet the demands of the hour with an annual interest charge which alone was more than double the total expenditures in 1861 and prior years?

Note the results. When the legislative and executive departments of the Government were transferred to the democracy in 1892, the interest-bearing debt of the Government had been reduced to $585,000,000 and the annual interest charge correspondingly reduced to $23,000,000 without borrowing a dollar to pay current bills, and on that date the available cash balance amounted to $126,000,000 and the gold reserve to $114,000,000.

Immediately after the accession of the democracy to power in 1893 it resorted to its old habits of borrowing money to pay current bills. Loans were ostensibly secured to maintain the resumption of specie payments under the law of 1875. They had a deficit at the end of their first full fiscal year of $69,000,000, $42,000,000 the next, $25,000,000 the next, and $18,000,000 the next, making a total deficit of $154,000,000 in four years. They sold bonds, face value $262,315,000, upon which they realized a premium of $31,000,000. The total interest charge for the life of those bonds was $244,000,000. Deducting the premium from the total interest charge we had a net interest liability of $213,000,000. The amount of the principal and net interest was $475,000,000. That was the tuition paid by the country to ascertain the impracticability of Democratic policies.

In 1898 the Republican Party issued $198,000,000 in bonds to secure funds with which to feed, clothe, and equip the American Army in the Spanish-American War. Note the fact that the Republican Party fought a foreign war with a smaller loan than the Democratic Party was compelled to make to fight the evil results of its own policies for four years in time of peace.

Immediately after its return to power in 1913, in both legislative and executive branches of the Government, it proceeded to increase public expenditures. In order to avoid selling bonds as it did from 1893 to 1897 it resorted to the enactment of war taxes in time of peace to liquidate the increased demands upon the National Treasury. From that time forward to the date of our entrance into the World War the obligations of the Government were greatly enlarged. At the close of the World War the Republican Party is called upon again to take charge of the financial affairs of the Nation, liquidate the debt of the Democratic Party as it did at the close of the Civil War and at the close of the period of the dark ages, 1893–1897, in the financial and industrial affairs of the country.

During the first and second sessions of the present Congress we have reduced the Democratic demands for public expenditures by more than $2,000,000,000. We have pared down their Army bill to save another billion dollars annually. When the people shall have given to the Republican Party full charge of the executive as well as the legislative branch of the Government we will open a record and recover at every possible point the tremendous waste of public funds during the period of the war amounting to billions of dollars. With courage and confidence we face the future and appeal to the country for adequate political power to accomplish these results.

But that is not the principal purpose for which I arose. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to allow the committee to rise and the House to receive a message from the Senate?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13587) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to me for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to inquire if there is any rule of the House which requires the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to take a gentleman off his feet every time a message comes over from the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not, but the Chair asked the gentleman if he would yield. The gentleman was about to begin a new subject, and the Chair asked him if he was willing to yield, and he said he was.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is all right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GOOD. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. WASON].

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself in opposition to the adoption of a special rule by the House May 29 last, making in order H. R. 14089, the so-called soldiers' beneficial legislation, including a provision for a cash bonus. This bill is of such tremendous importance, and it has such a far-reaching effect upon hundreds of thousands, yes, millions, who are citizens scattered in all parts of the United States, that I was unalterably opposed to the adoption of this rule and the jamming through, without amendment, this legislation after a debate of only 40 minutes.

It is pertinent that I call to the attention of every Member of this House the care which has been exercised in the passing of all legislation affecting ex-service men and the opportunity which has been given to every Member of Congress to offer amendments to these bills affecting the welfare, care, and treatment of the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines.

It has been the effort of Members of Congress to coordinate, so far as it is possible, all legislative matters affecting service and ex-service men and women.

An evidence of this can be found in the Sweet bill, which became a law on December 24, 1919. In the preparation of the so-called Sweet bill, H. R. 8778, extensive hearings were given, which included a careful review of all House bills affecting the service or ex-service men. It also included hearings affecting service or ex-service men who have been wounded and maimed by reason of their military or naval service; and, too, it included a hearing of the various departments and bureaus of the Government having recommendations to make regarding the proposed legislation.

One has only to refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD published at the time the so-called Sweet bill was before the House to observe how active a part members of this House took in the final construction of the bill. And so it is that every possible consideration should have been given to the so-called Fordney bill, H. R. 14089—bonus bill. The Members of this House should not be denied the privilege of expressing themselves fully on the various items contained therein and should be given the opportunity of offering such constructive suggestions as they may choose to submit in the form of amendments in the final construction of this very important legislation.

I observe that the purpose of this bill is "to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, to provide revenue therefor, and for other purposes."

If it is the purpose of this Congress of the United States to pass further soldiers' beneficial legislation, it is the very definite obligation of each Member of the House to make certain that in fact the legislation is beneficial in every respect, and to make sure that if such legislation were enacted into law it would, in fact, be beneficial to all those service and ex-service men and women, as well as the dependent relatives who may be affected by it. Take, for instance, that section of the act known as "Title II—Adjusted service pay," starting with section 201, on page 7, and continuing over to the first two lines of page 13, section 206. It is the purpose of this part of the bill to provide a certain cash bonus—the camouflage name for which is "adjusted service pay"—to all those who have been in active military or naval service during the recent World War. The principle upon which this bonus is based is that these ex-service men and women are in immediate need of financial aid; therefore in order that they may be given immediate assistance in the readjustment of their affairs as civilians, this bonus program should not extend over a period covering several years or it would cease to accomplish the result for which it is at least theoretically intended.

If this be the reason, and if this reason is sufficient to justify the payment of a bonus, then why, may I ask, does the bill provide that this money, which is so urgently needed, shall be paid in 10 equal quarterly installments, beginning July 1, 1921?

It is self-evident, in my opinion, that this particular feature of the bill is quite inconsistent, for either there is an immediate need for financial aid or there is not. If there be a need for financial assistance, then it should not be extended over a period of 10 quarterly installments beginning with July 1, 1921, which is more than a year hence, and extending over 10 quarterly installments would make the final payment become due more than 3½ years hence.

This feature of the bill alone is of such grave importance that every Member of this House interested in the welfare of all service and ex-service men and women should make it his solemn duty to protest against the adoption of this rule and to jam through this very vital legislation without the privilege of amendment.

Already this House has passed several bills affecting the welfare of ex-service men and women, especially those who have been disabled by injury or disease as the result of their patriotic service. There is at present an important bill before the Senate which has been passed by this House within the past 10 days. In these several bills an effort has been made to provide liberally for the disabled men and women in the way of adequate compensation, hospitalization, care, and treatment. It is to these disabled men that we owe the greatest obligation. In all of the cases that have come to my attention where ex-service men and women are in need of financial aid, the men, if you please, are married men, or men having dependent father, or mother, or brother, or sister. Has it occurred to the Members of this House that if there be a need for financial aid, those most in need of such aid are those ex-service men who during the period of their service allotted a portion of their pay for the support of those dependent relatives, and to whom the Government paid a family allowance? I am informed that approximately 2,000,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines allotted a part of their pay during their active service in order to help support those relatives who were dependent upon them. Upon investigation I find approximately $300,000,000 was deducted from the pay of these soldiers, sailors, and marines for the support of those dependent relatives, and that in addition to this amount the Government gave over $300,000,000 as a family allowance.

I use this as an example to emphasize the importance of our giving careful consideration to this bill. I submit that if there are any, and I take it there are, who are in need of financial aid, is it not fairly reasonable to assume that it be the men who have relatives dependent upon them for support that are in need of the same, and not the man who is responsible only for his own maintenance and support?

How much more useful it would be for the Government to consider returning to each soldier, sailor, and marine the amount of money that he allotted during his service for the support of his dependent relatives? By such a program approximately 2,000,000 ex-service men and women would be affected, and there would be distributed throughout the United States the sum of $300,000,000, which would be apportioned to each State according to the number of men in each State who during their service made allotments to their dependent relatives, and which allotments were supported by Government family allowance, giving evidence of the dependency of these relatives. I have given much thought and study to this problem and have compiled certain reliable statistics, which I will make a part of this record.

The men and women who have been disabled by reason of their active service would, I feel confident, be entirely in sympathy and accord with such a program, even though many of them have already expressed themselves in favor of those sections of the bill coming under Title II to which I have referred in the earlier part of my remarks. Gentlemen, these matters are of such grave importance that they should be given consideration without any influence of party lines. At least, I insist that there can not be, and should not be, any objection to a thorough discussion of this bill on the floor of this House, with the usual privilege of amendment, and therefore I opposed the adoption of this rule and the jamming through of the bill without amendment after a debate of 40 minutes.

The following important provisions are included in the bill which I introduced and has passed the House and is pending in the Senate and should be enacted into law immediately. It will materially extend the Government service to the disabled soldiers and to all ex-service men and women as well as to their dependent relatives. Certain other provisions of the bill will improve materially the Bureau of War Risk Insurance equipment in the administering of all the features under the original war-risk insurance act and its subsequent amendments.

This bill affects both the administration of the original war-risk insurance act and its subsequent amendments, liberalizes existing provisions and adds such provisions as are believed to be in the vital interest of former service men and women as well as their dependent relatives.

As affecting the administration the provisions included are—

First. To authorize the establishment of a reasonable number of regional and suboffices for the purpose of expediting the handling of adjustments of allotment and allowance cases, compensation claims, physical examinations, medical treatment and hospital care, as well as insurance claims, in the various States where the ex-service men and women and their dependent relatives are now located.

The present method, compelling all cases to be handled by correspondence with Washington, is entirely unsatisfactory, and has caused the ex-service men and women, as well as their dependent relatives, to suffer much hardship, and they have registered bitter complaint against what they regard as the Government's neglect in giving proper consideration to their needs.

Second. To authorize the collection of war-risk insurance premiums through the United States Post Office Service in order that premiums for insurance, applications for reinstatement for lapsed or for converted insurance may be handled locally, and that a receipt for payments so made may be had immediately upon the payment of each premium. In the making of such collections, the Post Office Department would use postal money orders, postal notes, war-risk insurance coupons, or any other method of collection which the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General may deem most expedient and satisfactory. It is only right in the conduct of Government affairs that the present services of the various departments of the Government should be utilized to the maximum.

As to liberalizing existing provisions of the war-risk insurance act and adding new provisions, the following items are included in the bill:

Third. That the family allowance shall be paid to those dependent relatives who have established their right to such Government family allowance under article 2 of the war-risk insurance act, as amended, even though deductions from the pay of the enlisted man for compulsory allotment have not been made but the family allowance having been applied for during the service of the enlisted man, and notwithstanding the fact that such enlisted man has died in or has been discharged from the service, providing, of course, that the compulsory allotment has not been waived or that exemption therefrom has not been heretofore or shall not be hereafter granted.

There were a great many cases where men neglected to comply with section 2 of the war-risk insurance act, as amended, which made it compulsory to allot a part of their pay to a wife, children, or to a divorced wife to whom the courts have decreed alimony and who has not remarried. In many of these instances applications were made by these dependent relatives for the Government allowance, and upon receipt of the application an effort was made to reach the enlisted man through his commanding officer for the purpose of having the necessary allotment made from his pay or to give him an opportunity to make application for an exemption from such allotment. It was not always possible to reach the soldier, either before he was killed or died or before he was discharged from the service, by reason of the repeated transfer of men from one unit to another and from one part of the country to another. The original act provides, in section 5, "that family allowances for members of class A shall be paid only if and while a compulsory allotment is made to a member or members of such class." Great hardships have been suffered because of the man's neglect to comply with this feature of the war-risk insurance act and the Government's failure to secure such deduction from the soldier's pay, and it is for the purpose of remedying this condition that this feature has been included.

Fourth. To authorize payment to beneficiaries or other person or persons in whose name an action has been commenced or prosecuted, fees and mileage, at the same rate as is now paid and allowed to witnesses in the United States courts, in going to, remaining at, and returning from the place of trial, and without any regard to whether the action, if any, is brought or prosecuted in a court of the United States or some other court. Also, that in all cases of assignment or causes of action under this section, whether the assignment be heretofore or hereafter made, where it shall appear to be to the best interest of the beneficiary so to do, the director of the bureau, acting for and in the name of the United States, may assign the cause of action back to the beneficiary or to his personal representatives.

This proposal is made in order that the interests of service men may be fully protected.

Fifth. To authorize the waiving of payments of premiums on renewable term insurance. Those who are receiving hospital care, those who are receiving vocational training, and those who are temporarily totally disabled by reason of an injury or a disease entitling them to compensation. Experience has shown that men or women coming under these three classifications find it absolutely impossible to continue their premium payments for their war risk renewable term insurance, and, therefore, many of them have, much to their detriment, been obliged to let their insurance lapse and thereafter being without this added protection which it was the original intention of Congress, they should have. Since these persons coming within these three classifications are without any means of additional support, I believe it would be only common justice that the Government relieve them from the payment of premiums during such period, at the same time regarding their policies in full force.

Sixth. To authorize, without charge therefor, the furnishing of hospital, dental, medical, and surgical care and treatment and prosthetic appliances for all honorably discharged commissioned officers and enlisted men, disabled by reason of any wound or injury received or disease contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty: Provided, That application for such care and treatment and appliances shall be made within one year from the date of the man's discharge or from the date the act may go into effect, whichever is the later.

At the present time, the Government provides hospital, dental, medical, and surgical care and treatment and prosthetic appliances to only those whose disability is rated at 10 per cent or more, and all those whose rating is less than 10 per cent are obliged to pay for such treatment as they may need or have such prosthetic appliances as they may require, or to go without if they are financially unable to afford such treatment, unless they choose to become charity patients and seek aid on that basis. I believe that it was the original intention of Congress that all men and women who became disabled by any wound received or disease contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty should receive, without charge therefor, hospital, dental, medical, and surgical care and treatment, including prosthetic appliances, irrespective of the rating of their disability.

Seventh. To authorize the payment of total and permanent disability claims under the United States Government life insurance (converted insurance) contract (out of the military and naval appropriation) and to further authorize that where the insured has been relieved of the payment of premiums such premiums shall be paid by the United States into the United States Government life insurance fund out of said military and naval appropriation. Since the total and permanent disability feature under the war-risk term as well as the United States Government life insurance (converted insurance) policies has been included without any additional premium charge, therefore it is regarded as essential that these claims for total and permanent disability, many of which will be traceable directly to military service, shall be paid by appropriation and not charged against the premiums that are collected under the United States Government life insurance (converted insurance) policies.

Eighth. To authorize the payment of monthly installments of allotment and family allowance, compensation, or insurance which has accrued to one who is deceased to the executor or administrator of such deceased person, but if no demand in writing is made by the executor or administrator within 120 days after the death of such deceased person then, in cases where the amount is $400 or less, the same shall be paid in the following order of precedence:

First, to the widow; second, if there be no widow, then to the children and their issue per stirpes; third, if there be no widow, child, or children, or issue of children, then to the father and mother in equal parts; fourth, if either the father or mother be dead, then to the one surviving; fifth, if there be no widow, child, issue of children, father, or mother at the date of settlement, then to the brothers and sisters and the children of the deceased brothers and sisters per stirpes.

This provision, however, shall not be construed as to prevent payment from the amount due the decedent's estate of his funeral expenses, expenses of his last illness, board, rent, or other household expenses for which the decedent was liable, provided a claim therefor is presented by the person or persons who actually paid the same before settlement is made by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Ninth. To authorize the director of the bureau, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary in order to promote good conduct on the part of persons who are receiving care or treatment in hospitals as patients of said bureau during their stay in such hospitals. Penalties for the breach of such rules and regulations may extend to a forfeiture by the offender of such portion of the compensation payable to him, not exceeding three-fourths of the monthly installment per month for three months, for a breach committed while receiving treatment in such hospital, as may be prescribed by such rules and regulations.

While it is hoped that there will not be much occasion for the application of the provision, yet experience indicates it is very essential that such authority be in force.

FURTHER PROPOSALS WORTHY OF SERIOUS CONSIDERATION.

1. A matter which should have attention without further delay is the lump-sum payment of term insurance during peace times, just as was provided in the Sweet amendments to the war-risk insurance act for converted insurance. It has not been thought practicable or desirable that the war-time policies should be payable in lump sums. On other occasions the great peril to the finances of the Government which would result from such payment has been pointed out. It would be an unthinkable draft upon the Treasury. But this objection does not apply to the optional payment in lump sums of term-insurance policies maturing hereafter. Since the peace-time risks are adequately covered by the premiums paid, these premiums will be entirely sufficient to meet any insurance payments, either in lump sum or otherwise, on account of the peace-time term insurance. Therefore not only is there no valid objection to the change, but there is a very grave consideration of justice and of effective administration of the Government insurance plan which calls for the extension of the privilege of lump-sum payment to this form of insurance. A very great number of the ex-service men and women are financially unable to pay the larger premiums necessary to support a converted insurance policy. This is particularly true at the present time and for the immediate future on account of their recent return to civilian life with its necessary period of personal readjustment. They can, however, more easily afford the smaller premiums necessary to insure under the term-insurance plan. The restriction placed upon this insurance which requires its payment in monthly installments over a period of 20 years is proving in practice a very active deterrent to the carrying of this form of insurance. The denial of the privilege of lump-sum payment of peace-time term-insurance policies works a discrimination against a great number of our former soldiers and sailors who are not as well situated financially as those able to hold converted insurance policies. This is discrimination against them and their dependents. It is not necessary to dwell upon the unfairness of this situation. Every effort should be exerted to urge the extension of the privilege of lump-sum payment to this class.

2. During the war the soldier was urged to make an allotment of part of his monthly pay in the sum of $15 to either his wife and children or other dependent relatives, if he had no wife and children, and the Government paid an equal sum of $15 to the wife and $10 to dependent relatives as an allowance. The amount of allotment paid by the men was approximately $290,000,000, and the amount of allowance paid by the Government was approximately $290,000,000. When we consider the fact that these men with dependent relatives not only offered themselves in the service of the Government but were willing to deny themselves financially in order that those whom they left behind might be provided for and thus, in a way, stabilize the economic conditions of the country, does it not seem that the Government of the United States should return to these men this sum of approximately $290,000,000 that they had allotted to their dependent relatives, which experience has shown to be by no means adequate for the support of those dependent relatives, and thus enable them to reestablish their own financial condition which, due to their self-denial during the war, has created for them a period of financial stress? It must be borne in mind that the allotments referred to were made by the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and not by the officers; therefore the return of this allotment money would reach the men who received the least in financial value during the recent emergency.

In order to approximate the amount of money to be returned to the service and ex-service men and women of each State an estimate is given herewith, which has been based on the apportionment of the total sum allotted, $290,000,000, according to the percentage of the total personnel of the Military and Naval Establishments furnished by each State:

State.	Number enlisted men Nov. 11, 1918.	Men making allotments through Bureau of War Risk Insurance to Dec. 31, 1919.	Per cent of men making allotment to total.	Allotment by States, December, 1917, to December, 1919, inclusive.

3. Since much of the complaint made by ex-service men and women against the Government has been due to their total ignorance of the services that have already been made available by law, which was caused by the Government's inability to secure sufficient printed material—all of which must be printed by the Government Printing Office—to distribute to all of the discharged service men and women, of whom there are nearly 5,000,000, it is believed that much of the difficulty would be overcome if a reasonable appropriation were allowed for advertising, in order that even the community might be made intelligent as regards the services made available to all ex-service men and women by the Government.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

THE PARTISAN PLOT AGAINST THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, under plans formulated by the Republican majority in both House and Senate, this session of the Sixty-sixth Congress is about to adjourn. In four more days its records will be closed, its leaves folded, and its membership will depart hence to attempt an accounting with those who sent them here. This will be a difficult task for some from the standpoint merely of individual performance; but it will be infinitely more difficult for those who in the aggregate compose the Republican majority in both Houses of this Congress who have been responsible for the monumental vacuum which represents the sum total of its microscopic accomplishments. [Applause.]

If I may borrow an expression made famous by a very distinguished man now living, this Congress may be described as a "single-track" Congress. It has had but one consuming desire. It has been fired by but one enthusiasm. It has responded to but one call. It has enlisted in but one great crusade. All its burdensome efforts and its painful anxiety to serve the Nation have merged into pitiful and fruitless wailings against the unmatched record of a great Democratic administration and the historic deeds wrought by him who has been the Nation's leader during the past eight years.

The Republican leadership in Congress has seemed to be obsessed with the belief that it could destroy the Democratic Party and undo its great record of service to the Nation by destroying the influence and standing of the President of the United States at home and throughout the world. And it has attempted to discredit the President, to undo his great work, to belittle his efforts to serve humanity, and to bedaub his escutcheon with the infamy of imputed wrong by methods more contemptible than any ever attempted by any similar organization of political buccaneers and freebooters in the history of the Republic. [Applause.]

The fact that these unworthy efforts were foredoomed to failure from the beginning did not deter those who planned them. But it is difficult to understand how men presumably sane could believe that they could destroy the Democratic Party, the only party whose existence has been coextensive with that of the Nation itself, by destroying one man, however great; or how they could expect to destroy or even temporarily injure a Democratic President by sniping assaults upon his record, his character, and even his integrity.

We have heard many times upon this floor—and the statement will, no doubt, be repeated throughout the country—that in the Great War in which we recently engaged, and out of which we had hoped and expected to emerge upon friendly terms with all nations, the Republican membership of Congress and those who led them upheld the President and sustained his efforts to lead the Nation in paths of victory and honor. I acknowledge with pride the great services rendered to the administration, to the country, and to the world by many eminent Republicans throughout the Nation, and by a still larger number in every walk of life whose names were never heralded. I acknowledge with deeper gratitude and admiration the fine Americanism of millions of the young men of the Nation, of all shades of political belief, who forgot the political complexion of the Government under which they enlisted and whose spirit and devotion to the cause of our country were not measured by the lines of political partisanship. To all these, both high and low, I offer a tribute of gratitude and comradeship. [Applause.]

But what of the conduct of some of those who pretended to represent these in the legislative halls of the Nation? When it was insultingly proposed that our Nation should haul its flag from the high seas, where it had floated in unmolested dignity for more than a century, and that we should surrender the highway of nations to the ruthless twilight assassins and the world's most brutal enemy, 111 Republicans in this House voted to haul it down.

When in the Sixty-fourth Congress we were seeking to pass a shipping bill that would give our Nation a merchant marine with which to send our commerce to the waiting nations and prepare us for the coming of our entrance into the Great War, 160 Republicans in this House voted against it.

When in that same Congress it became necessary for the Nation to raise revenue to sustain itself and to replace the loss of revenue due to the driving of commerce from our shores, 192 Republicans in this House voted against it.

When an attempt was made to prevent ships, which had armed themselves for protection against submarines, from carrying munitions of war to the struggling nations of Europe, which subsequently became our associates in the war, 76 Republicans in this House voted for the proposal.

When legislation was being passed to punish alien plotters against the peace of this Nation, who blew up our factories, crippled and murdered our people, 146 Republicans in this House voted against this punishment.

When the act was being passed to punish those who sought to interfere with our prosecution of the war with Germany, 88 Republicans in this House voted against it.

When, in the Sixty-fifth Congress, after war had been declared, it became necessary to pass a revenue bill to raise the funds necessary to carry on the war, to raise and equip our matchless Army and the great Navy which was to carry them safely to the other side and bring them back, 76 Republicans in this House voted against it.

When in the consideration of the revenue bill in the Sixty-fifth Congress it became necessary to tax great war profits accruing by reason of the existence of the war, 186 Republicans in this House voted to strike that provision out of the bill and place that burden upon the consumers and toilers of the Nation.

When in the spring of 1918 the Germans had launched their great drive to separate the French and English armies and capture Paris; when the French and English were being driven back and Paris was being approached and bombarded; when civilization held its breath and eager eyes scanned the horizon of the Atlantic to catch a glimpse of approaching help and rescue from America; when Lloyd-George announced that it was a race between Hindenburg and Wilson—Hindenburg to win the war before the American Army could get to France and Wilson to get the American Army to France before Hindenburg could win the war—and when silent and darkened ships were racing like greyhounds upon the bosom of the seas carrying that Army, eager and impatient for the front, and all humanity stood on tiptoe to see whether it were too late to turn the tide, it was then that Republicans in this House and Republican leaders in the Senate sought to take from the President of the United States and his legally constituted advisers the management of the war and turn it over to a committee of malcontents to be appointed by themselves. It was then that Republican leaders sought to strip from the President the power conferred upon him by the Constitution as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and transfer it to a committee of self-chosen roundrobiners.

When we recall how in that War with Spain, fought at our doors, guns were fitted to improper carriages and sent useless to the field; how small quantities of medicine were shipped from point to point by freight instead of by express, and were not received where needed for months; how, even after the war ended, troops who had been in the field had never been supplied with sufficient clothing or camp or garrison equipments; how flimsy and worthless cartridge belts were furnished to the soldiers; how for months during and after the war the only medicines on hand at base hospitals were salts, quinine, and castor oil; how, as Gen. Miles himself testified before an investigating commission, the beef furnished to soldiers was unfit for animals, not to speak of soldiers fighting for their country; how soldiers were compelled to stay in tentless camps amid insanitary and disease-breeding conditions; how trainloads of soldiers, sick and dying, were sent through the United States without medical attendants; how the men in at least one camp went without meat for three weeks, and how the commissary of the Army was afterwards court-martialed for misconduct and neglect of duty; and how another famous "round robin," signed by men of the high character of Gen. Joseph Wheeler, Theodore Roosevelt, Henry W. Lawton, Gen. Leonard Wood, and many others complained of a lack of knowledge in Washington of conditions at the front and urged the War Department to take some action before it was too late or the whole American Army would perish from sickness and disease—when we remember that all these things happened in an army of little more than 250,000 men, only about 20,000 of whom were sent to the seat of war in Cuba, ought not the Nation to feel profoundly grateful that Providence did not commit to the tender mercies of a Republican administration the management of the Great War with Germany, in which we raised and equipped in the Army and Navy nearly 5,000,000 men and sent more than 2,000,000 of them more than 3,000 miles from our shores over a dangerous and treacherous ocean to add new splendor to the history of American arms?

And then, when this Army had driven the enemy back at Belleau Wood, at Chateau-Thierry, at Fismes, at St. Mihiel, in the Argonne Forest, and all the other immortal spots where American blood sanctified the soil of Europe, and that enemy with broken sword and flag of truce sued for peace on terms laid down by the Commander in Chief of that victorious Army, the President of the United States, we see these same Republican politicians, these self-styled sustainers and upholders, seeking to discredit the President of the Nation and the spokesman of their country in a foreign land, where he had gone amid the grateful acclamations of a burdened world to help restore the peace of nations and gather up again the fragments of civilization. We see them endeavoring to gratify their little minds by undertaking to humiliate him even before he reached the peace conference, which he had been urged to participate in by the responsible statesmen of the associated nations. We see them by every contemptible device which demagogues display seeking to hinder, to thwart, to intimidate, to belittle, and discredit the President of this Nation in the hope that his effort to vindicate the cause for which our Nation fought might come to naught. And when, after months of grilling toil and anxious deliberations among the representatives of those who had won the war, the greatest peace treaty penned since man ascended from the depths of savagery was laid before the world and the United States Senate for approval, we see that same group of envious men seeking to emasculate it and tear its vitals to shreds while the world waits over a volcano for the return of peace. [Applause.]

At the close of the War with Spain Republican leaders boastfully proclaimed that we were no longer a provincial Nation; that we had become a world power; and that as such we must take our place in the world's great councils and have a voice in the concert of nations. That doctrine was vindicated by the American people. But when, as a result of our participation in the great World War, we saw our beloved country emerge not merely as a world power but as the moral, political, and financial leader among all the nations of the earth, and when politicians with short vision and dwarfed mentality awoke to the realization that this exalted position had been won for us by the lofty intellectual and spiritual leadership of our own President, the thought became galling to their jaded intellects, and they at once set about to tear down this magnificent structure of international confidence, inspiration, and good will, though in doing it the whole Nation might be humiliated. The prestige, the influence, the power, the example of this Republic in the preservation of peace, yea of civilization itself, became as nothing compared with the partisan determination to destroy, if possible, the one man who emerged from that great struggle as a world figure; and the crime which brought down upon his head these Republican anathemas was the fact that he was a Democratic President, and had led the Nation victoriously and triumphantly through one of the gravest and darkest periods of its glorious history.

But, Mr. Chairman, the havoc which has been wrought by this pitiful course of action has found other victims than those against which it was instigated. It is true that for the time being our Nation is an object of suspicion and derision in wide areas of the world because of the inconceivable littleness which has characterized the attitude of certain Republican leaders who have been in a position to fasten upon our Nation the stain of their mendacity. It is true that for the time being the splendor of our achievements for Christian civilization at home and throughout the world has been obscured by a flood of partisan deception and denunciation. But aside from these temporary humiliations which we must endure as a Nation, aside from the distrust which has been generated in the minds of those who are our friends throughout the world, the real victim of this miserable counterfeit for statesmanship will be the Republican Party itself and those who have been responsible for its conduct in both branches of this Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In the name of this record, I deny the statement, wheresoever or by whomsoever made, that either during or since the war the Republican Party, through its constituted leadership, has sustained or upheld the President of these United States. I deny that the present Republican Congress, in either branch, has done aught since it assembled but play cheap and miserable politics with the destiny of the world in order that it may seem to embarrass a great Democratic President. I challenge the spokesman of that party who will attempt to apologize for its record to point to a single instance in which it has kept its pledges made to the American people in the last election.

You came into control of Congress under false pretenses. You came self-heralded as the great constructive party of the Nation. But you have constructed nothing. You came self-heralded as the embodiment of the Nation's superior intelligence. But the product of that collective master brain has been barren beyond all description. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

While commerce and industry, torn and disarranged by the convulsions of a World War, await the readjustments and reassurances of peace; while capital and labor await the return of normal conditions which are vital to both; while nations hang in the balance, and newly liberated peoples wonder whether freedom is but a nightmare, Republican leaders defy the will of their constituents, flout the sentiment of the American people, and seek to crush the hope for which millions have prayed and other millions have given their lives that peace, through the instrumentality of a League of Nations, may be enthroned among the discordant nations of the world. Twelve months you have been in session. For nearly two years you have known that yours would be the responsibility in both branches of Congress. But you have floundered helplessly through an amiable incompetency never before believed possible or experienced in the Nation's history. Notwithstanding from every quarter have come insistent cries for relief from the intolerable conditions which press down upon the people, the sum of your labors in solving these great industrial and economic problems is represented by the appointment of a snooping committee to circumnavigate the globe in sections to ascertain how under Heaven the great Democratic administration of Woodrow Wilson won the greatest war ever fought in history so quickly, so conclusively, and with such small loss of precious lives. [Applause.]

The people of this Nation are asked to place upon this tragic and ridiculous record the seal of their approval. They are asked, while listening to a voice that pretends to be Jacob's, to grasp the hand of Esau. Will they listen to that voice? Will they grasp that hand? Will they turn their faces against that current that runs through the hearts of men and women everywhere in behalf of a permanent peace? Will they forget the white faces of those who fell and now sleep on fame's eternal camping ground? I do not believe it. This Nation is a just Nation. It is a fearless Nation. It is an honorable Nation. It will not seal with the stamp of its approval a record of injustice, cowardice, and dishonor.

And so the record stands. And what if there be calumny? What if there be misrepresentation? What if there be slander and envious detraction? What if there be deliberate and unworthy falsity of statement? It has ever been so with those who served mankind.

When Washington was commander of the ragged soldiers of the Revolution a combination was formed in Congress to supplant and disgrace him. After he became President he became the object of the grossest slanders ever heaped upon the head of a great Nation. He was accused of deceiving and debauching the Nation, and after reciting a long list of similar accusations a newspaper of that period ask the following questions:

> What will posterity say of this man who has done this thing? Will it not say that the mask of political hypocrisy has been worn by Cæsar, by Cromwell, and by Washington alike?

When Thomas Jefferson was President of the United States no abuse was too vile, no epithet too scurrilous, no criticism too unjust to be thrown in his face by his political enemies. He was accused of atheism, of fraud, and of robbery, and of having swindled his creditors by paying them in worthless currency. What mattered it to them that he was President? What mattered it to them that he was the author of the immortal Declaration of Independence? They were his foes and they sought to discredit him.

When Andrew Jackson was in the prime of his popularity as a soldier and as President he was the object of some of the bitterest attacks ever heaped upon an American statesman. He was charged with having suspended the legislative and judicial functions by military sway; with having insulted the Executive of the Nation, and with having spurned and transcended his orders. He was charged with having usurped the power of the State, with breaking every law known to nations, and with promulgating a new code of his own, conceived in madness or folly and written in blood. They were his enemies. They sought to discredit him.

And there was Lincoln! Sad-faced, patient Lincoln! Was any man ever so misunderstood, so vilified, so abused, and criticized? Even in his own party, even in his own Cabinet, he was ridiculed, sneered at, jeered, and mocked. He was called "The baboon at the other end of the Avenue." He was referred to as the "Idiot in the White House." By some he was called a usurper, a traitor, and a tyrant; by others he was described as "weak and vacillating," and his administration was described by "leading Republicans" as being "imbecile." They spoke of his "treachery," and of his having sacrificed the "honor and dignity" of the Nation. It is no wonder that in an hour of despondency he cried out against his fate and wished that he had never been born.

But where are the traducers of Washington? Where are those who maligned Jefferson? Where are the defamers of the character of "Old Hickory" Jackson? Where are those who, with leering look and sinister smile, sought to besmirch the record of Abraham Lincoln? They lie in unmarked and unhallowed graves. They have all descended into the stillness of a deep oblivion from which they will never emerge. But the figure of Washington grows more imposing as the years go by, and each year pilgrims by the thousands tread softly near his tomb. Jefferson's memory and his great deeds are enshrined in the hearts of a grateful posterity. The heroic courage of Jackson as soldier and statesman inspires each new generation of American patriots. And the tragic career of Abraham Lincoln gives hope to every struggling boy in this fair land, and in his honor we build monuments and cities. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is not my task to assign to Woodrow Wilson the place which he will occupy among the great statesmen of America and the world. Impartial history will perform that duty. No word of mine can add to the fullness of his stature. No word or act of yours can detract from it. But if I may be permitted to indulge in a prophecy, it is not difficult to foresee that those who now snap at his heels like hungry jackals will take their places among the forgotten register of the Nation's malcontents, while he will stand with Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln as one of the few great figures of this era.

Let me in conclusion adopt as a fitting motto for the Democratic Party and its great President a sentence uttered by the great Lincoln in his famous debates with Douglas over the senatorship from Illinois. When complaint was made that the course he was pursuing would defeat him for that high office, he uttered this immortal sentence: "I am not bound to win; but I am bound to be right." In being right, he lost the senatorship, but he gained the Presidency and a premiership among the world's great statesmen. In being right, Woodrow Wilson has lost the support of a narrow, partisan, and slothful Republican Congress, but he will have gained a prize infinitely greater in value and in honor, a high place among the meager list of the world's real statesmen and benefactors. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, is the time for general debate limited by a rule or by agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. No limit of debate has been fixed.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not think we ought to let this debate run on here for 10 hours in this way, and I move that all general debate be now closed.

Mr. BLANTON. That motion is out of order.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. We have got important legislation that ought to come up here.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman withhold his point for a moment?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I withhold it for a moment, but we have legislation that ought to come up. The time ought not to be wasted in speeches when we are about to adjourn; and there is no excuse for it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present, a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, much has been said by different persons as to who or what won the war. One will assert that food won the war, another that it was ships, and still another that it was guns, and still another that it was money, but not any one or all of these agencies won the war, although all contributed their essential part. But certainly in the last analysis it was the American soldier who won the war. Every other branch of the military service has been criticized, many departments at times were on the verge of collapse, but no criticism has ever been nor can be directed against the American soldier. His department never broke down, it never failed, it was always 100 per cent efficient. I have said and I say now that the American soldier is incomparably the bravest and most efficient fighting man the world has ever produced. After a few weeks or months training at most he entered the lists beside the Allies, whose soldiers were the veterans of a hundred battles, equaling them in courage and surpassing them in efficiency. They met that world renowned fighting machine which had been a half century in building, and with irresistible power they delivered the assault that left it a hopeless ruin; they destroyed that Prussian militarism that threatened the liberties of mankind. And in doing that they rendered militarism unnecessary in the great western republic. And the Kaiser, high, but wicked dream of world dominion, went out in rayless night and pitiless oblivion. These men are the Nation's defenders, the preservers of all that is great and beneficent in civilization. We are and will always be their debtors.

But the war is past and the great thought of the public mind is readjustment. A thousand remedies are recommended for every public ill, whether real or fancied. Many of the difficulties are being remedied through the general application of old-fashioned common sense. In many instances we find it more sensible and practical to adapt ourselves to the circumstances than to seek to bend the circumstances to our will. One set of reformers persistently raise the cry, "Back to the farm."

But the cry of "Back to the farm" is a far-off prospect. I see little likelihood of such a movement. Wages are much higher and the attractions much more impelling in the city than in the country; and that condition alone, while it continues, will effectually preclude the big "Back to the farm" drive. This fondly cherished dream of the social and economic sentimentalist will only be realized when the commercial or price equilibrium is adjusted on a scale that gives the farmer a price for his products which, taking into consideration the investment and cost of production, shall bear a fair comparison to prices in other lines of production. In the great disparity now existing between the prices of farm products and of manufactured products is found the explanation for a condition that some writers and publicists have been pleased to refer to as the decadence of American agriculture. Personally, I do not admit that it is relatively decadent.

Eighteen months ago it was thought by many forward-looking men that the demobilization of the four millions of service men would at once produce a great surplus of labor. As prominent a national figure as Franklin K. Lane held so strongly to this belief that he urged that prodigious public works should be undertaken in order to absorb this predicted oversupply of labor, but we have been surprised and gratified that, although the great schemes of the Secretary were not carried out, yet the exact reverse of his prediction is and has been the labor situation throughout the country every day since the signing of the armistice, thus making it unnecessary, from the viewpoint above stated, to inaugurate those great Government undertakings in order to give employment to the returned service man, or, for that matter, to anyone; and to-day it is generally true that there are more jobs looking for men than men looking for jobs.

A morning paper states that of all the boys who left the farms of America to enter the war only 10 per cent have returned to take up agricultural life, and the reason for this I have already stated. If this statement is approximately correct, it furnishes the answer to the problem of the shortage of farm help.

Gentlemen say there is a dissatisfaction among the agricultural population. Well, that is undeniably true, and the cause is not far to seek. There must be an underlying cause for the situation to which I have called your attention. The farmers of the United States do not believe they are getting a square deal. From the day the armistice was signed to this good hour the tendency of the cattle and hog market has been downward. In the past 12 months the decline in the value of stocks of hogs and cattle on hand in the United States, as compared with one year ago, exceeds the enormous figure of $2,500,000,000; and at the same time almost every article that the farmer must buy and pay for from the proceeds of the sales of his low-priced crops are higher, many of them much higher, than at the signing of the armistice.

In order to more especially direct attention to this inequality in prices I quote from authentic statistics that from April, 1914, to April, 1920, best beef steers advanced in price 56 per cent, but the more common grade of corn-fed beeves advanced less than 48 per cent; cows and heifers showed an advance of 52 per cent between the same dates; hogs showed an advance of 75 per cent. But over against this is set down the fact that the prices of the manufactured articles which the farmer buys has in the same period referred to—1914 to 1916—advanced in most instances 100 per cent to 150 per cent, and in some instances as much as 225 per cent. For an example, the price of men's shoes has advanced 150 per cent to 184 per cent. Women's and misses' shoes, 150 per cent to 218 per cent. An even greater advance is shown in the price of clothing. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentlemen of the House to understand that I am discussing more especially the relation of the farmer to the present economic industrial and financial situation; the instances I have cited clearly indicates. No better summary of the situation can be made than that made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS], found on page 7855 of the RECORD of May 28:

> The farmer is getting, on the average, less than 65 per cent advance on the price he received for his product in 1914, but he is paying an average of 185 per cent in price on what he buys, as compared with 1914.

It proves nothing to the advantage of the farmer to say that potatoes are selling in Washington for 40 cents for a quarter of a peck or $7.20 per bushel, and other things at relatively high prices. But it does serve to call attention to the outrageous criminal profiteering to which the consumer is being constantly subjected. These potatoes that are being sold in the markets of Washington for $7.20 per bushel were purchased from the Michigan farmer for 85 cents to $1.25, and I say when the producer and consumer of food is subjected to such conscienceless exploitation as that "There is something rotten in Denmark." The Volstead bill providing for collective bargaining which passed the House on yesterday proposes remedies which, let us hope, will lead to a more efficient system of distribution. Let us hope that it shall develop a situation whereby the producer may secure a better return on his labor and investment and at the same time the consumer may in a great degree be relieved from the cormorants of trade who now absorb almost his entire earnings. In some way there should be, yes there must be, some efficient, just system of distribution worked out to supplant the present inefficient and expensive system—when a bushel of potatoes for which the farmer receives $1 is sold to the consumer for $7 or $8; when a carcass of meat for which the farmer receives 9 to 11 cents on foot is sold to the consumer from 20 to 60 cents per pound; when the wheat in the barrel of flour costs the miller $10 and the same barrel of flour after undergoing but two processes, that of grinding and baking, costs the consumer $40.

I again say that every one knows "There is something rotten in Denmark." I welcome the initiatory step that promises some relief for this situation. The minds of both producer and consumer are aroused as never before in the history of this country, and in that fact lies the hope of an improved condition in the days that lie before us.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to address myself to the cost of the participation of our Nation in the World War, not only in men, money, and materials, but as well in the morale and contentment of our people, and also to the duty of the American people in meeting the extraordinary conditions now existing.

We entered the war by resolution of the Congress on April 6, 1917, and ceased active hostilities upon the declaration of the armistice on November 11, 1918. During the period intervening between these dates, not only the entire man and woman power of the Nation, but all of our acquired wealth and natural resources, as well as all means of production and transportation, were devoted to the one great purpose of winning the war. All of us recall the patriotic fervor which filled the hearts of the people, without reference to their racial extraction, creed, or social or economic situation. Young men flocked to the colors, older men offered their services wherever suitable and needed, and the women rendered most valuable aid in the work of the Red Cross and other charitable organizations, through which they provided for the necessities and comforts of the soldiers, sailors, marines, and aviators who were actually engaged in the combat for national security and honor. Since the armistice the natural reaction has ensued, and in some measure the great ideals and objects involved in the conflict have been forgotten, while the burdens of taxation and of the increased cost of living have borne down heavily upon the people. It is imperative that all of us should continue to remember the pledges which we made during the war, not only to the fighting men, but also to ourselves and to the Nation, that we would pay the price of victory and willingly bear the cost for the preservation of free institutions and for the glory of the flag.

The record of our achievement in the war fills one of the most wonderful and glorious pages in all history. The total number of men who served in the armed forces of the Nation from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and other services was over 5,041,000. In the Army alone the latest available figures show 205,130 officers and 3,897,194 enlisted men, making a total of 4,102,324. Of this number 2,086,000 went overseas and 1,390,000 actually fought in France. In a single month as many as 306,000 men were shipped overseas, while since the armistice the number returned in a single month reached the total of 333,000. During the war we shipped 7,500,000 tons of supplies from America to France. Through the operations of the selective-service law 24,234,021 men were registered, out of which the total inductions into the service numbered 2,810,296. In a single month 400,000 selective-service men were inducted into the Army. The various line officers' training schools graduated 80,468 men, prepared to assume various commands.

American troops fought in 13 battles of the war during a total of 200 days. In the first distinctly American offensive at St. Mihiel 550,000 Americans were engaged. In the Meuse-Argonne battle, which occupied the last 47 days of the war, 1,200,000 Americans participated.

The American soldier, by his heroism and intrepidity, struck the final, decisive blow in the desperate conflict and achieved victory for the allied cause, but our people paid a large price in killed and wounded, though, for obvious reasons, our losses are not comparable to those sustained by the other nations engaged in the war. The latest reports for the Army show that we lost 1,554 officers and 32,537 men killed in action, and 1,678 officers and 41,020 men who died of wounds, diseases, accidents, and other causes, making a total of 76,789 known dead. We lost in prisoners 296 officers and 4,124 men, and the wounded numbered 8,122 officers and 212,061 men, making a total of 301,395 casualties in the Army, including 3 enlisted men found missing in action. Of the United States marines, 109 officers and 2,509 men lost their lives, and 361 officers and 9,574 men were gassed or wounded. In the Navy, 416 officers and 7,228 enlisted men were killed, and 20 officers and 331 enlisted men wounded or poisoned by gas. So far as ascertained up to the present time, the casualties in all branches, during the war, numbered 3,757 officers and 83,294 men who lost their lives, 8,503 officers and 222,266 men who were wounded or gassed, and 296 officers and 4,124 men taken prisoners, and 3 men reported missing in action, making total casualties of all kinds aggregating 322,243 officers and men.

The cost of the war in man power, however, is not confined to those actually killed or incapacitated by the immediate results of engagements with the enemy. The full number of those who will suffer disability can not yet be ascertained. The cruel artillery fire and the venomous gas attacks of this war caused conditions which will develop diseases for many years to come. It has been particularly noticeable that mental and nervous disorders and pulmonary and other tubercular troubles appear long after the shocks of shells and gases have passed from the vivid recollection of participants in this most awful of wars. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance estimates the number of men discharged from the military service with some degree of disability at 641,900, of which 155,000 applicants have already been examined and found entitled to treatment. Of these 15,000 have been found seriously afflicted with mental diseases, 15,000 with tubercular troubles, and 81,000 with other disorders causing general disability. The certifications for treatment on account of disabilities occasioned by the war are increasing at the rate of 1,200 per month.

Appropriations so far made for allowances and benefits on account of soldiers, sailors, and marines who participated in the World War aggregate the enormous sum of $1,132,594,926. Of this amount $639,558,506 has been set aside for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for the payment of allowances to dependents, compensation for death and disability, insurance, and expenses of administration. For vocational rehabilitation $130,000,000 has been assigned to the Federal Board for Vocational Education. The United States Public Health Service has received $76,796,520 for hospital construction and care of patients. The bonus allowance under the act of February 4, 1919, has cost $256,239,900, and for bringing home or segregating in France the remains of deceased soldiers $30,000,000 has been appropriated. These amounts must be increased from time to time as the necessities may require.

Not only has the war cost the men who were disabled the comforts and pleasures to which they were entitled with other citizens, and not only did this carnage of destruction take the lives of those brave heroes who will never return to their friends and firesides, but the Republic has also lost the fruits of the labor and genius of these hundreds of thousands of the flower of our youth who would have added greatly to the material and intellectual wealth of the Nation if they had been permitted to live out in full vigor their allotted span of life. The loss in production and progress thus sustained through the war can not be computed in millions or in billions of dollars. It can be regained, in part only, by the industry and frugality of those who were spared the sacrifice which all citizens were equally obliged to make. Those who fought were merely selected to render the service to which all citizens were alike liable.

In money the war cost the United States the tremendous sum of $22,625,252,843 expended by ourselves and $9,455,014,125 advanced to the Allies, making a total of $32,080,266,968. Our national debt was increased from $1,208,000,000, on March 31, 1917, to $24,974,963,026.79, on May 31, 1920, and our per capita national debt from $11.33 to $234.17. Our annual interest charges on the public debt increased from $23,000,000 in 1917 to approximately $980,000,000 in 1920, exclusive of the sinking fund which must be established for the retirement of outstanding obligations and which for the next fiscal year is estimated at $260,800,000, and will increase as bonds and certificates mature. There is at present a floating indebtedness of over $3,000,000,000. The internal revenue and customs receipts of the United States Government have increased from $725,887,874.41 in 1916, the year before our entry into the war, to $6,249,077,578 in 1919, showing the enormously increased expenditures of the Federal Government.

During the war the Government took over the operation of the telegraph and telephone companies and the railroad systems of the country. This Government operation of the telegraph and telephone lines created a deficit of over $14,000,000, while the operation of the railroads created an excess of operating expenses and rentals over operating revenues for 26 months of $715,500,000, and the total loss from Federal operation of the railroads will be not less than $1,025,000,000. The war brought the expenditure, out of the Federal Treasury, of three and one-half billion dollars for the building of merchant ships to meet the submarine menace. This has proven a fortunate investment for the upbuilding of our merchant marine, but the increased cost during the war of materials and labor will doubtless bring a large loss in the sale of this fleet to private ownership.

The foregoing are direct and tangible costs and expenses of the war. The indirect and incidental losses to the entire Nation as well as to the people of the country can not be estimated. The people donated hundreds of millions of dollars to charitable purposes directly connected with the war, and millions of men and women diverted their labor and energy from the production of the useful and necessary implements and conveniences of peace to the manufacture of munitions and supplies for war. In other words, for over two years the American people were engaged in producing methods and machines for destruction of life and property instead of conserving and increasing the products of industry, science, and art which make for advancement and progress. As a direct consequence, also, have come the inflation of credits and currency and the increased prices of labor and commodities, resulting in the high cost of living, which, in turn, has brought on a spirit of unrest and dissatisfaction which threatens not only the peace and quiet but the very life of the Nation. These are, indeed, as were the days of the Civil War, times that "try men's souls," but the patriotism and good sense of the American people will meet every issue and overcome every obstacle in these days of reconstruction, as did the patience and loyalty of the people in the equally dark days that followed our internal dissension. The remedy lies very largely in the increased production of the real needs of society and in the return to the simpler and lesser requirements of other days. The factories, like the farms, must devote themselves to the production of necessaries, rather than luxuries, and merchants and middlemen must content themselves with reasonable profits. Extravagance and profiteering go hand in hand. It is equally as harmful to purchase wastefully as to sell exorbitantly. The profligacy of war must yield to the frugality of peace.

But the Government must lead the way. The American people will cheerfully and patiently carry all the necessary and reasonable burdens cast upon them as the price of victory. They will cherish and revere the memories of those who made the supreme sacrifice for the security and honor of the Republic, and will furnish sacred shrines for their remains on the battle fields abroad or in American soil, as their loved ones at home may elect. They will provide generously and amply for those who returned to their homes broken in health or divested of limbs or faculties. They will make fair adjustment of recompense to all who suffered losses and opportunities by reason of their patriotic services in the armed forces of the Nation. They will do all that good faith to the Nation's defenders and the continued public safety may require. But the people will not, and should not, be required to assume any burdens of taxation or discomfort by reason of continued extravagance and reckless expenditure after the war has ceased.

This Congress has made earnest efforts to reduce the people's burdens, as witness the reductions in appropriations by this and the preceding sessions amounting to $2,414,115,144.13 below the estimates of the departments and the appropriations which passed the House of Representatives but failed of passage in the Senate of the Sixty-fifth Congress. Amidst the chaos and extravagance developed by the war, this Republican Congress, by hard labor and wise counsel, has succeeded in bringing outlays within the available income, and even to lay the foundation for savings which in another year are expected to absorb a considerable part of the floating debt hanging over since the Sixty-fifth Democratic Congress. But Congress must have the assistance and cooperation of the executive department in reducing expenditures and effecting economies. Such help has hitherto been given grudgingly, when at all. The enormous establishments created and enlarged during the war must be reduced to as nearly normal and prewar proportions as may be possible. Adequate salaries should be paid to all employees who are needed in the service, but the number of persons employed and the supplies purchased should be reduced to actual necessities.

For a generation to come the principal and interest on the public debt, amounting annually to not less than a billion and a half dollars, will have to be paid out of the Federal revenues. Ample provision for the dependents of the lamented fallen heroes of the war as well as for the dependents of the diseased and disabled survivors and generous treatment of those survivors themselves must continue to receive the attention and solicitude of the Government. But all the administrative departments and agencies should require and receive only such allotments from the National Treasury as are necessary and essential for their efficient and economical management. The people have paid, and are willing to continue to pay, the price of victory chargeable to the war, but they will not pay, and should not be required to pay, the price of extravagance and waste in times of peace. For years to come economy and retrenchment should be the conscious and conscientious aim and goal of both the legislative and executive departments. The willing and harmonious cooperation of these branches of government is essential to that end. In public and in private life economy must be the watchword until the full price of our victory in the war has been paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the chairman of the Irrigation Committee a question.

Mr. GOOD. I can not yield for that. We want to close this debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Then I will have to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Let him ask the question, he has not taken up much time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I made the reservation in order to ask the chairman of the Irrigation Committee a question.

Mr. GOOD. I am about to yield to the chairman of the Committee on Irrigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that no quorum is present. [After counting.] A quorum is present. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the subject matter of the high cost of living, and connected with it how far the administration of the Federal reserve law is responsible for the high cost of living. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the Irrigation Committee, Mr. KINKAID, whether or not it is his purpose to call up the Senate bill 3477, which is now on the calendar, before the adjournment of this Congress?

Mr. KINKAID. In answer to the gentleman from Mississippi, I will say yes, and a special rule has been agreed to for that purpose. This bill is also listed for a suspension of the rules. It should surely become law this session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am in sympathy with the movement.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS].

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, I can not sit here and allow this session to come to an end without raising my voice in protest against the action of the House last Saturday in passing the so-called "soldier-bonus bill." I had no opportunity to do that in what has been aptly called the "bellowing bedlam" that prevailed when, under a "gag rule" that was really a suspension of all rules, with only 40 minutes of farcical debate and no opportunity whatever for amendment, the bill was jammed through the House. I voted against the rule and I voted against the bill. I now protest against the passage of the bill. I protest even more against the "strong-arm" methods employed to accomplish that result.

The bill itself ought to be entitled "An act to raise the cost of living for every man, woman, and child in America." It might also properly be entitled "An act to impose upon an already overburdened people nearly two thousand million dollars in taxes, in order to offer a cheap bribe, a miserable scullions' tip, to four or five million American soldiers, as the general elections approach."

That, I believe, to be an accurate statement of some of the things the bill would accomplish if it should be written into law. But, of course, it will not be written into law. Gentlemen who supported it do not expect or hope or intend that it shall now, or ever, be written into law in its present form, or in anything like its present form. They know that is impossible; hence they make this hypocritical gesture to the soldier and at the same time wink the other eye as they vote to adjourn and allow the bonus bill to be gently chloroformed in a Senate committee.

Mr. Chairman, if I knew of some way by which huge profits made out of the war might now be reached and used equitably to adjust in some measure the compensation paid the soldiers, sailors, and marines without at the same time doing grave injustice and putting additional burdens on the American people, including the service men themselves and their families, I would gladly support such a plan. I know of no way to do that. No plan that will do that has yet been suggested. Certainly the bill referred to is very far from such a plan.

I am strongly in favor of a broad and liberal policy toward the ex-service men. We conscripted them, took them from their homes, took them from office, field, and factory, took them from remunerative employment, and for a dollar a day sent them to face death and disease in the mud and water of the trenches. I saw the splendid spirit in which they put on the uniform of our country. I saw the boys of my own State sleeping in the mud at Camp Greene and I saw the boys from all the States come home—those that did come home—bearing aloft the starry banners of the Republic which their brave young hands had carried to glorious victory.

I hope I am not unappreciative of this noble service. It has been a very real satisfaction to me that in my service here I have been able in some degree, not only in word but in action, in practical fashion, to be of some help to them and to their loved ones at home.

I should be glad, indeed, if I might see my way clear to grant any request that these boys might ask. My inclination is, and I hope always will be, in that direction; but I can not avoid the conclusion that the passage of this bill at this time, containing, as it does, the much discredited land-reclamation scheme and the blanket bonus provisions, will work a grievous wrong not alone to my country but to the men themselves in whose interest it is proposed.

I know that these men would not have me do an act that I honestly felt was against the best interests of the country in whose defense they offered their lives, and which I, too, have taken an oath to serve. I know they expect me to put "America first," even as they have put "America first."

They say this bill provides "adjusted compensation" to the ex-service men. As a matter of fact, it does nothing of the kind. It is impossible to "adjust the compensation" of these men to make it at all commensurate with the compensation of those who remained at home. In the first place, such service as they performed is impossible of compensation in dollars and cents. In the second place, as between the men themselves, no equitable adjustment can be made. Even if we attempt to compensate the men in money for their services and their sacrifices, using as a standard of comparison the wages paid in war time to workers in the munition factories and the shipyards, we are making a pitiful failure when we offer them a dollar or a dollar and a quarter a day, knowing all the time that the munition and shipyard workers received $8 and $10 a day.

How is it possible to adjust the compensation between the young unmarried boy who left a position in a store or factory to enter the service and a man, for example, who gave up his business or lost his home because of the foreclosure of a mortgage? Everybody knows that thousands of these men suffered heavy financial loss because of their being called into the service. Do you think it fair to offer them a dollar a day or a dollar and a quarter a day for a part only of the time they served and call that "adjusted compensation"?

Remember, if this bill becomes law on the basis that it is "adjusted compensation" it will be said by many that the Government's obligation to the ex-service man has been met and that the books are closed. That would not be true, and I for one am unwilling to put the service man in that position.

From the standpoint of the Government there is even less argument in favor of the bill. Already the debt growing out of the war amounts to more than $30,000,000,000. Already, in spite of every effort on the part of Congress to cut expenditures to the very bone, we are told by the chairmen of the Appropriation Committees that there is bound to be a deficit at the end of this year of more than $3.000,000,000. Some way must be found to pay this debt. Already our people are groaning under the heavy burdens of taxation. Our currency and credit have been greatly inflated on account of the huge borrowings of the Government. These are still going on, and the Secretary of the Treasury only a day or two ago said:

> It is a matter of serious concern to have the Government appearing in the market every few weeks for loans. Certainly nothing ought to be done to add to existing credit expansion that can possibly be avoided. * * * The first thing to do, I am sure you will agree, is to keep Federal expenditures down to the minimum. * * * I beg to submit to your committee for its serious consideration the question whether, all things considered, it would not now be advisable to seek out additional sources of revenue to meet the current requirements of the Government.

Later he said:

> It would be highly unfortunate for any new obligations to be placed on the Treasury through the enactment of the bonus proposal in any form, however financed.

It is a notorious fact that the Government has been issuing its certificates of indebtedness by the wholesale in order to meet current bills, and the Secretary has stated within a week that these certificates and the Victory notes within three years will amount alone to approximately $8,000,000,000.

Everybody, from one end of the country to the other, is calling upon Congress to reduce the present high living costs. Everybody is calling upon Congress to reduce taxation. Do you think this bill is going to do either the one or the other?

You know it will not. You know it is inevitable that the result will be to increase taxation and give another boost to the price of every necessity of life.

But you say the boys want it. How do you know that? How many of them have ever asked a single Member to vote for this bill in the form in which it now appears? No one has ever asked me to vote for it in this form. True enough, some of them—perhaps most of them—were in favor of the fourfold plan suggested by the executive committee of the American Legion. But does this bill embody that plan? I venture to say in most important particulars it is not that plan at all. The plan which the legion presented, so far as the so-called cash bonus is concerned, contemplated a payment in bonds or in cash. If in bonds, they were to be delivered at once. If in cash, it was not contemplated that the payments were to be strung out over a number of years. But this bill does neither the one thing nor the other. True, it provides for cash payments, but they are not to begin until July 1, 1921, which is more than a year from this date. No man will get a dollar from this bill if it becomes a law in this form for more than a year. How is it then? Will he then get all that is due him at a dollar a day or a dollar and a quarter a day if he served overseas? Not at all. The payments are strung along from July 1, 1921, for two and a half years. Instead of getting a lump-sum payment, either now or at any time, these men are going to have this money doled out to them in driblets, in 10 quarterly payments, at the rate of about $16 per month, payments to extend over a period of two and a half years, beginning July 1, 1921.

The plan for land settlement provided in the bill seems to me very far, indeed, from the plan which the service men desired. This is the so-called Lane land-settlement scheme, which has been kicking around Congress for the last six or eight years, and which has been about as thoroughly discredited as any proposition I know of. At bottom it is nothing but a gigantic reclamation scheme, which would benefit the ex-service men incidentally, if at all, but would be primarily in the interest of a few land sharks and speculators in a few States containing vast tracts of worthless desert and swamp lands. If once entered upon, it would cost this Government an enormous amount of money. Nobody knows how much, but it is estimated by those in position to know at from two to five billion dollars.

Now, I venture to say that is not what any service man wants. I venture to say if you pass this bill in this form it will not satisfy one of them when they find out what it means. So far as I am concerned, not until I have stronger evidence than I now possess will I believe that the ex-service men of this country desire to have their splendid service in the great war commercialized in this way at the expense of their country in times like these.

We might as well strip for once and all the camouflage from this word "bonus," already much discredited, and appearing in this bill under the more euphonious term of "adjusted compensation." We might just as well call things here by their right names and not attempt to deceive ourselves or anybody else. This whole proposition of "cash bonus" or "adjusted compensation," or under whatever other name it may appear, is nothing at all but a "service pension."

If you enact this bill into law you are going to start this country on a system of service pensions which will never end as long as a single one of these men or his dependents is alive.

By the terms of the bill itself, these payments are going to extend for two and a half years after July 1, 1921. When that time has expired another presidential election will be impending. Will any man in this House have the temerity to say that under those circumstances those payments are going to be allowed to cease at that time? You know better. I tell you now that if you pass this bill and it becomes a law the youngest man in this House will never live to see the day when these payments will cease. They will go on and on and on. They will increase more and more with the passing years. The drain upon the Treasury, the burden upon the taxpayers on account of them, will be enormous.

And the pity of it all is that the boys themselves and their families will pay the bill—or, at any rate, a good share of it. They will pay it in the increased cost of every suit of clothes and every pair of shoes and every loaf of bread. They will pay for it in a still further depreciation in the value of every Liberty bond. Do not think for a minute that the corporations and the wealth of the country will pay these taxes. They will simply pass them along to the consumer. He pays the tax, and you may be sure that by the time it reaches him it will have been multiplied two or three times. So far as I am concerned, I decline to have any part in any hypocritical scheme like this—any sham, any fraud—that seems to do something substantial for these boys but in reality makes them pay for it themselves.

I do not believe the young, red-blooded, able-bodied service men of this country are asking or desiring to become pensioners upon the Government at this time. The veterans of the Civil War did not receive a service pension until the war had been ended for 55 years—not until the infirmities of age had substantially taken away their ability to earn a livelihood. There may come a time in the life of these men when a pension based upon their service will be justified, but, in my opinion, that time has not yet arrived.

Let us put first things first. The primary duty of this Nation at this time is to its wounded and disabled service men. There are approximately 200,000 of them that have already registered for rehabilitation under the vocational rehabilitation law. The total number of death and disability compensation awards up to and including May 13 of this year is 208,496. On these awards the Government of the United States each month is making payments for death and disability compensation of approximately $6,000,000. To date the total amount paid for death and disability compensation awards is more than $97,000,000. Besides, we are paying each month for insurance on account of death and disability awards $5,800,000, and at this minute we have a total financial liability for insurance on account of death and disability awards already made amounting to $1,151,160,673.48. These figures are furnished me by the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. Chairman, very many of these wounded and disabled men have not yet been cared for. Many of them are still in hospitals and many are waiting for hospitals to be provided. It is to them and to their dependents that we owe our first duty. Can there be any doubt about this? Can there be any doubt that up to date that duty has not been fulfilled?

According to House Document No. 481, there is a total of 641,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines who were discharged from service with some degree of disability. Of this number, 155,000 have been analyzed carefully. They include 15,000 cases of serious mental trouble, 15,000 cases of tubercular trouble, and 81,000 cases of general disability. The balance of the 641,000 cases still remain uncared for, although certifications are increasing at the rate of 1,200 per month. Appropriations made by the present Congress approximate $300,000,000 for compensation, vocational education, medical and hospital care and treatment.

For weeks I have been sitting as a member of a House committee investigating charges against the Federal Board for Vocational Education in its work of rehabilitation for disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines. For weeks I have been listening to testimony of men who have appeared and told of neglect and suffering and failure on the part of somebody to do his plain duty and what the Congress of the United States expected was being done. I firmly believe those conditions are being righted. I firmly believe things are much better now than they were a while ago. The fact remains, however, that just as long as there is a single disabled man suffering for want of care and attention; just as long as a single one of his dependents is in need, as very many of them are now in need, and no special provision made for them in this bill, the Government of the United States, in my view, may well postpone action on its general program of soldier-aid legislation. Especially at this time, with Liberty bonds in the hands of 20,000,000 patriotic Americans quoted at 84; with the whole country calling upon Congress to reduce the high cost of living and wherever possible to reduce taxation; with the Treasury Department working its printing presses overtime issuing its I. O. U.'s, which it is wholy unable to redeem at maturity from current revenue; with sugar selling at 23 cents a pound; and press dispatches announcing the likelihood that bread may soon sell for 25 cents a loaf, I can not avoid the conclusion that it is our plain duty, as responsible Representatives here, to take an account of stock to see where we are coming out.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not now, and I never have been, opposed to any reasonable and proper soldier-aid legislation. On the contrary, I have been, and am now, strongly in favor of it. I think I have voted for and worked for every proposition that has come before us during my service here that has been for the real benefit of these men. I shall continue to do so, so long as I remain in public life, and so far as I can do it, having in view the interests of our common country. There are many features of this bill that I would like to support. They seem to me admirably designed and to be in the interest of the whole country as well as the ex-service men themselves. But for the reasons stated I could not support the bill as it came before us, and there was no opportunity whatever to amend it. It was brought in here under rules that allowed only 40 minutes for debate and no opportunity whatever for amendment. We had to take it as it was, or vote against it. To pass, in this manner, upon a proposition of such tremendous magnitude, involving, as it does, a certain expenditure of billions of dollars, at such a critical juncture in the affairs of the country—to cram this bill down our throats in this fashion—is, to my mind, little less than monstrous. Much as I desire to aid in the passage of some legislation that shall be in the real interest of the ex-service men, much as I desire to cast my vote here in recognition of their noble service and sacrifice, I utterly refuse to aid in any manner whatever the passage of this bill.

For the brave men who upheld the Nation's honor in the dark days of war, and for the loved ones dependent upon them, I would do all in my power to do, except only a wrong to their country and mine; that I know they would not have me do, and that I will do for no man. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY].

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Is the gentleman going to talk on the bonus bill?

Mr. DAVEY. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I propose to talk again on the subject of postal salaries, and I trust that the gentleman from Illinois and his colleagues on the Republican side will agree with me as to the importance of the question. I understand that a bill has been reported which seeks to increase the salaries of the postal employees to a moderate degree. As I understand it, the proposed increase amounts to $150 to $200 per annum for clerks and carriers. The present salaries run from $1,200 to $1,650, and, if I understand the pending bill correctly, the proposed salaries will run from $1,400 to $1,800. If you figure it out on a basis of 26 days per month, 8 hours a day, you will see that $1,400 a year is only 56 cents an hour.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that these men get 16 days' leave with pay. The gentleman must know that they get 10 days' sick leave with pay. He must know that they get every national holiday and that the working-days of the year for these men are 291 days.

Mr. DAVEY. That may all be true, but the gentleman knows that the dollar of the postal clerk will not go any further than the dollar of anyone else.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman ought to tell the truth when he is talking about the number of days work they perform.

Mr. DAVEY. I am talking about the income of these men, the money with which they have to buy the necessaries of life.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I did not quite understand the gentleman. How much are the salaries of the carriers raised per annum?

Mr. DAVEY. The present salaries run from $1,200 to $1,650.

Mr. HUSTED. That is the base pay?

Mr. DAVEY. No; the complete pay.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. That includes the bonus.

Mr. DAVEY. The proposed salaries run from $1,400 to $1,800.

Mr. HUSTED. Including the bonus?

Mr. DAVEY. Including everything. Every man in this country knows the vital importance of the Postal Service. If that service disintegrates because of the incapacity of this Congress to deal properly with the question, then the vital interests of the Nation suffer. Every business interest, every social and industrial interest will be sacrificed. I can not understand the niggardly policy that seems to be applied to this great instrument of the Government. We talk about being generous to them, and hand out an increase of $50 or $100 once in a while. We compare the present salaries with salaries in the past, and because the figures are larger we think we have done something great for the postal employees, meanwhile ignoring the relative buying power of the dollar. No business could be conducted upon that basis. Why deal justice out to these men by piecemeal?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know that this report fixing the compensation about which the gentleman complains is the unanimous report of five Republicans and five Democrats? Does he know that?

Mr. DAVEY. I believe that is undoubtedly true, and I will take the gentleman's word for it, but that does not make it any better.

Mr. MADDEN. What would the gentleman do?

Mr. DAVEY. There is only one reasonable and proper thing to do, and that is to fix salaries that are commensurate with the cost of living and the requirements of the Postal Service, and if the gentleman is unwilling to do that simple justice by these postal employees, then it seems to me other hands ought to deal with the problem.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt further?

Mr. DAVEY. If the gentleman will kindly desist for a moment, I wish to remind him that I am trying to make a speech and not he.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that, but the gentleman ought to be willing to put some facts into his speech, and I would be glad to give them to him.

Mr. DAVEY. I am talking about a great vital fact. And that is the impending disaster to the Postal Service if we fail to do our duty. It may be that the gentleman from Illinois has not been moving around the country much of late. He may not know what is going on and does not realize how fast these men are leaving the Postal Service because of the inadequate salaries. He may not realize how many of them are hanging on in the desperate hope that this Congress will do its duty.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that this bill, which proposes these very small increases, is to be brought in shortly under a special rule prohibiting amendment, one of these peculiar devices by which Congress is gagged and the Members prevented from expressing their own real wishes and judgment. We will then be placed in the position of voting against any increase or of accepting the meager amount which has been provided by the august gentlemen who assume all the prerogatives of determining this vital question. It seems to me that we ought to approach this subject with a little more business consideration. Every man who has watched the course of events knows that the cost of living has mounted and mounted. It seems to me that this Congress alone of all of the elements of America has assumed that prices are going rapidly back to the old level. Every business man of my acquaintance has assumed that a new price level has come to stay, and I think there is no doubt of it. We can not hope to go back to the old price level of wages or the price of commodities. There probably will be some recession in prices, but we shall never see the old level of costs again. We must accept the fact that a new level of prices is here, and that every man who works for a living is affected by those new prices. If we expect high-class, intelligent, dependable men in the Postal Service, either to come in or to stay there, we must deal with them with consideration. We must treat them as human beings and pay them a living wage.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The gentleman from Ohio has not made any suggestion as to the maximum amount. I would say that clerks in the Canton post office were in my office yesterday and said that a maximum of $2,000 is the least amount they would consider; that they would leave the service in the event the compensation was not raised to a maximum of $2,000.

Mr. DAVEY. I shall not attempt to say what is the proper amount, but I do say that the amounts fixed in the pending bill are absolutely inadequate.

Gentlemen, I appeal for justice for the postal employees. I appeal for the protection and upbuilding of the Postal Service and against the neglectful and niggardly policy that has prevailed of late regarding the salary question. I appeal for fair and full consideration of the vital public interest in this matter. The American public demands fair play, and is entirely willing to pay the price of fair play. This Congress can not, without a confession of weakness and incapacity, fail to meet the crisis in the Postal Service and deal full justice to these splendid public servants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to dwell upon the shortcomings of the Republican Party nor the great achievements of the Democratic Party, although the subject might seem most enticing and prolific.

I wish particularly to call the attention of this House to the transportation and terminal facilities of the country. At no time in our history, unless perhaps for a short period during the war, has there been greater congestion upon the railroads and at the terminals of the great centers of population. It has been demonstrated clearly that even in the face of vast appropriations and credits granted by the Government to the railroads and favorable legislation of every nature, they are unable, at this time, to carry the vastly increasing freight and passengers. The country is rapidly increasing in population and in business and commerce at a pace never before equaled. The present census, which is nearing completion, will show a population around 110,000,000 souls. Business and commerce have increased even more rapidly than the population. Prosperity abounds on every hand. Never in the history of the world has labor received such high salaries as to-day. From the chimneys of the millions of factories of the country smoke curls heavenward with a vigor which shows the mills are at high-tension operation. The farmers have enjoyed prosperity as never before. The mines and factories pour forth their wealth in abundance, and find ready and willing buyers at great profit. The whole Nation has been able to enjoy luxuries which have become quite common indeed.

Is it any wonder, with all this prosperity, energy, and progress on every hand, that the railroads should find themselves absolutely unable to care for the business? The natural relief for this congestion of freight is over the waterways by water-borne commerce. Water-borne commerce can transport those products safely handled by this economical mode of transportation to the relief of railroads and their terminals. Other countries have rapidly developed their rivers and harbors, and have used them not alone to the relief of the railroads, but to the economy of transportation.

In this land of ours we have expended large sums for this purpose. We have not, however, expended money for this important service at a ratio in anywise comparable to that we have expended in other lines not as essential. To-day there is locked in conference committee a rivers and harbors bill, which passed the House carrying $12,000,000 and passed the Senate carrying double that amount. Even the amount of $24,000,000 would not be sufficient to do any considerable amount of work at present prices. If the bill comes from conference at all it will not carry more than fifteen millions, and more likely not more than twelve millions, which sum can do no more than maintain present improvements and to somewhat continue the projects which the Government has already under operation. Such is the parsimony dealt out to rivers and harbors, that most important safeguard for the present and future.

The progress of the country demands more and better harbors and harbor facilities. This is highly essential and in a few years it will become absolutely necessary that the rivers be further developed that they may relieve the railroads. They must be developed, but in their development it is just as essential to have water terminals as it is to have railroad terminals. There must be some cooperation between the railroads and the steamship lines, certainly some working agreement by which shipments can be rapidly transferred from one to the other.

Another cause I assign for this congestion is the centralization of too much of the business at the port of New York. It has been well said that other ports of the Atlantic seaboard have heretofore been unable to compete with that city, through which port about 80 per cent of the Atlantic foreign trade and 66 per cent of the total foreign trade of the United States passes; nor, indeed, have they in the past even been able to realize a fair proportion of the business promised by the modernization and enlargement of their facilities. Habits of shippers, the centralization of the big railroads, and the influence of the greatest financial center have kept New York the premier port, though some of her rivals have better wharves, more efficient handling, and superior railroad connections.

The results of the war, however, while they have not yet materially affected this superiority, will certainly more closely approximate the performance and the promise of development in the other ports. The tremendous congestion of freight at New York and the enormously expensive toll in transmission there adversely affect the interests of the entire country. The cost of handling freight in New York, located as it is on the wrong side of the Hudson River, separated from the bulk of continental America by a formidable barrier which imposes an additional handling expense of from 50 cents to $1 or more per ton on 90 per cent of the cargoes entering or leaving that port, is an unnecessary expenditure of money to overcome purely artificial defects and is a satirical comment on our boasted American efficiency. Needless to say, this burden of useless handling does not come out of the pockets of the transportation companies, as it is passed on by them to the ultimate consumer.

The people of this country have been largely educated to believe that New York is the only port along the Atlantic seaboard through which they can make shipments to foreign ports or for distribution. The result has been that too much freight has been piled up at that port. The great facilities which the city of New York offer have been flooded and congested so that quick operation is practically impossible. It is my desire to impress upon the people and particularly those of the Central West that along the Atlantic coast there exist many harbors and many ports which can give them quick, accurate, and economical service; that the division of their shipments between the ports along the coast will largely relieve the congestion through New York. It is not my desire to say anything against New York nor its wonderful facilities and its great business men, but I do believe that in the interest of the general public, in the interest of the shipper and consumer, more time should be devoted to a study of the other ports along the coast and their advantages.

There is plenty of business for all, without congestion to any. I am, of course, more familiar with my home port of Baltimore. It would seem unnecessary to call the attention of this House, and through them the public, to the fact that Baltimore is so much closer to the great centers of population back of the Atlantic Seaboard than is New York, Philadelphia, or other ports. One can scarcely realize that Baltimore is nearly 200 miles closer to St. Louis than New York and 63 miles closer than Philadelphia; that it is 109 miles closer to Chicago than is New York and 118 miles closer to Indianapolis; that it is closer to Detroit, and even closer to Buffalo, in the State of New York, than is the city of New York. This means that freight can be carried cheaper by just that many miles to Baltimore than it can to New York, Philadelphia, or other more distant points.

I have distributed to the Members of Congress data upon the port of Baltimore, that they may disseminate the information among their constituents, and particularly among their great business organizations. I have just read a circular in which a comparison of the difference in handling a 5,165-ton steamer with general cargo in the ports of Baltimore and New York. Every item of expense and each item itself itemized is given, and it is definitely shown that this same ship, with the same cargo, can be handled through the port of Baltimore at a saving of $4,177.81, and in addition, procure quickness and dispatch without congestion.

Another circular depicts the difference in cost of a shipment from Pittsburgh to Baltimore or New York, in which every item is likewise given, and there is shown to be a saving of 19.7 per cent through the port of Baltimore. Another comparison of a shipment from the same city to the same points via warehouse shows a saving in favor of Baltimore of 47 per cent. I might continue giving data and conclusions. I realize, however, that those interested in the subject will seek further information. That the country and the world is beginning to realize the importance of Baltimore is shown from the fact that the imports of that city increased from 1912 to 1919 from $26,000,000 to nearly $39,000,000; that the exports increased from $92,000,000 to $353,000,000.

That the people of Baltimore realize the future of their port is demonstrated by the fact that they have already expended millions upon harbor and terminal facilities, and are just now authorized to expend $52,000,000 additional by act of the recent legislature. A very eminent engineer of the War Department said Baltimore was destined to be one of the greatest ports along the seaboard and even compete with New York for supremacy. That she is fast realizing this great prediction is thoroughly demonstrated by the activities and energy of her 733,000 people and their willingness to spend such vast sums for further development and improvement.

During my years in Congress I have devoted every effort and opportunity in advocating development of the waterways of the country, increased port facilities, and deeper channels. It has been my good fortune to convince Congress of the advantages of Baltimore and to secure through large appropriations and the adoption of different projects a completed channel of 35 feet from the city to the sea. By the adoption of another project, which I submitted to Congress a few years ago, our channel will be widened; the channel into Curtis Bay—now a part of Baltimore—will be widened and dredged to 35 feet and a new, wider, and deeper channel constructed into Spring Gardens. In addition to this, we have also been able to obtain a larger anchorage basin, and by recent act of Congress this basin is to be surveyed for extension until it meets the widened channel into Curtis Bay. These projects have been adopted, and will be completed by the Government whatever they may cost. Certainly not less than $2,000,000.

If one will but pay a visit to the harbor of Baltimore, viewing it on both sides of the Patapsco, he will find arising a vast number of factories with their towering stacks indicating the progress which has been made in the last few years. That great section of Canton and Curtis Bay have developed so rapidly one can scarcely believe they are the same places which he beheld only a few years ago. They have come because of the water facilities, deep channel, low taxes, and transportation advantages.

Just so long as we continue to improve our harbor and its facilities, just so long will factories continue to seek locations in our midst. I have always stood and worked for the harbor of Baltimore. It is one of its great—if not its greatest—assets. The future destiny of Baltimore is tied up in its water transportation. Its location is superb; its climate equable; its people most hospitable and businesslike.

There is to my mind nothing the Democratic Party has done during its control of Congress which will redound more to the interest and benefit of the great mass of people than its appropriations for improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country, even though that party has been prolific in the passage of much constructive legislation, such as the Federal reserve act, which has prevented panics, enabled us to carry on the biggest war ever engaged in, and established a financial system the best in the world. The establishment of the Shipping Board has restored to the seas the American flag and given to America a place in the sun. The treatment of the soldiers and sailors by liberal legislation and bountiful provision has demonstrated the gratefulness of the American people for this heroic body of young men. I might mention a vast amount of valuable legislation, but my purpose is to demonstrate how highly I prize the great advantages of river and harbor improvements. That great party of Jefferson and Jackson has demonstrated to the world its capacity for doing big things. Never has the responsibility of a greater war rested upon a people than during its control.

More constructive legislation has been placed upon the statute books during its incumbency than was placed there during half a century previous. Never before has the country been more prosperous and developed more rapidly in personal and material gain. Certainly the party may feel proud of its great achievements. Its loyal supporters have every reason to stand erect and look with pleasure and pride to the future. There may at times be adversities, but the sun of democracy is still radiant with beauty and glory.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use some time myself—10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields himself 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to attempt to discuss this bill, because it is the desire of the House, I know, that we should complete the consideration of it this afternoon, and this general debate has continued much longer than we ever anticipated. The gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, will explain in detail the provisions of the bill. I desire to refer only to one of the many subjects mentioned during this general debate. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] referred to the sugar situation. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] asserted that the Hon. Herbert Hoover had urged upon the President last year the purchase of the sugar crop and quoted Mr. Hoover as having said before the Committee on the Judiciary that had his recommendation been complied with we would not be to-day suffering from the great increase of the price of sugar. The fact is as disclosed by the cablegram of Mr. Hoover, which was placed in the RECORD by Mr. TINKHAM, that Mr. Hoover never did recommend to the President the purchase of this sugar crop except upon conditions. He recommended it upon the condition that we extend credit to European nations at a time when this Congress and this Government had determined to stop advancing money to European Governments, and the other condition upon which Mr. Hoover recommended the purchase of the sugar crop was that the Congress give further power to the Equalization Board to control the distribution of the sugar purchased. In his cablegram he stated:

Any continuation of control will require action by Congress, and it must embrace appropriations, the continuation of power and embargo, control of speculations, profiteering, and distribution.

The strange thing is that Mr. Hoover never sought to create the impression that he disapproved of the conduct of the President in this matter until within the last few weeks when he became an active candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency.

Mr. KING. That was not our fault.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; the gentleman says it is not his fault. It certainly was not our fault. The fact remains that when the President did not act upon Mr. Hoover's recommendation he complied with the recommendation of Mr. Hoover that it should not be done unless "control be extended, appropriations made, and speculation curbed." I have no objection to gentlemen making political speeches, and on both sides of the House they have indulged in them for the last 8 or 10 hours, but I am calling the attention of the House to this fact, that when gentlemen criticize the President of the United States for not having purchased the sugar crop, they thereby commit themselves to a continuance——

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am sorry I can not. I have but 10 minutes—they thereby commit themselves to a continuance of the war acts and of the war legislation which Members of this House time and again have urged should be repealed, as without this power there could be no regulation of the distribution of the sugar purchased by the Government.

Mr. HUSTED. Will not the gentleman yield for one question right there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not, because I have but 10 minutes. The Government should not have continued in the sugar business or in any other business, in my opinion. If the President of the United States under the war legislation had purchased the sugar crop last August, 10 months after the cessation of hostilities, and there had been a good crop in Louisiana and sugar had decreased in price, the very gentlemen who now criticize him for not having purchased sugar would have criticized him for going into the grocery business under war powers long after hostilities had ceased. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And gentlemen would have been justified in it, in my opinion, because I do not believe the President of the United States would have been any more justified in exercising his war powers to purchase sugar than he would have been justified in going into the State of the gentleman from Massachusetts and purchasing shoes, an actual necessity, and provided for their sale by the Government of the United States for a less price than they are now being sold to the people.

Had he done that I would have criticized him, and I would have criticized if he had gone into the sugar business or any other branch of the grocery business and attempted to put this Government in business for all time. Now, that is the fact. Why indulge in politics about it? Why not tell the people the truth? The truth is that neither the Congress nor the Executive is responsible for the greatly increased price of sugar. The truth is, according to the Statistical Abstract, that in 1865 the per capita use of sugar was 18 pounds per person. In 1905 it had increased to 75 pounds annually, and last year it increased to 93 pounds per capita. Then wonder that sugar is high!

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know to what that is attributable?

Mr. BYRNES of South Caorlina. I will tell you to what it is attributable in a moment. This year, according to the Treasury Department, we spent $1,000,000,000 for candy in this country; we spent for soft drinks $350,000,000. We spent for ice cream—not made in the home, but ice cream sold over the counter—$250,000,000. We spent for confectionery $350,000,000. We spent for cereal drinks in which sugar is used $230,000,000, making a total expenditure by the people of the United States this year for articles in which sugar is used $2,180,000,000. This, of course, does not include any expenditure for sugar used in the home.

And then, to complete it, the people of America invested $50,000,000 in chewing gum. Then people wonder at the increased price of sugar. When Louisiana has a one-third crop; when Cuba has a short crop; and there is a total shortage this year of 2,000,000 tons, and the per capita use of sugar increases from 18 pounds per person in 1865 to 93 pounds per person this year, can you expect anything but an increase in price? Under these circumstances, can you, by any legislation on earth, by any sleight of hand, accomplish a reduction in price?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit me to answer the question at that point?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. KING. You can do that very easily if you will have the Federal Reserve Board call the reserve banks on financing the sugar hoarders who are controlling tons and tons of sugar.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But instead of hoarding, the facts are that you and I and the other citizens of America consume 93 pounds per capita, as against 18 pounds in 1865 and 75 pounds before the war.

Mr. KING. I do not think the gentleman ought to lay it on the people.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Well, it is the people who are consuming the sugar, and they are consuming more than ever before in the history of the country at a time when we have a shortage of 2,000,000 tons of sugar. It is useless to talk about legislation or Executive action when we have a reduced crop and we consume 93 pounds, as against 75 pounds a few years ago. Why not be honest about it? Unless the people of America will come to their senses and realize that unless they cut down the extravagant use of sugar no legislation of this Congress and no action of any executive department can ever bring relief to them. [Applause.]

In so far as the conduct of the President is concerned, the Sugar Board did recommend to the President last August that he should purchase the Cuban sugar crop, provided Congress would grant the power necessary to regulate the distribution of the crop. The only power to exercise such control is contained in the Lever Act, which expires with the proclamation of peace. It was presumed at that time, August, 1919, that this proclamation could soon be made, and whenever the Lever Act expired there would be no way to control the distribution of sugar this year. On August 8, 1919, the President asked for the extension of the Lever Act. Later, in October, representatives of the Sugar Board appearing before the Senate Agriculture Committee requested legislative power to control the distribution of sugar. This was not granted until some time in December, when it was too late to purchase the crop, had he desired to do so.

Personally I want to reiterate that I do not believe the Government should go in the sugar business or any other business. If we are justified in entering the grocery business because sugar is high, we should enter the shoe business, the clothing business, and every other line of industry in which there has been an increase. But we should not do it under the guise of exercising a war power when hostilities ceased a year and a half ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield to himself?

Mr. GOOD. I will not use over 20 minutes in which to explain the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries $52,892,016.93. It does seem in presenting a bill of this character, where we have had about 8 or 10 hours of general debate, that at least a few words ought to be spoken in explanation of the bill. I believe that the action of the House yesterday in finally determining the policy of Congress with regard to the enactment of appropriation bills will put a stop forever to a system that is so archaic and that ought to have been stopped long ago. I refer to the practice of permitting general debate upon appropriation bills, the debate reaching into all of the activities of the Government and into the activities of other governments and into private affairs of individuals, and most of it having nothing to do with the financial affairs of the Government of the United States. In the future, when the appropriation bill or the budget is presented to the House, around that bill there will center the great financial debates of Congress, and those debates will not only give the membership an intelligent idea of the whole financial scheme of the Government but will sober the judgment of Congress and will stop the enactment of legislation that will in the future mean still larger drafts upon the Treasury of the United States.

The total estimates submitted for the deficiencies amounted to $59,946,751.25. The bill carries $52,000,000, or a net reduction of $7,054,734.42 over the estimates. There are also estimates to be reappropriated of $68,582,291. The bill carries reappropriations of $56,600,000, practically all in the War Department.

There was estimated for the Federal Board for Vocational Education, $8,000,000. The bill carries $7,000,000. The Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation stated before the committee that the estimates had been made several weeks prior to the hearings, and that we could safely reduce the estimates by $1,000,000. And the committee, realizing that we are about to adjourn, felt that we could not cut this estimate much, if any, below what the Chief of the Division of Rehabilitation actually estimated would be required. Previously there had been appropriated for this year $30,000,000 for the rehabilitation work. I know the membership of the House will be interested to know what Congress has done since 1918 for the soldiers of this war. When you consider the rehabilitation work, the money expended for that, the compensation and family allowances, and the hospitalization of the soldiers of this war, with the appropriations carried in this bill and the appropriations carried in the sundry civil and other bills for next year, we will have appropriated since 1918, for and including the next fiscal year, $1,200,000,000 for the soldiers of this war.

There is included in the bill an item of $14,000,000 to pay for the loss of Federal control of the telephone and telegraph and cable systems. The Federal control of the wires extended from August 1, 1918, to July 31, 1919. During this period the revenues received amounted, in the grand total, to $446,117,390.86, and the expenses and taxes amounted to $377,834,425.96. It has netted an income of $86,282,964.90, or $11,455,566.84 less than the compensation under the terms of the settlement which has been agreed upon. In addition to this deficit, it is estimated that it will require $1,850,000 to settle the claims that are still pending, and the Postmaster General estimates that it will require $700,000 to pay the interest and costs on the amount from August 1, 1919, to the date of settlement. Of this total sum, $9,290,000 has been agreed upon.

And in this connection I think I should say the administration of the wire systems of the United States was a splendid administration of those systems. There was a billion or two of property involved, and the Postmaster General took over those properties and handled them in a manner that I think reflects great credit upon his executive ability, and he turned back the properties, not as we turned back the railroads, but he turned them back with only an increase of about 10 or 11 per cent in rates. But he turned them back in a condition so that those systems can now carry on their work without an additional increase in rates. But he did it, not by yielding to every demand for an increase in wage, whether it was necessary or not, but by following a business policy that ought to have been followed in every department of the Government. The Postmaster General is to be commended in the conduct of this wire system, for he carried on its operation in a manner that was satisfactory, I think, to the public, to the employees in the main, and without cost to the owners of the systems whose property he held. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does this item carry anything for the settlement of claims for judgments against these wires during the time they were under the control of the United States? The reason I ask that is that I am told by lawyers that no provision was made in the act that turned the possession of the wires back to their owners for suits for damages occurring during the time the Government was in control of the wires.

Mr. GOOD. I think there is some complaint, but there has been complaint made by only one of the companies, and that is by the Postal Telegraph Co. There is some complaint made with regard to that company, but that company has the possession of the money, and this amount that is estimated for here and appropriated has nothing at all to do with the controversy. That matter is still pending, and will have to be fought out in the courts, as I understand it.

Mr. McKEOWN. I refer particularly to the claims by third parties. There is no provision, as I understand, in the act to turn the wires back by which private persons, having suffered damages when the wires were under the control of the Government, can bring action, because there is no provision for service on the United States.

Mr. GOOD. That matter was not brought to the attention of the committee, and my understanding is that of this amount $9,290,170 has already been agreed upon in settlement with wire companies, and the Postmaster General expects to get agreements with the remaining claimants, the total of whose claims he expects to settle for $1,850,000. According to his testimony he expects to reach an amicable settlement with them all.

Now, it was estimated last winter that the Internal-Revenue Service would collect about $1,500,000,000 of excess profits and income taxes in addition to what was estimated originally by the Secretary of the Treasury. When it was discovered that such collections were being made on back taxes, the Secretary of the Treasury created a deficiency in order that a greater number of expert accountants could be put to work to examine the books of corporations and of individuals.

Quite a large additional sum has been brought into the Treasury, and there was a deficiency created by the employment of 500 or 600 employees—additional men in the field and some additional clerks in Washington—in order to bring that work up current. At least $250,000,000 additional taxes was brought into the Treasury in that way. It entailed a cost of about $1,250,000. The Internal Revenue Department has about $765,000 of an unexpended balance that was appropriated for the enforcement of the prohibition act that might be used for this purpose, and the bill carries authorizations to permit the department to use that for the payment of these salaries and also appropriates $535,000 additional.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Of the $52,000,000 embraced in this bill, will the chairman kindly tell us about how much is there that is unauthorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. I think it is all authorized.

Mr. BLANTON. My question is about how much of that sum is unauthorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think there is very much, if any, that is not authorized. I think it is a negligible amount. Certainly these principal amounts are authorized by law. Certainly the Secretary of the Treasury, if he found there were hundreds of millions of dollars that had escaped taxation and that by the employment of men he could bring that money into the Treasury, would be derelict, I think, in his duty if he did not hire the necessary men and require the taxpayers owing those taxes to pay them.

In the case of the Public Health Service we are undertaking the hospital treatment of our soldiers. No amount is fixed by law. They can expend any sum of money necessary to take care of them, and I am sure the gentleman will agree with me that the service would not be justified in doing otherwise, so long as the money is economically expended.

And that brings me to this item: We had an estimate of $3,000,000 for the Public Health Service for the hospitalization largely of the disabled and sick in the service. We found this to be the case: Of that $3,000,000 we estimated $1,000,000 for equipping certain hospitals, which had been turned over by the War Department to the Public Health Service, with beds and hospital equipment, and $500,000 to equip with beds, furniture, and hospital equipment the Speedway Hospital in Chicago. While the Secretary of War has the right to turn over surplus of such material to the Public Health Service, he claims that he has turned over all such surplus. But before arriving at what is the surplus, he set aside the war reserve for an army of a million men; and on investigation we found that that would require hospital beds and hospital equipment for 150,000 men and for officers sufficient to officer an army of a million men, which meant about 200,000 beds and other furniture and hospital equipment. It seemed to the committee—and we submit it to the judgment of the House—that in these times when the people are frowning upon hoarding the Government should not hoard to the extent of putting in warehouse beds and hospital equipment for an army of a million men, but that we should take 5 per cent of that or less and equip these hospitals and not be compelled to go into the market and buy this expensive furniture and equipment at these prevailing high prices. So in the bill we authorized the Secretary of War to allot out of his reserve not in excess of $1,000,000 of hospital furniture and supplies, and we give them the other $2,000,000, which practically makes provision for all that they ask in that regard.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Before you proceed, I would like to have you answer this question, if agreeable: There is pending in Congress a bill appropriating $175,000 to provide the means and machinery and facilities for paying the Civil War soldiers monthly. The bill only authorizes an appropriation. How soon could the gentleman's committee make an appropriation in the event that this bill passes under suspension of the rules this week? In other words, how soon could we get it into operation?

Mr. GOOD. We concluded the hearings on the bill about 10 days ago, and since that time we have been sending everyone to the Senate, because the House hearings were closed; and if the bill that the gentleman refers to should be agreed to to-day or to-morrow, there would be plenty of time to go before the Senate committee, where all items of that kind, items that we could not hear because they came in after we closed the hearings or where subsequent legislation requires an additional appropriation, can be taken care of. It is understood that the Senate committee is to put on those appropriations.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman knows of no opposition in the committee to making this appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. No; I know of none at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. Perhaps the gentleman from Iowa will yield for a question there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I wish to inquire as to whether the gentleman has any hope of this bill leaving the House before we adjourn to-night?

Mr. GOOD. This deficiency bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I think so. So far as I know there is nothing in the bill that will raise very much, if any, controversy.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the desire of the gentleman?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that is the intention of the committee.

Now, there is one item with regard to the loss in transportation facilities on inland waterways. Section 201 of the transportation act provided that the inland waterways and such equipment as had been acquired by the Railroad Administration should be transferred to the Secretary of War and that the Secretary of War should provide for the operation of the inland waterways. That refers to the New York State Barge Canal, the Warrior River, and the Mississippi River.

The losses in operation on the inland waterways during the four months are estimated at $270,000. An additional amount was asked for, but the committee simply held down the item to the actual amount of loss, so far as we could ascertain it. Of course, practically one month remains of this fiscal year, and to that extent the losses have been predicated upon the amount of the loss for the preceding three months.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has used 20 minutes of his time.

Mr. DUNBAR. Can the gentleman state the amount of the deficit for the entire year?

Mr. GOOD. I do not recall the amount for the entire year. The first eight months of the year the deficit came under the Railroad Administration. It is estimated that next year the losses will amount to about $750,000,000.

Mr. DUNBAR. That is on the Mississippi River and the Black Warrior?

Mr. GOOD. And the New York State Barge Canal.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the New York State Barge Canal to be operated under the system, as before, under which permission was refused to make rates low enough to attract traffic?

Mr. GOOD. That will be operated under section 201 of the transportation act. All of these waterways that were turned over will be operated under that provision. So far as I know there is no difference in the law governing the three projects.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will remember that a large portion of the loss on the New York Barge Canal resulted from the fact that the rates were so manipulated that they could not take freight both ways.

Mr. GOOD. I can not give the gentleman the details. That item for next year as carried in the sundry civil bill was put on in the Senate. The House did not have an opportunity to investigate it closely, the estimates having come in after we had closed our hearings, and, in fact, after the bill went through the House. But in going through the letter of the Secretary of War I observed that the estimated loss for next year on the total project was about $750,000,000. The total loss in the operation of the New York Canal for March, April, May, and June is estimated at $50,394.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What is the amount carried in this bill to pay the deficiency in the telephone and telegraph operations?

Mr. GOOD. The amount carried in the bill is $14,000,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is that the amount asked for by the Postmaster General?

Mr. GOOD. The Postmaster General asked for $14,005,564, but of that there was $700,000 interest, and we knew the Postmaster General well enough to know that at least $5,000 would be saved out of that appropriation. I think likely he will not need it all.

Now, there is also an estimate of $8,000,000 for the transportation of the mail by the railroad companies.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has made its report with regard to increase in the pay of railroad companies for carrying the mails. That increase will amount to something around $25,000,000 a year. For the balance of this year the total amount estimated was $8,000,000. It is a matter over which the committee can exercise no judgment. It is a matter absolutely fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Postmaster General must pay this award.

There is $1,600,000 carried in the bill for increase in the star routes for inland transportation.

Last year the contracts for transportation on star routes were made in the West, and this year they were made in the South. It was found that the Post Office Department could not get men to carry the mail on the star routes at anything like the amount of their former contracts.

The amount carried in the Post Office appropriation bill was the amount estimated on the basis of former contracts, but in many of these cases it was found necessary to increase this amount by all the way from 25 to 50 per cent. The Postmaster General says that the very least he can get along with for the rest of this year to pay for the contracts and the increases in contracts on inland transportation of mail by star routes is $1,600,000.

There are some other minor items. There is also one large item for transporting and recruiting the Navy in 1919 and 1920, amounting to $9,735,000.

As I recall, at the beginning of the fiscal year there was quite a force in the Navy that was being demobilized. The transportation of those boys to their homes created a deficit somewhere between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000. That is an actual deficit and must be paid.

If any question is raised as to other items, I shall explain them as we reach them in the bill. I will ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMERICAN PRINTING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND.

To enable the American Printing House for the Blind more adequately to provide books and apparatus for the education of the blind in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 4, 1919, $10,000.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for not exceeding 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, I would like to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I hope gentlemen will withhold that request. We have had nine hours' debate, in accordance with an understanding between the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and myself. When we get to the end of the bill, I shall not object to gentlemen proceeding out of order, but I hope that gentlemen will withhold that request at this time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understand the chairman to mean that from now on there will be no extraneous debate.

Mr. GOOD. I hope to hold the debate strictly to the items of the bill. We must do that if we are going to adjourn in accordance with the resolution, and I hope the membership will bear with us while we have the bill read as quickly as possible consistent with proper procedure.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

SALARIES.

District of Columbia employees' compensation fund: For carrying out the provisions of section 11 of the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved July 11, 1919, extending to the employees of the government of the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, $500.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after line 10, insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

"For increased compensation to 2,073 teachers in the public schools of the District of Columbia who have been employed as teachers in said schools for the period from January 1 to the end of the school year in June, 1920, the sum of $405,468: Provided, That payment of said sum is hereby directed to be made to the teachers in the following grades and in the following sums: (1) Three hundred and fifty-nine teachers in group A of class 6, including 7 principals of grade manual schools, the sum of $228 each; (2) 152 teachers in class 5, the sum of $120 each; (3) 511 teachers in class 4, the sum of $180 each; (4) 543 teachers in class 3, the sum of $204 each; (5) 374 teachers in class 2, the sum of $204 each; (6) 92 teachers in class 1, the sum of $204 each; (7) 42 teachers in class 6 B, the sum of $180 each.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane and not authorized by law.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Will the chairman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. GOOD. I will for a minute.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the teachers of the public schools of the District of Columbia are grateful and appreciate the financial relief provided by the District of Columbia appropriation bill, but the relief is not available for the teaching force until October, 1920, and the cost of living has so increased, even during the past winter, that many teachers have been unable to meet expenses and now under a burden of debt are facing several months which bring no remuneration.

The primary reason for granting an immediate temporary relief to the teachers of the District of Columbia is in the interests of the 60,000 school children of the District. Unless such relief is granted many of the best teachers can not remain in the schools another year, and those who do remain must work under the depressing influence of feeling that their services are not appreciated and that as compared with teachers in other cities and those in other vocations they are not getting a square deal. [Applause.]

The highest degree of efficiency can not be maintained in any line of service unless the proper spirit is maintained among those who perform the actual work involved. This is true with respect to those who deal only with material things, but it is infinitely more important with respect to those who deal with the impressionable minds of children. A competent, successful teacher who is happy and contented in her work is an invaluable asset to any school. The same teacher depressed, discouraged, and discontented is a liability.

The teachers will get their last pay checks for the school year in June and will not draw their next pay until the 1st of October. It will be impossible for very many of them to bridge over until next fall without engaging in other work in order to meet living expenses. This will necessitate their beginning another school year tired and worn out, instead of being well rested, as they should be, for the severe nervous strain incident to teaching the children committed to their charge.

The arguments in support of the granting by Congress of an immediate temporary relief to the teachers of the District of Columbia are the same as have influenced boards of education in a score of the cities of the United States to grant an increase. The economic conditions existing in Washington are similar to those existing in other cities. The salaries paid in other cities during the past year have, as a rule, been larger than the salaries paid in the District of Columbia. Congress should do as well by the teachers of Washington as has been done by boards of education in other cities. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the committee went out of its way in the hearings in increasing the teachers' pay. We were in sympathy with the teachers and realized that during the war they had not had the increase in wages that other Federal employees had had; that their wages did not compare with the wages of clerks paid in the various departments. There were clerks that could not teach school because they did not have the mental capacity to teach who were receiving much larger wages than the teachers, but it was not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations to bring out any appropriation in this bill for a deficit. The total amount provided for teachers as authorized by law has already been appropriated. There was not an estimate from the District Commissioners, or a single person connected with the District government, for a penny in this bill for the teachers. Therefore I am constrained to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Municipal court: For contingent expenses, including books, law books, books of reference, fuel, light, telephone, blanks, dockets, and all other necessary miscellaneous items and supplies, $1,200.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I intended to make a point of order to the paragraph on page 8, but with the speed of the reading clerk it got by without my notice. I want to call the attention of the chairman to this fact: I notice in this deficiency bill of 64 pages that 12 pages are devoted to the District of Columbia. It impresses me with the fact that either the District authorities are peculiarly unfortunate in their ability to foresee what their needs will be for a few months in advance or they deliberately withhold from the District Committee a part of their needs, with the idea of going to the deficiency committee after they have got all they can from the District subcommittee.

In the bill before us the only District item that seems to be available for 1921 is the item on page 8, which the Clerk has passed. I want to take this opportunity to call it to the attention of the chairman, with the hope that he may care to give some expression as to how he would look upon adding a great number of important items for the year 1921 for the District to this deficiency bill. I assume that the chairman of the committee would make a point of order against any large number of items for 1921 that might be offered to the District portion of the bill——

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman means in regard to items that might be put on at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is what I refer to; they would be subject to a point of order if offered here, but if the bill should come back with a large portion of the District appropriation bill on it, how would the chairman of the committee view it?

Mr. GOOD. I think it would be an unwise thing for the other body to do. I think that the other body ought to act on the bill that is in conference, and this bill should not be loaded down with anything of that kind.

Mr. CRAMTON. It would hardly be in harmony with our new budget system.

Mr. GOOD. It would not, and I would not look with favor upon anything of that kind.

The Clerk read as follows:

Industrial Home School: For maintenance, including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $1,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky rose.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rose to move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARD. I was about to inquire whether the Clerk is reading the bill. He apparently jumped to paragraphs on the top of page 11 and then to one on the middle of the page.

Mr. BLANTON. That is scientific reading.

Mr. GARD. If it is being read for amendment, the bill ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is in charge of this bill, what is meant by the three words "and so forth," in line 12, page 11. The language reads:

For board and care of all children, and so forth.

Who is to be included in that care other than children?

Mr. GOOD. Nobody at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But this says, "children and so forth."

Mr. GOOD. It refers to the District of Columbia act—including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia appropriation act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. CRAMTON. The "and so forth" does not apply to the word "children," but to the board and care.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does not say that. It says:

For board and care of all children, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Then what is the comma there for?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to know what it means.

Mr. GOOD. The way that was originally written was—

For board and care of all children committed to the guardianship of said board by the courts of the District and for temporary care of children pending investigation, while being transferred from place to place,

The commissioners in submitting their estimates simply shortened it up and had the estimate read "for board and care of all children, and so forth."

The words "and so forth" refer to the language that was carried in the former appropriation, and were intended to shorten it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No doubt it is intended to do that, but inasmuch as it does not do it——

Mr. GOOD. It is further described in the three remaining lines.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does not mean that anybody other than children may be supported with this fund?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Authority is granted to pay, in addition to the sum of $1,500 heretofore authorized, a further sum not to exceed $5,000, during the fiscal year 1920, to institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman with reference to the language in lines 18 and 19, "to institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control."

Mr. GOOD. That is the Board of Children's Guardians.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Do they render judgments?

Mr. GOOD. They determine the institution to which the children shall be assigned, and the present act provides that only $1,500 could be expended in caring for children in sectarian institutions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The language is "institutions adjudged to be under sectarian control."

That means they are adjudged to be, I imagine, by some court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. GOOD. I think that word "adjudged" means they are found to be such. It is the judgment of the Board of Children's Guardians that is referred to rather than the judgment of a court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And it means those that are found to be under sectarian control and not adjudged to be.

Mr. GOOD. I think, perhaps, that would be a better wording, but this is the way the appropriation has been carried for years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It occurs to me that this fund, under this language, can not be used until some such institution has been adjudged to be under sectarian control. That word "adjudged" has a well-defined meaning in all proceedings.

Mr. GOOD. They can pay it now to any institution that is not under sectarian control. This is the situation: Only $1,500 of the appropriation that has been made for the current year can be used for the purpose of caring for children that are in institutions that are under sectarian control. That amount has been found to be inadequate, because there are not enough institutions not under sectarian control with sufficient capacity to take care of these children. They must place them somewhere, and they are placing them in institutions under sectarian control, and they need authority for $5,000 more for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am quite familiar with all that the gentleman has said, but if he leaves the language in there as it is, that none of the sectarian institutions can get any of this money until it has been adjudged to be a sectarian institution, I think they can not get the money without being so adjudged by a court.

Mr. GOOD. It does not have to be adjudged by a court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think it does. It says so. It says they must be adjudged to be under sectarian control.

Mr. GOOD. I think the word "adjudged" is an unfortunate word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think so.

Mr. GOOD. It would be better if the commissioners had said—institutions found to be, by the Board of Childrens' Guardians, under sectarian control.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. So that these institutions may get this money over the quibble of anybody, would it not be well to strike out the three words "adjudged to be," so that the $5,000 would go to institutions under sectarian control?

Mr. GOOD. This is the exact language that the appropriation has carried for years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But that does not cure the difficulty.

Mr. GOOD. Unless I am assured that there would be some abuse, I would not be inclined to change it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But how does the gentleman know that before this money is dealt out to one of these institutions some pestiferous fellow is not going to enjoin its being paid out?

Mr. GOOD. Well, they have never been so far.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then the question will arise that it can not be paid to any institution until adjudged to be under sectarian control.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEGG. Can not the word "adjudged" be used only in connection with a court?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not on a legislative matter it can not be. I say that only to invite the attention of the chairman to it. I feel in doubt if the question is raised but that the money appropriated will fail to reach its purpose.

Mr. GOOD. There has been no trouble in the past, and I think there will be no trouble in the future.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There can be no trouble in the future if you strike out those words.

The Clerk read as follows:

One-half of the foregoing amounts to meet deficiencies in the appropriations on account of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Before leaving this section relating to the District of Columbia deficiencies I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. I notice from the report of the committee that the committee has failed to make an appropriation for repairs of the suburban roads in the District, for which the District Commissioners asked some $20,000, and I would like to ask the chairman why some provision was not made for taking care of the roads which are in bad repair in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GOOD. There is no question but what the District suburban roads are in bad condition. There is no question but what the District Commissioners have adopted a very poor system of making repairs. It is the opinion of some members on the District Committee that a great deal of the money that is appropriated for this very purpose is wasted. Take the road out to Chevy Chase. The District of Columbia keeps the road repaired on both sides of the street car track and they let the street car company do just as it pleases, and it dumps rock in the center, and after every rain the rock is washed over in the road that the District of Columbia keeps in repair, and by permitting the street car company to dump rock between the tracks they keep the automobiles off from that portion of the road. It seems that the District Commissioners allow the street car companies practically to control them with regard to these suburban roads where there is a street car running. We called their attention very sharply to it, and until they show some disposition to spend money in a businesslike way with regard to these roads and make the public utilities corporations do their part we are going to hold them down somewhat if we can. [Applause.] Now, with regard to the roads leading to suburban roads we gave them $35,000 for the rest of this year.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Does the gentleman think that is sufficient?

Mr. GOOD. I am afraid that is not as much as they ought to have in accordance with the price of material, and I hope that next year they will have more, but a great deal is going to depend on the attitude of the District of Columbia. The trouble with the District of Columbia is that it wants the improvement of existing property without the payment of taxes. [Applause.] They want their roads and they want the people of the United States to be taxed to build the roads. Maryland has some good roads and everywhere a road from Maryland meets a road from the District of Columbia there is somebody there ready to arrest a man who has lost his tag and has an automobile, and on the most of their roads the repairs are paid for because the State of Maryland does not do the humane and sensible thing by recognizing, as other States recognize, the right of a person who has an automobile and has a license in one State to go over the roads of Maryland. [Applause.] Let Maryland and the District of Columbia do what is fair and honest and right in regard to the repairs of roads and with regard to taxes and there will be no difficulty in getting all the money you need to make the roads of the District of Columbia ideal roads, just as they ought to be.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman took up most of my time and I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for this further observation?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; but I would like to answer the gentleman from Iowa first.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is just a brief suggestion, that the suburban roads, and I travel them considerable, in the District of Columbia are not in such a condition as to constitute such an emergency as would justify an item for their improvement in a deficiency bill.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will touch on that. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am rather surprised at the statement made by the distinguished chairman of this committee. I voted yesterday to concentrate in a committee of 35 all the power of making appropriations, but I am frank to say that if the committee of 35 displays such a lack of knowledge of conditions as has been displayed here to-day by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I believe that the concentration of this enormous power in this committee will be ill advised. Now, as to the statement made as to the public-service corporations ruining the roads by washing stone from the middle of the track, that is not the trouble with the suburban roads in the District. The trouble with Connecticut Avenue, to which the gentleman refers, is that it is the most heavily traveled road in the District of Columbia; and under the appropriations that have been made the District Commissioners have been spending 20 cents per square yard for road maintenance each year, and the District Commissioners came before the Committee on Appropriations and asked for an appropriation to pave Connecticut Avenue at a cost of $1 per square yard, so in five years the road would pay for itself. This great Committee on Appropriations did not give a cent to repave, and when the matter got over to the Senate the Senate appropriated sufficient money to pave one side of Connecticut Avenue only; and then they come in and ask for the small sum of $20,000 to put these suburban roads in repair, and the committee turns them down and make a report that they have saved $20,000 for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. In just a moment. I do not agree with what the distinguished gentleman said about the people of the District of Columbia not wanting to pay for these roads or for the expense of government.

I believe that the people of the District of Columbia would be satisfied to pay a fair tax rate and have these repairs made, notwithstanding the statements that have been made to the contrary. As a matter of fact, the reference the gentlemen made to the State of Maryland is certainly not well founded. According to the statement made by the chairman, he wants the State of Maryland to allow the residents of the District of Columbia, in return for the privilege of riding over a few miles of roadbed that is to-day equivalent to riding over the roadbed of a mountain stream, the privilege of riding over our 1,400 miles of modern highway which are maintained by the automobile fees which he complains about. I make the statement that you can travel from Washington to the Maryland line near Uniontown, Pa., a distance of 200 miles, and that the worst road in all that distance you will find is located here in the Nation's Capital, and I say it is a sad reflection on the committee that makes appropriations for this purpose that such a condition exists.

Mr. GOOD. The people of Maryland come into the District of Columbia, and ride over paved streets, and they pay no license.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. They pay for a license tag, the same as we ask of the residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I have one on my own machine. If you come into the District of Columbia from Maryland without a tag you are immediately apprehended by a policeman and asked where your District tag is. The same relation exists between the District and the State of Maryland as the State of Maryland maintains toward the District.

Mr. CRAMTON. One-half of Connecticut Avenue is provided for in the District bill which is now in conference, and the gentleman knows and will admit the fact that the bill is held up in conference because of the local opposition here to the increase in taxation that will enable the necessary improvements to roads and schools to be made.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not agree with that. It is the influence of the United States Senate and not local influence.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows there is intimate connection there.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows that the Appropriations Committee will be delighted to appropriate all the money of the District, with a fair amount from the Federal Treasury, for improvements in the District, but there is a large and influential element in the District that insists they must never pay any more taxes than in the days when it was a village.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that the reason the District of Columbia requires the automobiles from Maryland to have a District license tag on them is for the very reason mentioned by the chairman a moment ago—that there is no reciprocity with the State of Maryland?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Would you have reciprocity with 1,400 miles of improved highway in return for the privilege of riding over a few miles of rough roads here in the District?

Mr. BLANTON. It is true in every other State. They can come down to the State of Texas and never be stopped. There is reciprocity between the State in which I live and every other State of the Union, and there should be in every State.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say that the State of Maryland maintains reciprocal relations with the great State of Texas and every other State in the Union. It does not maintain them with the District of Columbia, because the District of Columbia, under the system that has been built up, does not provide any roads for the use of automobilists, and we have a license fee in Maryland now that we collect from the residents of the District, and every dollar is spent in the maintenance of roads; not the construction. The construction has been entirely by bond issues, on which the people pay both the interest and into the principal for a sinking fund.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Adams County, Pa., in which Gettysburg is located, has not improved roads, but they run up to the fine roads of your State. Do you require them to have a license when people come into Maryland in automobiles?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. We do not.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Then why do you ask it of the people of the District of Columbia?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Pennsylvania has many miles of good roads of its own.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MACCRATE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate No. 7 to the bill (H. R. 406) amending an act entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., certain public lands in California; and granting rights in, over, and through the Sierra forest reserve, the Santa Barbara forest reserve, and the San Gabriel timberland reserve, California, to the city of Los Angeles, Calif.," approved June 30, 1906.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Vocational rehabilitation: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, funeral and other incidental expenses (including the transportation of remains) of deceased trainees of the board, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, law books, books of reference, and periodicals, $7,000,000: Provided, That the salary limitations placed upon the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation by the sundry civil appropriation act, approved July 19, 1919, shall apply to the appropriation herein made.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARD. I want to obtain some information as to this blanket appropriation. How much of this appropriation for vocational rehabilitation is paid out for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere?

Mr. GOOD. Quite a large sum is paid out for personal services. Just what proportion of it is paid out for personal services in the District of Columbia I do not know that I can tell the gentleman. All the facts are printed in a table in the hearings on the sundry civil appropriation bill, but I do not have that before me now. My recollection—and it is only a hazy recollection—is that about nine months ago, when the appropriation was about $12,000,000, the expenditure for personal services was on the basis of about 30 per cent, but since the number that comes under the control of the Board for Vocational Education has been increased my understanding is that the percentage is very largely decreased, so far as concerns the expense of officers and clerical help, so that I should say that of the $37,000,000 that will be available for this year perhaps 10 or 15 per cent would be available for officers and clerical help.

Mr. GARD. I realize, of course, that a very large part of this must be paid for some sort of clerical help, and the particular sort of clerical help that I referred to in seeking information was the office clerk and organization help, because I think everybody would very willingly join in very great expenditures for teachers and everybody who was capable of affording vocational rehabilitation to disabled persons discharged from the military and naval service. But there is an increasing desire, apparently, on the part of the departments here in the District of Columbia to expand, and I was wondering whether the gentleman had, without any undue research on his part at this time, information to give to the committee as to how much was now spent in the District of Columbia by this organization in the maintenance of the clerical force and officers in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I am sorry that I can not give the gentleman an exact statement.

Mr. GARD. I am not finding fault. I am just seeking information.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not accuse the gentleman of finding fault, but I do not think the board should be subject to criticism in that regard, because they have made a very drastic reduction in the total amounts paid to personal help of all kinds as compared with the total expenditures. Within the District of Columbia, although the work has very largely increased, I think there has been within the last six months or so no increase whatever in the personnel.

Mr. GARD. What is now the total appropriation, including the $7,000,000 deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. Thirty-seven million dollars for the year.

Mr. TOWNER. But it will have to be largely increased, I will say to the gentleman, for the next year.

Mr. GOOD. The amount carried in the sundry civil bill for the next year is $90,000,000, and that amount has been agreed to by the conferees on the part of the Senate and on the part of the House.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman state what proportion of that goes to overhead charges, office help, and clerical assistance?

Mr. GOOD. I can not say.

Mr. TOWNER. It will be very largely reduced in proportion, because most of the expense goes to the compensation of the men and the increased cost of hospital service and the service of examining physicians and matters of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL CONTROL OF TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE SYSTEMS.

For payment of the deficit incurred in the operation of the telegraph and telephone systems during the period of Government control and to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 16, 1918, and the act approved July 11, 1919, with reference to just compensation to the owners of the telegraph and telephone systems for the supervision, possession, control, and operation of their properties by the United States during the period beginning midnight, July 31, 1918, and ending midnight, July 31, 1919, $14,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1921.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I have no information about the item under consideration, except that I have just been handed a telegram from an officer of the Postal Telegraph Co., which discloses a very extraordinary situation, one which, it seems to me, calls for a pretty full and satisfactory explanation before we agree to this item. I will read the telegram:

NEW YORK CITY, June 2, 1920.

Hon. JAMES W. HUSTED,
Washington, D. C.:

There is included in the general deficiency bill now being considered by House an appropriation of $14,000,000 to make up the losses incurred by Postmaster General Burleson during his control of telegraphs and telephone. The very large part of this $14,000,000 goes to Burleson's favorites, the Bell Telephone and Western Union Cos., and does not represent losses, but merely the difference between what they earned and what Burleson awarded them as compensation. We claim that those companies should be satisfied with what they earned and in these times have no right to call on the Treasury of the United States to pay them more than they earned, especially as Burleson increased their rates for them by about $41,000,000 per annum. The Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., on the other hand, is satisfied to keep merely what it earned, but Burleson says he proposes to sue that company for $2,000,000 of its earnings. By what principle of justice and equity the Postal Co. is to be sued for $2,000,000 of its earnings while the Bell and Western Union are to be paid more than their earnings we can not understand. We respectfully suggest that no action be taken by Congress in this $14,000,000 appropriation until the matter is examined into further and until this apparent injustice to the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., which was singled out by Burleson for persecution, is cleared up. I would appreciate it if you could oppose the above appropriation on the floor of the House.

EDWARD REYNOLDS,
Vice President and General Manager
Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.

I would like to ask the chairman if he can throw any light on this controversy?

Mr. GOOD. Practically all of the wire lines in the United States were taken over by the Government, and the Government exercised control over them from the 1st day of August, 1918, to the 31st day of July, 1919. The wire companies were allowed to keep all of their revenue and to pay out of that the expense of operation. They practically were left in the control, in a sense, of their own property, the Federal Government exercising supervisory control only. Now, each company kept its own money; that is, money received from operation. It happens that the Postal Telegraph Co. has lines in a few large cities and in comparatively few small towns. It goes to very few of the small cities or towns or villages. Its earnings are very large as compared with the miles of lines. It happens that under the rate fixed by the Postmaster General under the act passed by Congress the receipts of the Postal Co. were largely in excess of the operating expenses and the amount due it for compensation by the standard established; but the rates fixed under the law for the other lines were not sufficient, largely because of injunctions that prevented an increase in rates. Now, what the Postal Co. wants, as I understand it, is that we shall withhold payment from the Bell Co. and other companies because they did not earn enough to pay expenses of operation and rentals agreed upon until Congress says that the Postal Co. shall be permitted to keep all it received during the war. That is the controversy. As to the merits of the controversy, I am not sufficiently informed to pass judgment. I can understand just how it feels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Now, the committee did not see how it could take jurisdiction of that controversy at all. It is in the courts. The Postmaster General has caused suit to be brought against the Postal Co., or intends to do so, to recover from it the excess of receipts over the amount which it is claimed it is entitled to under the law and the amount allowed. I know very little about the controversy.

Mr. HUSTED. Did the Committee on Appropriations go carefully into the details of this arrangement between the Postmaster General and the Western Union and Bell Telephone Co. lines, so as to determine with any reasonable degree of certainty that the Government justly owes this amount of $14,000,000 to these companies?

Mr. GOOD. We went into the matter as carefully as the time would permit. Of course, if we went into all these properties, involving a total investment of $1,000,000,000 or $1,500,000,000, we would be here for months, and maybe for years, if a single committee were to do that. We went into it to the extent that the Postmaster General put in the figures of the various amounts—the amount they had received for conducting the business and the shortage. Now, whether those accounts are correct I have no knowledge at all, and, of course, we could not have unless we spent months of time. We adopted the same course followed by the last Congress as well as this regarding the railroads.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no question about the Postmaster General having the authority to make the contract.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that, under whatever regulations or statutes the Postmaster General made these arrangements, it is apparent that gross injustice might easily be done. It strikes me that it is a most extraordinary situation that one public-service corporation should be asked to pay $2,000,000 into the Treasury of the Government and the other corporations be given $14,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield to me, I think I can give him some information.

Mr. HUSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. When the question was up before the Post Office Committee with a view of returning the control of the wires to their owners, a thorough investigation was made. That investigation disclosed that the Postmaster General entered into a contract with the Western Union and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. under which the Government guaranteed the payment of the dividends that were then being paid by the companies or that had been paid prior to Government control. This was without respect to the value of the property. But when it came to the Postal Telegraph Co.'s lines, the Postmaster General fixed a value on the property in connection with which he directed the payment of a 6 per cent dividend, if I recall, leaving the Postal Telegraph Co. to draw only $1,800,000 of the $4,000,000 which they had earned, and the other $2,200,000 was used to pay the losses of the Western Union Co.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard any very satisfactory explanation, and I think the explanation should be complete before we agree to turn over $14,000,000 to the treasury of the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Bell Telephone Co., when we are credibly informed by an officer of the Postal Telegraph Co. that the Postmaster General proposes to take $2,000,000 out of the pockets of that company; and as this explanation has not been very satisfactory—at least it does not satisfy my mind—I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Did the gentleman state by whom that communication was signed?

Mr. HUSTED. The communication is from the vice president and general manager of the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. His name is Edward Reynolds.

Mr. OLIVER. Is it not a fact that in the operation of the railroads some railroads earned money and others lost money?

Mr. HUSTED. That is true; but does not apply to this situation. Here both companies apparently made money.

Mr. OLIVER. And that the excess earnings of one company were used to pay the losses of other companies.

Mr. HUSTED. The Western Union Telegraph Co. made money while they were under the control of the Government. They did not lose any money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 13, beginning with line 22, strike out the paragraph ending with line 9, on page 14.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 23 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 23 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, I should like to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

Mr. GOOD. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Then I will object to the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can give the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] the information he desires, but certainly the hearings will disclose some very interesting facts in connection with the case of the Postal Telegraph Co. If the gentleman will refer to pages 239 and 240 of the hearings, he will see that the statement of the Postmaster General is that under Federal control there was allowed to these companies an award of 5.64 per cent of the investment in plant, while the aggregate net revenues of the same companies were 6.69 per cent for the year 1916 and 5.98 per cent for the year 1917.

Unlike the railroad bill, which provided specifically the basis upon which the compensation should be fixed, the act providing for the taking over of the telephone and telegraph companies simply provided for "just compensation," which "just compensation" was to be fixed by the President under the act of Congress. In ascertaining the amount of the awards to be made the net earnings on invested capital for three or four years prior to the war had to be ascertained. In ascertaining the net revenue an investigation was made as to each company involved. An effort was made to ascertain the invested capital of the Postal Telegraph Co., and the Postal officials refused to allow the Post Office Department to examine their books. Resorting to the sworn statement of the Postal Telegraph Co. before the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Post Office Department found that the net earnings of the 39 companies constituting this system are represented as being $332,000 in 1916 and only $117,000 in 1917.

Now, having sworn to that statement before the Interstate Commerce Commission, in response to a questionnaire of the Post Office Department asking for data to enable them to make an award in this matter the Postal Telegraph Co. furnished a sworn statement claiming that the net earnings of the company for the same period was $4,157,670.44 instead of $332,000. And they claimed it was $4,485,000 for 1917 instead of the $117,000 that they had sworn to before the Interstate Commerce Commission as the earnings for 1917.

The sworn statement of the Postal Telegraph Co. before the Interstate Commerce Commission placed upon their property a valuation of $6,647,472. The best information available to the Post Office Department estimated the value of their property to be approximately $28,000,000, and they based their awards on that estimated valuation, more than four times the valuation placed upon it before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It was difficult for the Post Office Department to make an intelligent award, realizing that the sworn statement before the Interstate Commerce Commission was only one-quarter of the amount sworn to in response to the question, and they asked permission to examine the books of the telegraph company. That permission was refused. The Department suggested that if the Postal Co. was dissatisfied with its award that a friendly suit be brought to determine whether it was "just" compensation, and they refused this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, I wish to be recognized for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be coupled with the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I object.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I simply want to call attention to the appropriation of $14,000,000 for the Western Union Co., and to emphasize the fact that there is an apparent willingness on the part of the House to pass this appropriation without protestation from anybody, particularly from the Democratic side of the House. I remember last Saturday we had a regular bedlam over the fact that we wanted to appropriate about ten times the amount for the American soldiers, or one and a half billion dollars, to pay a bonus. Here comes a proposition to pay one-tenth of that amount to the telegraph company in one lump sum.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman had better get his percentages correct.

Mr. TEMPLE. It is one hundred times as much.

Mr. BEGG. One hundred times is right.

Mr. MAPES. The principle is the same.

Mr. BEGG. The principle is identically the same. It does not make any difference. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the very men who are the proponents of this proposition are the men who fought most aggressively the proposition for a bonus for the soldiers.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised at the gentleman's protest. He is one of the men that I am speaking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the gentleman from Ohio will confine himself to a discussion of the amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I think I am close enough to the amendment. It is close enough at least to cause some Members to protest vigorously. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe that we can do a worse thing than to continue to do just what we have done time and again, and that is to appropriate millions and hundreds of millions of dollars when the chairman of the committee asking for the appropriation comes out and makes the statement to the House that he does not know whether the facts are accurate or not beyond the statement of a department head, who does not give the details. We do not have any protests from outside interests to-day on this bill, save one, while on the other bill of similar nature they came in here by the hundreds, according to some people. It seems to me it is a clear case, a bona fide case, of a willingness on the part of the Postmaster General who made this contract to give something for which he did not receive any value. I for one, so far as my vote goes or so far as any influence or any word that I can say is concerned, protest against that kind of legislative action, after listening for a whole year to the statement that the Treasury of the United States is almost in a defunct condition financially, after having letters read from different department heads asking us not to make this and that kind of appropriation.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Is the gentleman in favor of passing this bill under suspension of the rules?

Mr. BEGG. No; I am not.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I know nothing about the merits of this proposition. It may be absolutely all right for all I know, but it has not been satisfactorily explained. It is a very extraordinary proposition. It looks to me as if the Postal Telegraph Co. were being penalized simply because it is a well-managed corporation, and that the Western Union Telegraph Co., probably because it has a very large debt, is being remunerated by the Government of the United States to the extent of $14,000,000, although it suffered no losses. If it had suffered some losses during the war, I would feel differently about it, but it has not suffered any loss. This is simply an addition of $14,000,000 to its profits, and why one company should be remunerated $14,000,000 and another company penalized $2,000,000 simply because it is well managed and well organized and on a sound business basis I do not understand, and I do not believe any gentleman can explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am not interested in the Postal Telegraph Co., and I do not care to say very much about the controversy of the Government with the Postal Co., except this: If the Government takes over the business of a corporation and fixes the rates which it can charge, and which are presumably reasonable rates, and then the matter goes to the courts, the courts will take care of it, and I think the Postal Telegraph Co. will be taken care of.

Consequently, I am not much interested in the Postal Co. But here is an item of $14,000,000 that is to be paid to the Western Union Telegraph Co., about which our friends on the Appropriations Committee, who told us yesterday they would like to take on a little more business than they have now, do not seem to be able to give us much information. Apparently the Postmaster General made a contract with the Western Union Telegraph Co. He had authority so to do, but he did not have authority to make any kind of contract he wanted to. That is perfectly plain, and it does not need any explanation. What kind of contract did he make? I do not know, and the gentleman does not seem to know, and he does not seem to know whether they had any authority to make it, and nevertheless——

Mr. GOOD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I stated that it was made in pursuance of an act of Congress that both of us voted for.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No such contract as has been stated here was made in pursuance of any act of Congress. The act of Congress that provided for taking over the telegraph did not specify what kind of contract could be made.

Mr. GOOD. That is exactly what was done.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I insist it is not, nor can the gentleman find any such law.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman can find the information stated time and again, that it is based on the net income of the companies for the three fiscal years, just as it was in the case of the railroads.

Mr. TEMPLE. Fixed by law.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Fixed by act of Congress. It gave to the President power to fix just compensation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman had better look at the law. There is no such act or statute. I insist that the Postmaster General had no authority to make a contract based on the earnings of the companies for the last three fiscal years. Such an assertion simply shows how little the Appropriations Committee know about what they are appropriating $14,000,000 for. Apparently they have not given the matter any proper attention, and I support the motion of the gentleman from New York to strike out the paragraph.

Incidentally, I want to call attention to the fact that this loss is caused by the administration taking over the lines after the war was over. Government operation may cost us $14,000,000 without causing the slightest benefit. In fact, it seems to have been done merely that the President might control the cables. It is merely another item of Democratic waste.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this matter of the Government control of telephones and telegraphs came before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in the last Congress, and we had extensive hearings on it when we considered the resolution requested by the Post Office Department to continue Government control. I want to say that I am not satisfied with this appropriation. In the first place, the Postmaster General, I believe, was in some sort of an understanding with these big telegraph and telephone companies—the Western Union and the American Telegraph & Telephone Co.—to take them over. The evidence of that is that Mr. Vail had for many years been preaching the unification of all the telegraph and telephone companies. He claimed it was a business that should not have competition in it. The Postmaster General, for a long time, had been ardently advocating Government ownership and control, exclusive control, of all these facilities of communication, and behold, when the war was nearly over, in July, 1918, they secured the passage of this resolution, without any reason being given, to take over all these telegraph and telephone companies. It was recited in the resolution that they should have just compensation, but there was no provision like there was in regard to railroad control that they should be adjusted on a prewar basis of earnings at all. That was adopted simply because they chose to do so. Now, why did they adopt it? Because the Postmaster General selected as his advisers Mr. Vail and Mr. Bethel and Mr. Carlton, president of the Western Union, the men who get $10,000,000 out of this $14,000,000. They were what are called dollar-a-year men, patriotically, as is claimed, serving the Government. They were his advisers. It so happens, however, that the course followed under this advice was very profitable to the advisers. Now, it is true that they did not fix the compensation themselves.

Prof. Adams and Prof. Friday fixed the compensation. But it was done under certain rules and principles which were laid down to them, and they were the principles laid down by the Postmaster General, presumably after consultation with the principal beneficiaries, such as Vail and Carlton, who are getting $10,000,000 here out of the Public Treasury, in addition to the $40,000,000 that they received for increased rates imposed by the Postmaster General upon the public. That is what they are getting out of the operation, and it is the most unfair and unjust and indefensible claim that has even been brought before the House of Representatives. [Applause.] It is true that they entered into these contracts without any specific statutory authority to do so, but they did it because of the analogy, they say, with the railroad act, which said they should have pay based upon prewar earnings for three years. The resolution simply stated that they should have just compensation, and if they did not get it they could go to the Court of Claims. These principles under which they gave this allowance were prescribed by the beneficiaries or through their influence. I say I believe that if a case could be brought before a court of justice the award would be set aside as a fraud upon the public.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think that if the Postal Telegraph Co., which was also under Government control, ought to be compelled to go into the court to secure its rights that the Western Union Co. should be compelled to go to the courts and get its money also?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; but I am not defending the Postal Telegraph Co.; they are amply able to defend themselves.

Mr. HUSTED. Neither am I, or any other company.

Mr. STEENERSON. They showed before the Post Office Committee that there was absolutely no justification for this arbitrary taking of their earnings. Everybody else was allowed their earnings, but they were not given their earnings. They received $1,680,000 of their earnings, and the other $2,000,000 was taken to pay in part the deficit created by the Western Union and American Telegraph & Telephone Co.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. Does the gentleman believe a court would be justified in rendering judgment of $14,000,000 against the United States on the information that is given to us here?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I do not believe so, if all the facts surrounding the contract were shown up. I believe a court of justice would, upon the testimony, set aside this award of compensation, because circumstances indicate it was obtained directly by influence of the beneficiaries of the contract, Messrs. Vail and Carlton.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And without any legal authority?

Mr. STEENERSON. It was simply an arbitrary act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for the American Telegraph Co., nor do I represent in any way the Postal Telegraph Co. nor any of the 12,000 telephone companies whose lines were taken over in pursuance of the act approved July 16, 1918, which authorized the President to take over such lines and enter into contract for just compensation.

The contracts that were entered into for just compensation was the average compensation for the two years prior to Federal control. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] reported out a bill from his committee, and it has become a law, and was approved on July 11 last. Section 3 of that act provides:

SEC. 3. That the first proviso of said joint resolution prescribing the just compensation to be paid for and on account of said supervision, possession, control, or operation therein specified shall continue in full force and effect until such just compensation shall be fully adjusted and paid in the manner and according to the terms and conditions therein set forth.

That the first proviso of the joint resolution referred to is as follows:

Provided, That such compensation shall be made for such supervision, possession, control, or operation, to be determined by the President; and if the amount thereof, so determined by the President, is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

In view of the legislation reported by the gentleman from Minnesota, I do not and can not understand his present position.

Now, there would have been no need for a deficiency except that the courts in 18 States of the Union enjoined the enforcement of rates established. The gentlemen say we have no information. The gentlemen have not read the hearings before the committee. We had full hearings on the matter. It is not the Bell Telephone Co. One hundred and nine companies had compensation contracts approved before the signing of the armistice and awards have since been made and accepted by 36 companies. Claims for 282 companies are pending, and it is estimated that it will take $1,850,000 of this appropriation to settle with this latter class of companies. Mr. Stevens, who represented so ably and so long a great constituency from Minnesota in this House, appeared before the committee and commended the splendid work of the Postmaster General in his administration. And now because one company, the Postal, earned more than the amount fixed, it is suggested here that we shall keep all of these independent lines—and they are in practically every State of the Union—out of their money until the suit that is now pending or is about to be commenced by the Postmaster General against the Postal Telegraph Co. for its excess of earnings shall be tried and determined. In the meantime who will pay the interest on the awards? The appropriation carries $700,000 for interest on such claims.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman knows these companies have been making this money right along.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman knew anything about the provisions of the bill, if he knew anything about the real situation as developed in the hearings, he would not make such a statement. I have no interest in this matter except to keep the appropriation just as low as it can be kept. But, Mr. Chairman, when my Government enters into a contract to pay a debt in these times of unrest, when bolshevism is abroad in the land, I shall insist that it discharge its obligation. [Applause.] That is the only way we can maintain a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUSTED. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CANNON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on June 2, 1920, approved and signed joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 370. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," approved May 31, 1920; and

H. R. 12044. An act to accept the cession by the State of California of exclusive jurisdiction of the lands embraced within the Yosemite National Park, Sequoia National Park, and General Grant National Park, respectively, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixth International Sanitary Conference: The President is authorized to appoint or designate two officers of the United States connected with the Public Health Service to represent the United States in the Sixth International Sanitary Conference of American States, to be held at the city of Montevideo, Uruguay, in December, 1920. For the expenses of such representatives in attending the conference, including the assembling of necessary data and preparation of a report, $2,000, to be available during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 15, after line 23, insert the following: For salary of chargé d'affaires ad interim, $8,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 13587) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes."

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes, as provided by the revenue act of 1918, including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $535,000; and the unexpended balances of other appropriations for the Internal-Revenue Service for the fiscal year 1920 may also be expended for this purpose.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to object. I want to finish the bill to-night. I dislike to object, but we can not discriminate.

Mr. HUDSPETH. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Not to exceed $2,000 of the sum paid to the Secretary of the Treasury by the American Fidelity Co., sureties for the H. L. Brown Co., defaulting contractors for the construction of the extension, etc., of the post office and courthouse, Harrisburg, Pa., is appropriated and made available for completing the extension, remodeling, etc., of said building.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 21, line 11, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Columbia, S. C., post office: For completion of the building, $95,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this, I desire to say to the committee that after the hearings upon this bill had been completed, the Treasury Department forwarded to the Congress an estimate for this appropriation. The city of Columbia, where the building is located, is not in my district, but is in the district of my colleague, Mr. MANN. The contractor who had the contract for the construction of the post-office building defaulted in March of this year. The building is 72 per cent completed. Because of the defaulting of the contractor no further progress can be made upon the building unless this appropriation is made. The bond of the surety company is liable for the amount necessary to complete the contract. Under the contract with the surety company, however, no suit can be brought by the Government upon this bond until the Government shall make another contract to complete that building, because the Government must be in a position to prove the amount of damage to the Government by reason of the default of the contractor.

The estimate of the department is that it will take $95,000 to complete it. When this appropriation is made the Treasury Department will give out the contract for $95,000, and will immediately bring suit on the bond of the contractor for this $95,000. The bond is ample and the money will be recovered, so that it does not involve any additional expenditure by the Government, but it is absolutely essential that this be done to prevent deterioration in a building now more than 70 per cent completed. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, that matter came up after the committee had concluded its hearings. The statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina is in exact accordance with the facts as I understand them. As I understand the Chair—and I have looked into them very carefully—I am sure if the matter had come to the attention of the subcommittee the item which the gentleman now asks to be inserted would have been carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS.

The taxes imposed by the Philippine Legislature in section 1614 of the act No. 2657, enacted by that body on February 24, 1916, are legalized and ratified, and the collection of all such taxes made under or by authority of such act of the Philippine Legislature is legalized, ratified, and confirmed as fully to all intents and purposes as if the same had by prior act of Congress been specifically authorized and directed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. May I inquire if these are the export taxes that were levied by the Philippine government without authority of law?

Mr. GOOD. That is my understanding. They were levied under a law enacted by the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. WALSH. How does it come to get into a deficiency bill? Just what deficiency is it?

Mr. GOOD. There is no deficiency. There may have been a little deficiency in the laws, but this is to legalize those laws. My colleague from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has given considerable attention to this matter, and perhaps he could enlighten the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not think this is a matter that ought to be put into a deficiency appropriation bill at the end of a session. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], whose committee has jurisdiction of the matter, would report a bill we could consider it in the usual way.

Mr. TOWNER. I would be very glad indeed to make a statement regarding the matter—a statement that I think will explain perhaps the necessity of the action at this time. I would make a complete statement, but I must not now take the time. Briefly the conditions are these in regard to this matter: Under the law as it exists the question of exports and imports is within the regulatory power of the United States Government. In the first place, conditions arose as to whether or not this tax, which was a tax laid against merchandise and manufactures on the gross value of commodities, goods, and so forth, sold in barter. Now, the question arose as to whether or not those laws would be in contravention of the laws of the United States affecting imports. That question was up for discussion for quite a length of time. Finally it was decided by the validation of that act.

Then the question arose as to whether or not the law in question affected exports from the islands. On this question there have been four cases decided by the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands. In these cases the Philippine Supreme Court has decided that they are an infringement of the proposition that the law prohibiting a tax on exports applies.

Here is the situation in regard to our relations to the Philippine Islands: We gave them the right of legislating, but we have the superior right of legislating. Whenever we think that either the interests of the Philippine Islands or of the United States are directly involved, we legislate and have legislated as we think conditions justified.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman any legislation pending before his committee on this subject?

Mr. TOWNER. No; because of the fact that these cases have but recently been called to our attention.

Mr. ANDERSON. But the matter has been decided, and the question has been under consideration for four years.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; the question in some form has been under consideration, but it has been in dispute. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the proposition is just simply this: The sum of $500,000 is involved in this matter. Unless we take this action we do not know how many of these cases will be decided before we can have any regular legislation. Certainly it must appeal to the gentleman that we ought to act expeditiously regarding it.

I will say to the gentleman that we might have acted upon his suggestion, but the matter was not brought to our attention until within a very few days. This provision has been approved by the Bureau of Insular Affairs and by the War Department, and it involves such an emergency as I think justifies action in this manner. It is within our power, and we ought to do what we can to help the Philippines; not to hurt them.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the validating acts which the gentleman mentions were, I think, also put on in appropriation bills. Now, I do not think matters of this importance, which involve ratification of the acts of the Philippine Legislature, ought to be dumped in here at the end of a session on a deficiency bill. I have no criticism to offer of the distinguished chairman of the committee, because gentlemen come before him with a statement of the case and of its great urgency and make an appeal to him. But I am going to make a point of order against this provision. It ought to be a matter of distinctive legislative consideration by the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is chairman, and we should have separate legislation. We ought not to establish the precedent of putting important legislation of this sort into deficiency bills and appropriation bills, particularly at this time in the session.

I make the point of order that it is legislation and not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COLLIER: Page 23, after line 1, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For restoration and repair of storm damage to the Vicksburg, Miss., national cemetery and roadways thereto, $10,000, to remain available until June 30, 1921."

Mr. GOOD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up much of the time of the House on this amendment. I simply want to say that during the last year we had over twice as many heavy rains as had ever been known in that vicinity since the Weather Bureau was established, according to the report of that bureau. These heavy rains have continued up to the present time. I have before me the statement of the officials of the War Department, who declare that the beautiful cemetery there at Vicksburg has been very greatly damaged. I also understand from them that a small expenditure now will save a very large expenditure later on.

I know this paragraph is subject to a point of order, but it would be a short-sighted policy on our part to allow the roadway and the approaches to that cemetery to continue in such condition as they now are. Many of you Members of the House have perhaps visited that national cemetery at Vicksburg, situated upon the bluffs overlooking the mighty Father of Waters, in whose terraced heights, rising one above the other, there sleep over 16,000 Union soldiers. A great many others connected with the Federal Government have been buried there, and that cemetery is now waiting to receive the bodies of our soldier dead who lost their lives in the last Great War.

This roadway, which is in very bad condition, is between a road of Warren County and the city of Vicksburg. The Warren County road is as good as one of the avenues of this city. We brought the novaculite stone from the State of the gentleman from Illinois to pave that road, and for 5 or 6 miles leading from the cemetery we have a magnificent novaculite road kept up by the citizens of Warren County.

Adjoining that is this road belonging to the Government, which is in the worst state of repair. Then adjoining that is one of the paved streets of the city of Vicksburg.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Is there an estimate for this appropriation?

Mr. COLLIER. The estimate was $15,000. Gen. Lord and Maj. Lemly have been before the committee, and Maj. Lemly says:

This was a special estimate that was put in and it was included in this deficiency estimate. We put in a special estimate at that time, and the Quartermaster General, on February 3, wrote to the Secretary of War as follows:

"Due to heavy rainfall at Vicksburg, Miss., the national cemetery at that place has been seriously damaged, as well as the approach roadway to the cemetery. It is reported that the estimated cost of repairing the damage to the cemetery is $10,000 and to the roadway $1,425. It is the opinion of this office that the total cost for making these repairs will not be less than $15,000; and as there are not sufficient funds available for the purpose, it is recommended that authority be given to submit a special estimate to Congress for an appropriation to meet this expense in the deficiency bill now being prepared."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, and I move to amend by inserting the words immediately preceding the amendment "national cemetery."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification of the amendment: Insert before the amendment the words "national cemetery."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the original estimate was for $15,000. The estimate was made about the beginning of the calendar year. It was evident when the matter reached the committee that even if we granted the amount it could not be expended this year. The gentleman has offered the amendment in a manner which will make the amount available next year, and by reducing it $5,000 I think there will not be any objection, because in the sundry civil bill we increase the amount for repair of national cemeteries by $100,000, and they will get some additional care out of that fund. The serious condition of some of the graves has been called to the committee's attention, and I believe that the Congress would not refuse a reasonable appropriation for the purpose of making the repairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORTATION SERVICE.

Transportation facilities on inland and coastwise waterways: For payment of expenses of operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities, on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways acquired by the United States in pursuance of the fourth paragraph of section 6 of the Federal-control act of March 21, 1918, $270,000.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. EAGAN: Page 24, after line 11, insert:

"The War Department shall pay out of any moneys received by it as rentals for the use of the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities on the Hudson River at Hoboken, N. J., formerly owned by the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., and now owned by the United States under the proclamation of the President dated June 28, 1918, to the proper officer of the city of Hoboken, in the State of New Jersey, a sum equivalent to the amount levied and assessed but uncollected by such city on account of taxes on said properties for the calendar years 1918 and 1919."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment may be subject to a point of order, but in view of the unusual circumstances in which the city of Hoboken finds itself, in view of the tremendous financial burden which has been placed upon Hoboken by the taking over by the Government of these very valuable pier properties, resulting in the loss of several hundred thousand dollars each year in taxes by the little city of Hoboken, I hope the chairman may see fit not to make the point of order.

These steamship piers in Hoboken formerly were owned by the German steamship companies. They were seized by the military forces of the United States at the outbreak of the war with Germany. Under the urgent deficiency act approved March 28, 1918, the President was authorized to acquire the title to the piers and the terminal equipment and facilities formerly the property of the German steamship companies. Subsequently, on June 28, 1918, by proclamation of the President, title to these pier properties and facilities was vested in the United States. Since that time, and, in fact, since the beginning of 1918, the city of Hoboken has received no taxes from this property. The property represents about one-twelfth of the taxable property of the city. It embraces one-third of a mile of the water front of the city and is most valuable property for the purpose of taxation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has not the State of New Jersey received in positions under the Alien Property Custodian more than enough to make up the loss of taxation?

Mr. EAGAN. The city of Hoboken is not the State of New Jersey; and, of course, the question has no reference to the justice of this claim.

Mr. MACCRATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGAN. Yes.

Mr. MACCRATE. I have understood that this property amounted to nearer one-seventh of the taxable property of the city than one-twelfth.

Mr. EAGAN. It is about one-twelfth. The total ratables in the city of Hoboken are approximately $87,000,000 for the year 1920, and the amount of taxes on this property for 1920 is about $7,500,000; that is, the taxes levied and assessed but not collected.

Mr. MACCRATE. The same situation arises in Brooklyn where the Government is expected to lease the property to the city of New York.

Mr. EAGAN. I submit that, although objection may be urged against paying taxes on Federal property, the situation in regard to this particular property in the city of Hoboken, from which the Federal Government is now receiving a large income, is radically different from the situation with reference to an ordinary Federal building from which it would derive no revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I shall have to object.

Mr. EAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

Pay of the Army: For pay of the Army, including the same objects, except mileage, specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $55,000,000.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman how many officers are provided for in the additional compensation for pay of the Army?

Mr. GOOD. The $55,000,000 does not provide anything on account of the increased pay of officers. That was carried in the increased-pay bill. The deficiency estimate originally was $67,000,000, and it was found that the increased-pay bill recently passed carried an appropriation of about $12,000,000, to be taken out of the appropriation for "Pay of the Navy" and used for the increased pay of the Army for the current year. Therefore we were able to reduce the amount asked in this bill by that $12,000,000.

Mr. CRAGO. Is this $55,000,000 in addition to the amount appropriated by the Military Committee for the year ending June 30, 1920?

Mr. GOOD. It is.

Mr. CRAGO. Is there any estimate for it?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; the estimate was $67,000,000. The statement of Senator WADSWORTH at the time that bill was before the Senate—that is, the Army appropriation bill for 1920—that statement being made on July 1, 1919, is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. WADSWORTH.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one thing in connection with that very matter. This bill carries an appropriation of $215,000,000 for the pay of the Army, supposedly an Army of 325,000 men. It will not pay an Army of 325,000 men for 12 months. That is conceded by the House conferees; it is conceded by the Senate conferees; and we have our information from the head of the Finance Division of the War Department, who states that with an appropriation of $215,000,000 they will manage to get along for a portion of this fiscal year, but that eventually they must come to Congress and ask for a deficiency appropriation; that they will either have to get such an appropriation from the Appropriations Committees of the House and of the Senate, or else in the preparation of the next annual Army appropriation bill, which will be brought up next winter before, of course, this fiscal year is over, a provision will have to be put in making the appropriation for the pay of the Army immediately available. (P. 2294.)

Then Mr. KAHN, when the conference report was laid before the House with regard to the same bill, stated as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. KAHN.

The House bill provided for pay of the Army $198,000,000. The bill as it now stands provides for $213,000,000. As a matter of fact, the Senate bill, without the lump sum of $100,000,000, provided $215,000,000 for pay of the Army, so that your conferees really have saved $102,000,000 on that one item. But it is only fair to say that Gen. Lord, the Director of Finance of the War Department, announced to Senator WADSWORTH and me that there would undoubtedly be a deficiency appropriation by the 1st of January next. (P. 2334.)

Mr. CRAGO. The explanation is satisfactory. I called attention to this more particularly in order that I might bring to the attention of the House the fact, what will be the direct result of our action yesterday. The truth of the matter is the great confusion and the great mistakes that have been made in the matter of appropriations is in not having a rule of the House compelling every department of this Government to go to the committee making the original appropriation for that department for any deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. But that is not the law.

Mr. CRAGO. I know it is not the law, but I say it could easily be made the law, and it should be made the law.

Mr. GOOD. We made that the law yesterday.

Mr. CRAGO. You made it the law yesterday in this way: You have taken away from the committees who have made a particular study of the subject in hand the power of appropriating and turned it over to a committee which may in time, I admit, be so organized and filled up with men who have technical knowledge of the subject that it will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman can well see that if you would have three deficiency bills from each department each year that would make 27 deficiency bills coming into the House, and the gentleman would not ask that the Military Affairs Committee handle its deficiencies without giving the same privilege to all of the other committees.

Mr. CRAGO. No; I would not do that; under my plan we would have but few deficiency appropriations asked for; but the trouble has been that after the Military Committee has determined on a policy and limited that policy by reason of its appropriations, while we were debating the subject, the War Department would go before the Committee on Appropriations and ask for a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. But you do not determine the policy here. This all depends on the number of men.

Mr. CRAGO. I am not questioning this particular appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage to commissioned officers, warrant officers, members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, contract surgeons, expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law, $1,600,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14335, the deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SIERRA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (S. 2789) for the conservation of forest lands in the Sierra National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes, for printing under the rules.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

AMENDING THE PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my signature H. R. 7629, entitled "An act to amend the penal laws of the United States." I direct attention to the fact that in embodying in the present amendatory act the opening portion of existing section 245 of the Criminal Code an obvious error has occurred. The phrase, "to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof" which immediately follows the words "jurisdiction thereof" in line 12, should be taken out of its present position and inserted immediately after the words "jurisdiction thereof" in line 10. I have had the change definitely indicated by appropriate pencil marks.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 2, 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message of the President be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which embodies the correct language of the section which was attempted to be amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. Speaker, the veto message of the President relates to an amendment of the penal laws which prohibits the transportation in interstate commerce of indecent, lascivious, or lewd motion-picture films. The bill was passed through the House and went to the Senate and was there amended. The Senate amendment, when it was reported to the Senate, was put in the proper place, but when the amendment was engrossed and sent back to the House it was put in an improper place, and it does not make correct English or a proper reading of section 245 of the penal clause. Therefore the President has vetoed the bill because it does not make section 245 read correctly. Now, the bill which I have offered is a correct reading of section 245, but includes in the amendment of the motion-picture film; but I desire to state that the mistake was made in the other branch and there is no criticism or blame to be attached to the enrolling clerk of the House. The fault is probably my own in not discovering the mistake when I moved to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. And if there is any criticism or any penalty to pay, I am willing to pay it. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. There is nothing improper in the President of the United States correcting the English of the House or Senate, is there?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all; not when their English is incorrect.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all that the President has done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest that the proper penalty to be visited upon the gentleman from Massachusetts would be to prohibit him from objecting to anything for the next six months.

Mr. BLANTON. Do not do that; he will be in an awful fix.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14384) to amend the penal laws of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 245 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 245. Whoever shall bring or cause to be brought into the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, or shall therein knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier, for carriage from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, any obscene, lewd, or lascivious, or any filthy book, pamphlet, picture, motion-picture film, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character, or any drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for preventing conception or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use, or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore-mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made; or whoever shall knowingly take or cause to be taken from such express company or other common carrier any matter or thing the depositing of which for carriage is herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WALSH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

An act authorizing the State of New Mexico to apply the proceeds of the grant to said State of 1,000,000 acres of land made by section 7 of the enabling act, June 20, 1910, for the reimbursement of Grant County, Luna County, Hidalgo County, Santa Fe County, and the town of Silver City, N. MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 13587) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is agreed to. There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

A communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting notice for contest of a seat in the House of Representatives for the Sixty-sixth Congress in the fifth district of the State of Wisconsin and transmitting original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto.

The SPEAKER. Referred to Committee on Elections No. 1.

POSTAL EMPLOYEES' BILL.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed a copy of the bill H. R. 14388 so as to include certain additional amendments recommended by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. These were not included——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that there may be printed a copy of the new postal employees' bill with the amendments. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ASSIGNMENT OF COAL CARS.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the railroad companies are making assignments of freight cars; and

Whereas the said railroad companies, or a part of them, are making such assignment in a manner alleged to be discriminatory and prejudicial to the common public welfare; and

Whereas authority for making assignments of cars by said railroad companies is predicated upon an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which order is known as order No. — of the Interstate Commerce Commission, dated April 15, 1920, and entitled "Notice to carriers and shippers," and is in the following words and figures:

"The commission recommends that until experience and careful study demonstrate that other rules will be more effective and beneficial, the uniform rules as contained in the Railroad Administration's Cars Service Section Circular CS31 (revised) be continued in effect, except that rule 8 as contained in said circular should be amended to read:

"'8. Private cars and cars placed for railroad fuel loading in accordance with the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in RR. Com. of Ohio et al. v. H. V. Ry. Co., 12 I. C. C., 398, and Traer v. Chicago & Alton Railroad Co. et al., 13 I. C. C., 451, will be designated as "assigned" cars. All other cars will be designated as "unassigned cars" ':

Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be directed to inform the House upon what authority, if any, said order was issued.

During the reading of the resolution the following occurred:

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do this at this time for the purpose of saving time. This matter was objected to a few days ago in the House. This is the same matter, is it not?

Mr. McCULLOCH. The resolution was not read. There was a point of no quorum made, and the majority leader moved to adjourn. All this resolution does is to ask for information. The same resolution has passed the Senate, and all we ask for is information from the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to the assignment of these cars and on what authority this order was issued.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What order?

Mr. McCULLOCH. An order by the Interstate Commerce Commission permitting assigning cars to mines by the railroad companies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why ask for this information and omit information in regard to cars for the lumber industry, and for sand and gravel, and all the others that are getting about 15 or 20 per cent of the freight cars that they need?

Mr. McCULLOCH. The reason is that this assigned car order relates only to coal cars.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What does it amount to if passed by Congress?

Mr. McCULLOCH. It amounts to just this, that the Esch bill, which passed the House, in section 12 provided against what is called the assigned car evil. The Interstate Commerce Commission has issued an order which permits the railroad companies to continue the assignment of cars to mines.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCULLOCH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I may have misunderstood, but I think that in one of the whereases there was a criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Not at all.

Mr. GARRETT. Was it a criticism——

Mr. McCULLOCH. Perhaps of the railroad companies, but not of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so far as the wording of the resolution goes.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, I do not mean to indicate that I hold any brief for the Interstate Commerce Commission by asking that question, but I was just going to suggest that if it did carry a criticism I did not think it was a polite thing to do to ask them for information and criticize them at the same time.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me? I get many letters from Illinois, especially from my district, where they are building good roads and have to transport gravel and stone and all kinds of material for the roads. These kicking letters are written to me, and all I can do is to refer them to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I expect this is of the same nature, is it not?

Mr. McCULLOCH. Not exactly.

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman accept an amendment that would cover the whole thing? In other words, all my folks want their share of cars.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The trouble is that there are not enough cars. There were only 100,000 freight cars built during the period of the war, or ordered under the governmental administration. And all industries must suffer alike. Resolutions do no good.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The distinction I hope the gentleman will keep in mind is that coal is necessary to keep the people warm, and by reason of the assignment of these coal cars in a discriminatory way by the railroads only a small percentage of the coal has been moved, because a considerable number of the mines are running only 10 to 25 per cent capacity. Coal is a raw material for all industries.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Where are the cars assigned?

Mr. McCULLOCH. They have been assigned by railroad companies to coal mines in the State of Ohio at the ratio of 100 per cent to one mine and to other mines 10 per cent, according to information we regard as reliable, so that the favored mine is running 100 per cent and the other mine, right alongside, is running only 10 to 25 per cent capacity. We claim that this is a discrimination and the carrying out of this order is contrary to the provisions of the Esch bill, now a law. Now, we want the Interstate Commerce Commission to give its reason for the order referred to and furnish us with complete information upon the subject.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCULLOCH. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. I assume that this has not been considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. McCULLOCH. No.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman if he has discussed it with any of the members of that committee?

Mr. McCULLOCH. I have. I have discussed it with the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I can say that he said to me that he would not object to the resolution. I do not care to quote him further.

Mr. GARRETT. Can the gentleman say any more than that?

Mr. McCULLOCH. I can only say this, and probably I should not quote the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce more than to say—and I think that my statement will be borne out by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER]—that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce expressed this opinion, that the provisions of the Esch bill did eliminate the so-called assigned-car evil, and that was the intention of the conferees on the railroad bill. I think I can say further to the gentleman from Tennessee that I have been informed that Senator KELLOGG, who, if my information is correct, approved of the resolution passed by the other body, was of the same opinion. Now, we are seeking to have the Interstate Commerce Commission give to the House of Representatives information in regard to the order authorizing the assignment of these cars, with a view to remedying a condition in Ohio which is causing great suffering among the miners, and a condition that we claim is resulting in the coal supply not being moved as it should be moved, and which in the end, unless it should be remedied in some way, will result in the great consuming public being seriously affected this coming winter.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this similar to the proposition covered by the paper drawn up last week and signed by 110 Members of this House and presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. McCULLOCH. It is.

Mr. FOSTER. The coal output is 500,000,000 tons per annum, and 170,000,000 of it go to the railroads while the rest goes to the factories and the homes. If the assigned car order continues, coal will continue to increase in price.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Yes. I understand that is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The object is to ascertain if the existing law is being violated, and if so, why?

Mr. McCULLOCH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not see that there should be any objection to an inquiry of that character.

Mr. CANNON. I get these letters containing complaints. During the war we had to hold off on the construction of roads. Now, as the cars go to the coal mines they might be loaded up with cement or gravel or sand. The gentleman is an "early bird," and zealous to please his constituents and show them that he is alert. I do not want to be subject to the criticism that I was sitting idly by, seeing my constituents be neglected.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman's State has asked for the same thing.

Mr. CANNON. I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk completed the reading of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I thought this was a concurrent resolution.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The Senate has passed it.

Mr. GARRETT. Then what is the use of the House passing it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In that case I object. If the Senate has already passed it, I do not see any reason for the House passing it. It is just a criminal waste of time.

Mr. BLANTON. We are halfway through with it now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina object?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

REORGANIZATION, ADMINISTRATIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution 191.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 191. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government.

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee is created, to be known as the joint committee on reorganization, which shall consist of three Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President thereof and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the joint committee on reorganization to make a survey of the administrative services of the Government for the purpose of securing all pertinent facts concerning their powers and duties, their distribution among the several executive departments, and their overlapping and duplication of authority; also to determine what redistribution of activities should be made among the several services, with a view to the proper correlation of the same, and what departmental regrouping of services should be made, so that each executive department shall embrace only services having close working relation with each other and ministering directly to the primary purpose for which the same are maintained and operated, to the end that there shall be achieved the largest possible measure of efficiency and economy in the conduct of Government business.

SEC. 3. That the committee shall from time to time report to both the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its inquiries, together with its recommendations, and shall prepare and submit bills or resolutions having for their purpose the coordination of Government functions and their most efficient and economical conduct, and the final report of said committee shall be submitted not later than the second Monday in December, 1922. The committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may require, at such compensation as the committee may determine to be just and reasonable, and to make such reasonable expenditures as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work, such expenditures to be paid in equal parts from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and the Senate as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolutions of those bodies.

SEC. 4. That the officers and employees of all administrative services of the Government shall furnish to the committee such information regarding powers, duties, activities, organization, and methods of business as the committee may from time to time require, and the committee or any of its employees, when duly authorized by the committee, shall have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any administrative service for the purpose of securing the information needed by the committee in the prosecution of ts work.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. JAMES W. GOOD,
WM. S. VARE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice in the substitute for amendment No. 19, on page 2, there is a provision, among numerous other large salaries, for a salary not to exceed $6,500. I want to ask the gentleman whether that is for a messenger or a janitor, or if he can tell us what kind of a position it is?

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman reading from the conference report?

Mr. BLANTON. I am referring to the substitute for amendment 19. A number of positions and salaries are fixed, one at $6,500.

Mr. GOOD. That was a Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Most of the salaries have been fixed at $10,000 or $12,000 lately, and I thought it was rather strange that the Senate would fix one for as small an amount as $6,500.

Mr. GOOD. That is a matter that was presented to the House when the bill was pending here. My recollection is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] offered an amendment which was defeated on the floor of the House. We did not have time to go into the question with regard to the increase in the limitation.

Mr. BLANTON. But, notwithstanding that the House turned the matter down, you granted every increase asked for by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] which had been turned down by the House, did you not? Is not that the fact, I will ask the gentleman?

Mr. GOOD. I do not remember just exactly what the figure asked for by the gentleman from Ohio was. But here is the situation: Congress is attempting to adjourn. The President vetoed a bill last spring because there was a limitation of this kind placed upon it. Here is this Federal Board of Vocational Education, composed, as I recall, of three members of the Cabinet, the Commissioner of Education, and three other members, to administer this office. Does the gentleman think we ought to tie the hands of this board to such an extent that the President might again veto the bill and make it necessary for Congress to be called in session and the Members brought here from a great many miles to reenact the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not. I am in favor of adjourning. I voted to adjourn, and I want to adjourn, and I think it would be foolish not to adjourn; but I do not think we ought to go crazy just because we are going to adjourn.

Mr. GOOD. Neither do I.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to maintain our mental equilibrium here in the House concerning foolish appropriations.

Mr. GOOD. I am entirely in accord with the gentleman, and I hope there is enough sanity in this board to which this amendment refers to protect the Treasury of the United States. Congress can only appropriate. Congress does not spend the money. If this board foolishly spend the money that is appropriated, we are helpless. We are giving $90,000,000 into the control of this board, and we have got to trust the board. That is all there is to it. That is one of the executive departments, and for us to attempt to say how much pay Sam Smith shall have and how much John Jones shall have, and all the other employees, is altogether impracticable. The board said they had to have this amount, and the Senate put this increase in this salaried position. The Senate conferees refused to yield in a single particular in that respect. They said the board had made it very plain to them that they had to have this, and if there was any falling down in their usefulness, it would be because they did not have enough men of this character to perform the work.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman has finished his statement, I would like to ask him two or three questions.

Mr. GOOD. I should like to make a brief statement first with regard to what the conference report contains. Then I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me, right on this point, here is the information I want. The gentleman can cover it in his statement. It is not controversial at all. Will the gentleman state how much this bill now carries, and how much it carried when it passed the House; and then will he state also what legislation, if any, is now in the bill with reference to the railroads?

Mr. GOOD. The bill as it passed the House carried $427,967,569.92. It passed the Senate carrying $442,404,383.52. The amount added by the Senate was $14,436,813.60. The Senate receded to the extent of $5,242,876.60. The House receded to the extent of $9,194,737. The total amount now carried by the bill is $437,162,306.92.

The amounts added by the Senate, which have been agreed to, where the amounts are of considerable increase, were as follows: Customs Service, the Senate added $2,000,000, and the conferees have agreed to an increase of $1,000,000. It was pointed out that the customs receipts are increasing every day; that because of the fact that many of the officers and employees at the various ports are leaving, the merchants all over the country are complaining because they can not get merchandise, and, of course, the Government is not getting revenue when they can not clear the merchandise.

The House is compelled to yield something in this regard, and we agreed upon $11,300,000 instead of $10,300,000, as passed by the House, and instead of $12,300,000 as passed by the Senate.

There was an increase of $1,000,000 for guarding the liquor in bonded warehouses under the prohibition act. The gentleman will remember that we were compelled to carry a deficiency for the balance of this year. The Senate added $1,500,000 and the conferees have agreed on $1,000,000 for that purpose.

The civil service retirement act was passed, as I recall, after we passed the sundry civil bill; it was approved on May 22; and it made it necessary to appropriate money for that service, and the bill carries $50,000 that was not carried in the bill as it passed the House.

Some of the items for the social hygiene board went out on a point of order in the House. They were restored in the Senate and amounted to $785,000, the same amount that was carried by the bill as reported to the House, and the conferees of the House agreed to that amount.

The railroad labor board item was not considered at all by the House. The estimates were made after the House had considered the bill and amounted to $450,000. The committee of conference went over the hearings. This is a new board. The hearings were quite complete in the Senate and the Senate conferees insisted that that amount should be carried, but because it was impossible to tell at this time what the activities of the board would be or what the expenses would be, the House conferees did not care to insist that that amount be decreased because we had not had time or opportunity to personally investigate the matter and therefore accepted the judgment of the Senate.

An estimate of $80,000 was made to purchase the land at the entrance of the Zoo Park on Connecticut Avenue. It has been contended for some time that this land would be sold and that houses, stores, and shops would be built along the entrance to the park.

The superintendent of the park appeared before the House committee. We thought it was not the time to purchase, but the owner of the land is dead and the land is thrown on the market. While the owner of the land was living he refused to sell to anyone who would put up stores or shops at the entrance to the park. He thought it would spoil the entrance. The land is thrown on the market, and the Senate conferees absolutely insisted that this amount of $80,000 should be carried. The conferees have agreed to that.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. How much land is there for this $80,000? The Senate put this on in addition to what the House gave?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; the House put in nothing for this land. This amount is at the assessed value of the land.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is this to carry out the scheme of having the parks connected?

Mr. GOOD. This has nothing to do with that. This is the land on Connecticut Avenue right at the entrance to the Zoo. It is on the east side of the little street or entrance that leads down to the Zoo.

Mr. McKEOWN. What is the acreage?

Mr. GOOD. Two hundred and ten thousand square feet of land, which is assessed on the average at 36 cents per square foot. The amount carried in the bill is the assessed value.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman remember the number of square feet in an acre?

Mr. GOOD. About 43,000 square feet.

The Director General of Finance requested an appropriation for clerk hire of $283,000. This was a matter of a great deal of contention with the conferees. The conferees on the part of the House did not like to agree to this amount. The whole matter was thrashed out in the legislative bill, and that is one of the troubles that we have in appropriations first on one bill and then on another bill.

After we have fought it all out we have to go over and fight it out again. We passed the bill with $283,000. I am satisfied that the Director of Finance can not conduct his office on the allotment made to him by the Secretary of War out of the $3,000,000 in the legislative bill. The committee therefore agreed upon an increase of $183,000 instead of $283,000.

Then, there is the cemeterial division in the Quartermaster's Department. The House will recall that when this matter was up there was a spirited discussion as to the amount which should be allotted for clerks in Washington out of the $21,000,000 appropriated for bringing back the bodies of our deceased soldiers. The House permitted to be set aside $100,000 for clerk hire in the District of Columbia. The Senate amended that by adding $400,000, making it $500,000. The Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General contend that that will not pay the expense. The House practically instructed the conferees upon the matter, but the conferees desired to bring the completed report. We want the bodies of our deceased soldiers brought back if the families desire them to be brought. It was not the intention of the conferees that that work should be halted in any particular. It is believed that the $250,000 which they will be permitted to expend here will be a great deal more than they can possibly expend in the District of Columbia in the matter of clerk hire. Therefore we added $150,000, making it $250,000 instead of the $100,000 carried by the House bill and the $500,000 carried by the Senate bill.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CRAGO. Does the gentleman know that those of us who voted with the committee to keep down that amount of money to be taken to be expended in the District of Columbia for clerk hire and the building up of a great organization in the District are being denounced by some propaganda starting here in Washington as being opposed to the return of our dead soldiers from France?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and I have a suspicion that the whole thing started right down in the Quartermaster's Division in the War Department, and it ought to be denounced.

Mr. CRAGO. I have written back for one of those letters, stating to those people that I wanted the letter to find out exactly where this false statement originated. There is no request here from the department for any additional money for the actual work of bringing back the dead.

Mr. GOOD. Not a cent. This does not carry a dollar of appropriation, but provides, in case it is necessary to use the funds for that purpose, to use them to the extent of $250,000.

Mr. CRAGO. For clerk hire?

Mr. GOOD. For clerk hire.

Mr. CRAGO. And this is not an increase of the amount for the actual work of bringing back the dead.

Mr. GOOD. No. The matter of $100,000 was put on after the hearings had been had. It was put on after the legislative bill had passed, because when the legislative bill was passed and the amount of $3,000,000 was fixed for clerk hire in the War Department, the War Department had not yet agreed with France that these bodies could be brought back. Therefore, it was a new thing altogether.

Mr. CRAGO. In any event the matter that we voted on in the House was a matter of taking a part of the money already appropriated for the actual work of bringing back the dead and allowing them to use that sum to build up a great organization in the city of Washington. We are all of us ready to vote any amount needed to carry on this work, but we should limit the amount they can divert to clerk hire.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and that is all we have done here.

Mr. DUNBAR. How many dead will be returned?

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is that under the appropriation of $21,500,000, and the $8,500,000 appropriated previously, they expect to bring back about 50,000 bodies, and will reinter in some central cemetery in France about 25,000 additional bodies.

Mr. DUNBAR. Then, this $250,000 will provide an expense of $5 for clerk hire for every body brought back?

Mr. GOOD. The same expense would be used for reinterring those bodies in France.

Mr. BEE. This same item was up in the House before?

Mr. GOOD. That is true.

Mr. BEE. Is there any change in the amount?

Mr. GOOD. I have been explaining the whole thing for the last 10 minutes. The Senate added $400,000, and the conferees have agreed on $250,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As I understand it, the $250,000 here recommended is only in the nature of a compromise between the conferees.

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And you are still not yet convinced that $250,000 would be needed for clerk hire?

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe it will be used, and we are not appropriating a single penny. It is simply a permission to use what is necessary up to that amount.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. If it is not too late, I desire to get some information about amendment No. 29, appropriating $80,000. I want to ask the gentleman in all fairness if he thinks that the Nation is buying land at current, proper prices when we pay $80,000 for a piece of land of 200,000 square feet surrounding the entrance to a park which lies out in the country where we ought to buy land by the acre instead of by the foot?

Mr. GOOD. Well, if the gentleman will try to buy land that near by the acre in the city of Washington he will have some difficulty.

Mr. JUUL. We are helping to put an extraordinary value on the land, and I am just trying to find out if the committee that had this matter in charge are not staking their reputation in paying this price for the land?

Mr. GOOD. This is a Senate amendment; the Senate insisted on it.

Mr. JUUL. Suppose it does insist. Does that follow that we have got to swallow it?

Mr. BLANTON. Of course.

Mr. GOOD. The superintendent of the park has said it is a low price and that we could never duplicate it.

Mr. JUUL. Could we not leave it alone and not buy it if they were robbing us?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think they are robbing us. I think if we can buy it at 36 cents a square foot we are paying a low price. That is the assessed value.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, on the contrary, this land now belongs to a certain estate, and it is stated by the superintendent and others that unless the Government buys at this particular time they will not be able to get it for anything like this price later on. In other words, the parties who own it now are willing to sell to the Government.

Mr. JUUL. I should think they would be willing. Here is an appropriation of $80,000, and we ought to get 80 acres of land for that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know where this land is situated?

Mr. JUUL. I know where it is situated exactly. It is wild land.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is land subject to being built up, and it has been the fear that houses and apartment houses will go upon it if it is not bought, and in addition it has been stated that this is the assessed value of the land. Now, certainly if it has been assessed at that price it must be worth that.

Mr. JUUL. I want to tell the gentleman, if I may, that the assessed value of land does not mean anything in Washington at all. [Applause.] If owners paid all their own taxes the assessment would drop to one-half.

Mr. GOOD. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The assessed value of the land is always a little less than the land is worth.

Mr. JUUL. I want to tell the chairman there ought to be some way of getting this item out of the bill. It ought not to remain there.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will this particular tract of land, which seems to be a small one, be of very great aid in making this park better? Is it necessary?

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman has gone to the Zoological Park by the Connecticut Avenue Road?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Now the Government does own the entrance to the park, and that is quite a wide entrance, but there is a strip of land on the north and on the south that faces right on that entrance. The land has been owned a great many years by a gentleman who believed that the Government should own it, and he has refused to sell for the purpose of building houses, small shops, and things of that sort. It is true that he has leased a part of it for peanut stands or something of that kind. Now, that gentleman has died, and the land is thrown upon the market to settle his estate, and if the Government is ever going to buy it I assume it ought to buy it before shops and buildings are constructed, and the amount carried here is the assessed value of about 36 cents a foot.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not question the value, but it is a question of whether or not to the park it is worth that much?

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that Dr. Walcott, of the Smithsonian Institution, and the superintendent of the park have come before the committee and have been pleading with us to put this on, but because of the condition of the Treasury we did not do it. The Senate put it on and insisted that it remain on and it is not an item of sufficient importance in a bill carrying over $400,000,000 to have a strenuous contest with the Senate about.

Mr. JUUL. If the chairman pleases, it is not the amount involved. If it was only $80, if it is wrong it ought to go out.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit an observation, I think I have as much familiarity with that section of the city as any gentleman, and I think it is not only necessary we should have that land, but I think the price we are giving is a reasonable price.

Mr. GOOD. I have no doubt the price is reasonable.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say to my good friend here only three days ago I priced a piece of land 3 miles farther out about 800 feet off Connecticut Avenue and they wanted 20 cents a foot for it.

Mr. GOOD. No question about the price.

Now, the Senate bill carried an appropriation of $100,000 for building a road around the Lincoln Memorial. That road is to be built where they are filling at the present time. It occurred to the House committee that now was not the proper time to put a hard surface on the filling that is just being put around the memorial. Therefore that item went out. The inland waterways——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman look at item No. 37, and tell why, so to speak, he killed the only ewe lamb I had in this flock?

Mr. GOOD. There was an officer who came before the House committee when we had the hearings and said that he had reported adversely on this particular improvement. After hearing him we cut it out.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will assure the gentleman if he will go down and look over that road and ride over it he should have an accident policy.

Mr. GOOD. As to inland waterways the Senate bill carried $4,436,000 for building transfer terminals and for operation and for building storage facilities and for loss in operation for the next year. That matter was not considered by the House committee at all. The transportation act, 1920, transferred to the War Department the operation of the boats and barges on the New York State barge canal, the Black Warrior River, and the Mississippi River. We acquired a great deal under Federal control of the railroads in the way of boats and barges, and we are now operating them.

We are operating them under the provision of the transportation act that turned over to the War Department the operation of these projects. It is estimated that the next year the loss in operation will amount to about $730,000. It is also estimated that it will require $2,100,000 to build transfer terminals. There is no estimate for building terminals to serve a locality on either of these rivers. The localities must provide their own terminals. But where it is necessary to provide large terminal facilities so that the freight from the boats can be transferred from the boats to the railroads or from the railroads to the boats, especially on the Mississippi River, where the difference in the rise of water during high water is about 40 feet, great expense will be involved in building those terminals.

Now, obviously that expense could not be paid, or would not be paid, and should not be paid, by a local organization that received no benefit at all, because the freight is being transferred from water to rail transportation, or vice versa. Now, about $2,100,000 was estimated for that purpose. Then it was necessary to provide for oil tanks and cold storage in these large terminals. I do not know whether this is going to be a success or not. Congress by the transportation act provided that the operation of these waterways should be made an experiment by the War Department, and, so far as I am concerned, that experiment, it seems to me, ought to be complete and the department ought to have the money to carry it out. If the experiment fails, then there will be an end to these appropriations for rivers and harbors of questionable character.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GOOD. For a question.

Mr. MACGREGOR. You are aware perhaps that the State of New York wants the War Department to get off the Erie Canal?

Mr. GOOD. I heard something about that the other day.

Mr. MACGREGOR. They are quite unanimous in regard to that, and the War Department need not spend any money on terminals on that canal.

Mr. GOOD. They are not going to spend any money on that canal.

Mr. SABATH. There was evidence to the effect that all the barges acquired by the Government are being utilized to good advantage on the Mississippi and other waterways.

Mr. GOOD. Are they being utilized?

Mr. SABATH. There was evidence to the effect that they were being utilized to good advantage.

Mr. GOOD. I think the evidence before the committee is to the effect that the shortage next year, at least so Gen. Hines stated—and it is the estimate of the War Department—will be caused by the fact that they will not have enough barges and boats to do the business, but after these barges and boats that have already been contracted for by the Railroad Administration and paid for by the Railroad Administration, to be turned over to the War Department, are placed in operation they think there will be a net revenue. There ought to be a net revenue, because there will be then a great many millions of dollars invested, and we ought not only to have a net revenue, but it ought to be a substantial amount.

Mr. SABATH. Even now, with the small barges we have, they are of great aid and assistance in transporting our vast cargoes in various sections of the country.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that is so; yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the purpose of appropriating the money on the terminal facilities there is to establish a transfer connection between the rail and water carriers, and is a part and parcel of the greater transportation system, and there hangs in the balance now the determination of the success or failure of inland water transportation in this country, and if it now fails it will be positively determined adversely to the undertaking for 30 or 40 years to come. If it is a successful and profitable undertaking on the part of great transportation, then it ought to be adopted by the Government to relieve the congestion that exists in the Nation to-day.

Mr. GOOD. That is true. Now, there have been some changes and additions in regard to the national-park service.

There is also one increase of $253,897, made necessary by the increased pay bill for the Coast Survey. That was an increase in salaries, made necessary by the increased pay bill, which passed after the House bill was enacted.

Mr. CRAGO. What was that?

Mr. GOOD. That was $253,897.

Mr. CRAGO. Did they put in increased pay for the Army and Navy in that?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. CRAGO. I do not think it is necessary for the Army and Navy.

Mr. GOOD. There is nothing for the Army and Navy.

Then, the item for investigations concerning women in industry was agreed to in conference.

The House bill originally carried $75,000 for that. It went out on a point of order in the House, and was restored by the Senate, and we agreed to that. We carried $225,000 for the Employment Service. That went out in the House, and that was restored by the Senate. That was agreed to in conference. The Senate added $1,562,000 for the Panama Canal for maintenance. It added also $150,000 for sanitation of the Panama Canal. The Senate receded from those increases.

Now, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has asked for information with regard to the legislation that is carried in the bill.

The Senate placed an amendment on the bill making certain changes in the transportation act. Section 210 of the transportation act makes provision for new loans to railroads for equipment and the method of paying for it. Gentlemen will recall that a period of five years was given for the repayment of those loans. After the passage of that act it was claimed that the time for repayment was too short. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House and the Commerce Committee in the Senate practically decided that the time was too short. When this amendment came up, I consulted with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who is an authority on this subject and is familiar with its details. He asked that the Senate amendment in that respect be agreed to. The bill also provides with regard to the $300,000,000 for these loans that it may be used for the payment of outstanding deficits. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] informed me that that was the intention.

Some attorney in the Treasury Department rendered a ruling that it could not be used for that purpose. That ruling then was sent to the Attorney General, who held that it could be used for that purpose. But inasmuch as there was a conflict between these two legal authorities, the Treasury Department wanted that matter cleared up.

Then the House bill centered in the Treasury Department certain authority with regard to loans and certain authority in the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was thought best that this authority should be concentrated with regard to loans in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that its power with regard to these loans that were made out of this $300,000,000 fund should be made absolute, and the Senate amendment provided for those changes. After the Senate made those changes the conferees on the part of the House took the matter up with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who not only agreed that it was desirable but thought it was very necessary, and therefore the conferees have agreed to that amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand, of the three changes that the gentleman has detailed, the first is extending the time of payment on the debt due from the railroads to the Government from 5 to 15 years?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman recall what the amount of that is?

Mr. GOOD. Of the equipment trust?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. It is out of the $300,000,000 appropriated in the transportation act. I do not understand that the amount of the equipment trust that the director general of finances was attempting to float is involved in this at all. It is the $300,000,000 fund carried in section 210 of the transportation act.

Mr. WINGO. I thought the $300,000,000 fund was a revolving fund.

Mr. GOOD. It is.

Mr. WINGO. I want to find out if I am wrong or not; I am not engaging in a controversy with the gentleman, but I want to obtain information. I had the idea that the Esch-Cummins Act provided for a five-year time on certain indebtedness due the United States by the railroads.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. This amendment, that you say the conferees have agreed to, extends that time 10 years more, making it 15 years?

Mr. GOOD. That is correct. That draws interest at 6 per cent.

Mr. WINGO. I have not the Esch-Cummins Act before me, and I do not recall what particular fund that is, the amount in millions.

Mr. GOOD. That is the new loans that can be made to the railroads on equipment, secured out of the $300,000,000 fund that is loaned to them. They take an equipment trust security, and under the act those loans can only be made for five years. The railroads say they will be in as bad condition in five years as they are now in paying them, and they said they ought to have the same power that they have always had in making their loans on equipment, and that is to make them for 15 years.

Mr. WINGO. The last change you made is that where the Esch-Cummins Act allowed the Secretary of the Treasury the exercise of certain discretion. You have transferred that discretion to the Interstate Commerce Commission along with the other discretion that the original act gave to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. So the Interstate Commerce Commission will have absolute control——

Mr. GOOD. With regard to these loans.

Mr. WINGO. And the discretion of making these loans in behalf of the Government will be left entirely to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. WINGO. And not to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely. And I will say to the gentleman that Senator UNDERWOOD came before the conferees and asked for the additional authority. He was very insistent to the committee. The conferees, after consulting, saw no objection to it, and that is contained in the paragraph at the bottom of page 6 of the report, which provides that the loans for equipment authorized by section 201 of the transportation act shall be made to or through such organization, car trust, or other agency, as may be determined.

Now, the Senator's idea was that a great many of these loans would have to be made through some other organization than the carriers. The act itself limited it to the carriers; but to make it a mobile and workable proposition, the loans would have to be made to car trusts, security, or other organizations. We saw no objection to it, and after conferring with those who were interested, and who were experts on the subject, they saw no objection to it.

Mr. WINGO. If I get the idea, it is that if they want to they can organize a separate corporation to handle this equipment, and so forth?

Mr. GOOD. That is correct.

Mr. WINGO. And then instead of making loans direct, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have authority to make loans to this corporation created to handle them.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is right about that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. As I understand, most of this loan of $300,000,000 is to be made for cars and rolling stock. In the extended period of 15 years most of the equipment would be worn out before the time comes for payment.

Mr. GOOD. No. That is just what Mr. Sherley did in reference to the 100,000 cars purchased during the war. It was what Mr. Hines recommended, and they say that is in accordance with the existing practice, and it is the plan that has been followed for years in regard to equipment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Interstate Commerce Commission has discretion in the matter as to whether it shall make the term 15 years or a less number of years.

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I see from some of the reports that they are going to put most of the $300,000,000 into cars and rolling stock. It occurs to me that most of the cars would be worn out in less than 15 years.

Mr. GOOD. Let me say to the gentleman that it is the estimate of the Railroad Administration that because of the war, because of the fact that the great railroad shops and locomotive works of America were used for war purposes, we are short in railroad equipment to the value of $1,600,000,000 behind what we would have had if these facilities could have been used during the war for that purpose, and that is the reason why there is such a congestion all over the United States to-day.

Now, I think the other items of legislation in the conference report are of minor importance, and are matters upon which there is no dispute. Therefore I move the previous question on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 104, noes 18.

Accordingly the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14335, the third deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SETTLEMENT OF CONTRACTS.

The following unexpended amounts of appropriations for the fiscal year 1918 shall remain upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the respective appropriations until June 30, 1921, to permit payments for the adjustment and settlement of claims resulting from the suspension or termination of contracts or other procurement obligations of the War Department, consequent upon the suspension of hostilities, and for the adjustment of claims under the act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Under the head of "Transportation of the Army," page 25, I notice an estimate for the transportation of the wives of soldiers from Europe. I called the gentleman's attention when the sundry civil bill was up to the fact that the effects of officers and enlisted men who lost their lives and articles sent to many of our soldiers were stored in Paris with the American Express Co., and that the charges now held against them are so exorbitant that on many of the articles which were not delivered the charges are more than the intrinsic value of the property. At that time the gentleman thought that there was a provision to return that property to the United States, but I have taken the matter up with the War Department and they say that there is no authority to pay for the return of these articles.

Mr. GOOD. No estimate was made for anything of the kind and I assume that there is plenty of money available out of the pay for the Army or the transportation of the Army for that purpose. This is a matter that they would not be authorized to pay. This is an appropriation of $13,000 that would be subject to a point of order. It is to bring back the war brides of men in the service who married over there. They were ordered back to this country. They had no money with which to bring their wives back and the War Department felt that it would not be right to leave them stranded over there, and so they attempted to pay their transportation back. They owe these claims to the steamship companies for bringing back the war brides of our soldiers.

Mr. McKEOWN. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman again to the fact that although we have called the attention of the War Department to the fact that the effects of these deceased soldiers and many others are in the warehouses of the American Express Co., which was one of the corporations taken care of when the Railroad Administration bill turned the roads back, yet they are charging such high rates that these effects will have to be sold at auction in Paris because the Government can not bring them back.

Mr. GOOD. The War Department has made no estimate for it.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to voice my protest against these charges, so large that they will prevent the relatives of these deceased soldiers getting this property.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's pro forma amendment. I am in favor of this appropriation of $13,000 because these war brides ought to be brought back. I think, however, the sum should have been made in some other amount—$14,000 or $12,500—because we want these war brides to start out under the most auspicious circumstances possible in this country. We don't want any 13 hanging over them.

The main reason I desire to call attention to this item, however, is this: The other day we passed a resolution in this House to carry 300 civilians to Antwerp on Army transports to engage in the Olympic games, and it was then stated by my friends on the other side of the House that it would not cost a penny to carry them over on the Government transports. But this very item in this bill demonstrates the fallacy of that statement. It demonstrates that it cost $13,000 to bring the war brides back, and it is going to cost several times $13,000 to deliver 300 civilians in Antwerp to engage in the Olympic games. And you are doing it when your country is in debt, but you did it over my protest.

The Clerk read as follows:

Supplies, services, and transportation, 1918, $9,625,816.55.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to an error in line 2, page 27, where there are two "and"s.

Mr. GOOD. I move that the first "and" be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $51,505,158.88: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used to pay any claim arising out of any contract or other obligation unless such contract or obligation was entered into subsequently to April 6, 1917, and prior to November 12, 1918.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 10, after the figures, strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be paid for any claim for profits on any such contract or obligation."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether any part of this appropriation was intended to cover profits or not, but out of abundance of caution I think it would be well to have the provision in there. I know that in a number of other contracts that have been settled and provision made for them such a stipulation has been embodied in the legislation that provided for the payment. It seems to me that these various claims that are authorized when contracts and obligations were settled should carry with them no profit on any work done before the contract was canceled. There simply ought to be a payment of the obligation due or the expenses incurred prior to the cancellation of the obligation. I have offered the amendment for the purpose of limiting it to that.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, there are large unexpended balances under these appropriations that will lapse on June 30. All general appropriations are available for obligations during the fiscal year for which they are made. They continue available for two additional years for payment of obligations incurred during the year for which the appropriation was made. These appropriations were all made during the war, and the money has not been available for obligations since the years specified here. None of it will be available for payment of the obligations, no matter how meritorious they are, after June 30, unless we extend the time. We are not appropriating any additional money. The Secretary of War estimates that it will be necessary to use approximately $51,505,000 to settle these claims. The gentleman is injecting into the question something altogether new.

These contracts were made during the war. Some of them have been canceled, some of them have not been paid because of contests; some of them may go to the courts. All we are attempting to do is to extend the time within which payment may be made. What might happen is this: If the gentleman's amendment should be adopted the War Department might rush ahead and settle these claims before June 30, and we might actually lose more money than we would save. There is no legislation that I know of on contracts of this kind where Congress has provided that they should be made without profit. I think the profits are too large in a great many of them. They were contracts made during the war and approved by the Secretary of War. I doubt very much the wisdom of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman understands from the first part of this that it applies only to contracts not finished at the time the war closed?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. This proviso is to prevent any construction being placed upon this extension of time whereby the Secretary of War might enter into new contracts or pay for contracts not made strictly in accord with——

Mr. JONES of Texas. But the gentleman does not think that in contracts never finished a profit should be allowed manufacturers of arms and equipment of the kind mentioned and enumerated on page 26, when in the other contracts we have appropriated for we have specifically provided that no profits should be allowed?

Mr. GOOD. We never have provided for anything of that kind.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. In all of the legislation this kind of an amendment has gone on, that in these informal obligations and contracts the Government has assumed, no allowance should be made for profit.

Mr. GOOD. So far as it relates to informal contracts, the law already provides for that. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $242,500.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee if the $242,500 carried in this item is sufficient. I noticed by the report that it has not been reduced. Is it absolutely sufficient?

Mr. GOOD. The board of managers sent their estimates to the committee with quite a full explanation. The amount made necessary for subsistence by this deficiency is caused largely by the increase in the cost of the kind of subsistence they have had to purchase.

Mr. PELL. I sincerely trust that there has been no effort made whatever to economize on this particular thing.

Mr. GOOD. It is just exactly what the board asked.

Mr. PELL. Everything possible is being done for these men?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. PELL. It seems to me that the prime duty of this Government to these soldiers is to take care of the injured.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that it was with this thought that we should not question this item, because we propose to use for the next year about nine or ten thousand beds in the soldiers' homes for the soldiers of this war. This is all to go to purchase provisions, and if it is not all used this year there will be a demand for it immediately at the opening of the next fiscal year.

Mr. PELL. I am sure we are all willing to do everything necessary for that purpose. Those men who have suffered in the service of their country should receive all that we can give them. They should be cared for and cherished; their pains have ransomed us all and they are a charge on us all, not of charity but of justice and duty. They do not complain; they maintain no lobby—their wounds speak for them. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

DAMAGE CLAIMS.

Damage claims: To pay the claims adjusted and determined by the Navy Department under the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, on account of damages occasioned to private property by collisions with vessels of the United States Navy and for which naval vessels were responsible, certified to Congress in House Documents Nos. 741 and 757 of the present session, $5,302.44: Provided, That the amount stated in item 18 in Document 741 shall be $228.79 instead of $288.79.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in reference to this item for damage claims, Navy Department, and that is if there has ever come to his knowledge any requests for appropriations to pay claims which were occasioned by the laying of the helium-gas line from Petrolia to Fort Worth?

Mr. GOOD. No; this would not come within that class of claims.

Mr. PARRISH. I did not think it would come within that class of claims.

Mr. GOOD. No; this class of claims has relation only to collisions between vessels, where the vessel belonging to the Navy is at fault, and where the amount involved is less than $500.

Mr. PARRISH. I see that it would not come under that class of claims, but it suggested to my mind that these people had never been compensated for the damage occasioned by the laying of that line. I know of my own knowledge there are probably as many as 50 claims which have passed through my hands occasioned by the laying of that line, and I was wondering if any arrangement could be made to compensate those citizens whose property had been damaged by reason of the laying of that line by the Government.

Mr. GOOD. I know nothing about the controversy.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Outfits on first enlistment: Outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, at not to exceed $100 each; for the clothing gratuity of officers and other members of the Naval Reserve Force, not to exceed $150 each for officers for civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct, undesirability, or inaptitude; in all, fiscal year 1919, $856,848.03.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If I may have the attention of the Chairman, I notice in line 9 the bill carries an item for civilian clothes for dishonorably discharged men at $15 per man. That evidently is the price that was established a number of years ago and clothing has gone up to such an extent that they would probably have to give the man something made out of paper at $15 or else let him go away naked.

Mr. GOOD. This is an actual deficiency for the year 1919.

Mr. CALDWELL. Where the Government has actually paid the money?

Mr. GOOD. Where the clothing has already been furnished and this is to compensate in that amount.

Mr. CALDWELL. All right.

The Clerk read as follows:

For vehicle allowance, the hiring of drivers, the rental of vehicles, and the purchase and exchange and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles for, and the operation of screen-wagon and city delivery and collection services, $1,200,000.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to ask the chairman if this $1,200,000 takes into consideration the increased compensation to be paid to the employees of the Postal Service in case the bill is reported in to-morrow?

Mr. GOOD. No; this has nothing to do with that.

Mr. JUUL. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. GOOD. This is simply to take care of the vehicle service.

Mr. JUUL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee to explain the difference between this item for copies of the Official Postal Guide for 1920, $6,500, and for 1921, $50,000.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. What does that difference represent?

Mr. GOOD. The difference represents the additional cost for securing the Postal Guide. The contract is on a four-year basis. The Post Office Department took proposals for printing the Postal Guide, and the increased cost is $50,000 in excess of the $43,000 carried in the legislative bill for 1921. It is over 100 per cent increase of the price at which the contract was let four years ago.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Is it not, in fact, about 400 per cent increase?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know exactly what the contract was let at four years ago, but my recollection is it was for $33,000, and for the next year the legislative bill carries $43,000. Since that time, in advertising for bids, they received one proposal, and could not get other proposals, and they increased it $50,000. We have to have these Postal Guides.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement of the Government Printing Office for the cost of furnishing steam for heating and electric current for lighting and power to the Post Office Department building at Massachusetts Avenue and North Capitol Street, District of Columbia, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the committee to the spelling of the word "reimbursement" on page 34, line 10.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to make the correction.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For payment of limited indemnity for the injury or loss of pieces of domestic registered matter, insured, and collect-on-delivery mail, for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1918, $50,000;

For 1919, $125,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the spelling of the word "years" in line 4, page 36.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the spelling.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by star routes (excepting service in Alaska), including temporary service to newly established offices, $1,600,000.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the debate on this bill has covered an exceptionally wide range of subjects. Therefore it seems to me I may with propriety beg the indulgence of the House while I make something of a personal statement. No man can prize more highly the great privilege I have had of being a Member of the Sixty-fourth, the Sixty-fifth, and this the Sixty-sixth Congress. The European war broke out a few months before I was first elected, so that the days I have spent here have been critical ones for the Nation and full of long hours of work for Members of Congress. In fact, the Congress has been in session almost continuously since early in December, 1915. During that time came our participation in the world-wide conflict. Critics there have been, critics there are, and critics there will be, but the cold truth remains that the United States raised and equipped a larger Army, put to sea a greater Navy, and raised more dollars for her own finances and for the Allies than was believed possible. The American people rose to the occasion, and that their great effort made possible the defeat of Germany there can be no doubt. Designing men, for political purposes, have attempted to besmirch that record of imperishable glory, but as the years of the century roll by it will in pride be told with patriotic fervor as a priceless heritage. Certainly there were mistakes; it could not have been otherwise. Mere human men do not make perfect records either individually or when collectively bound together in a republic. Perfection is a quality of the Divine alone. That our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps were the best physical specimens, the cleanest morally, the best fed, the best clothed, the best equipped, and the best paid will always be a source of pride to every American. On every occasion presented I voted to sustain and support the defenders of our Nation. Through the days of the gathering storm and the weeks of the conflict my vote was cast to uphold the dignity, the honor, and the integrity of America.

The Sixty-third Congress, the first during the administration of President Wilson, placed some notable measures on the statute books. Let me mention the income-tax law, the Federal reserve act, the agricultural extension act, the Clayton antitrust law, the creation of the Federal Trade Commission, the seaman's law, and the marine insurance act. How thankful we all are that the Federal Reserve System was established before the war. It removed from Wall Street the control of the money of the land and made financial panics a thing of the past.

Not less brilliant were the legislative achievements of the Sixty-fourth Congress, in which I first served, which provided for section grazing homesteads, Federal aid in the construction and maintenance of roads, the safety of railroad employees, uniform grain grades, rural credits, and liability for injury of Government employees. The rural-credit system has, of course, made but a small percentage of the real estate loans, but its effect has been to reduce interest rates quite generally over the country.

The time of the Sixty-fifth Congress was very largely devoted to legislation under which the war was fought and financed. The soldiers' insurance law provided insurance at low rates for soldiers, sailors, and marines, made provision for compensating those wounded and disabled in the service, and extended financial assistance to dependents of service men. The income and excess-profits taxes recognized the justness of graduated taxes by levying heavier rates on big incomes than were ever before laid in this country. The deportation was authorized of foreigners who claimed their alien citizenship to evade the obligation of military service here. Within less than three months after the armistice, the resumption of voluntary enlistments for the Army was ordered, and thus it became apparent that this Nation, which willingly adopted the draft law for raising an army in time of war, did not intend to continue in time of peace a policy of compulsory military service. Under the food-control act the President had guaranteed the price of the 1919 wheat crop and appropriate legislation was enacted to carry that into effect.

Coming events cast their shadows before them, and so the 1920 presidential election had its effect on the Sixty-sixth Congress. That unanimity of purpose which prevailed during the two previous Congresses was succeeded by criticism and discord. Even so, considerable legislation has been enacted, of which I mention the submission of the woman-suffrage amendment, the oil-and-coal-land leasing act, the law for the enforcement of national prohibition, the civil-service retirement act, provision for the vocational rehabilitation of those disabled in industry, the creation of a Woman's Bureau in the Department of Labor, and the liberalization of the compensation payments under the war-risk insurance law.

I did not vote for the railroad control act, for I did then and do now doubt the wisdom of embarking on a policy of guaranteeing the dividends of the railroads by directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to lay such freight rates as will produce the required net income. That looked too much like the cost-plus system to suit me. The provision which requires consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission before any railroad can be built, extended, or bought is covertly drawn to head off any competitive railroad building and to preserve the railroad status quo. We are now advised that the estimated returns from the freight rate increases already applied for under that act are as much for each year as the much-talked-of deficit was for the two years and two months of governmental control.

It is unfortunate, indeed, that there came the differences between the President and the Senate regarding the treaty of peace, which includes the covenant of the League of Nations. More than 25 of the nations of the world have ratified that covenant, while the United States holds aloof. The fathers and mothers of this land have a right to demand for the coming citizens that there come as the result of the great conflict something more than a big debt. If there does not come an international agreement or understanding or league of nations or something to bind the nations of the earth together on common ground, then the future presents only a race for armament in a breathing spell before another war.

FEDERAL AID FOR GOOD ROADS.

In my first congressional campaign in 1912 I talked to western South Dakota folks about Federal aid in the construction and maintenance of roads, and there were those who smiled at what then appeared to be an idle dream. In 1916 it was my privilege to help pass the first Federal appropriation bill for good roads, and thereunder South Dakota received $1,256,250 for the five-year period, besides aid in road work in the forest reserves. The appropriation has been increased, and the South Dakota allotment up to 1921 now stands at $4,452,883.04.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

South Dakota west of the Missouri River is larger than the State of Ohio. It has approximately 1,100 miles of railroads, 2,000 miles of rural mail delivery routes, and 4,000 miles of star routes. That mileage statement in itself shows clearly the mail-service problem. I have worked with home folks in a studied effort to improve the service, and to-day approximately 3,000 homes are receiving mail delivery on rural or star routes or city delivery established since I came to Congress.

The unusual condition brought about by the war, with counting costs and increasing salaries, has been a serious trial to the Postal Service. Most any sort of labor has been able to command more money than the average postmaster, post-office clerk, or rural carrier. That has also been true of all other lines of the Government service. A temporary bonus was provided, but even that has failed to put the Government employees on a parity with other workers. The Postal Salaries Reclassification Commission has filed its report, and action thereon by Congress will very shortly be taken. I have no doubt that the report will be adopted and postal workers all along the line will be benefited thereby.

Fourth-class postmasters never have received the recognition to which they are entitled. The little offices are just as essential in the general postal scheme as the big offices, yet a fourth-class postmaster is expected for a pitifully small allowance based on the business of the office to furnish a building, heat and light it, and do the work. In all lines of public service the American people have been doing away with the old fee system, and I hope the day will soon come when fourth-class postmasters will not longer be on a fee basis.

Another great inequality in postal affairs is the condition that prevails in the star-route service. These routes are on a contract basis, and, hence, within the technical meaning of the term, the contractors or carriers are not employees of the United States. For that reason no provision for their relief is made in the report of the Reclassification Commission. Because of unusual conditions, we provided relief for the man who had a contract to furnish Army or Navy supplies. We have made provision for the man who has a contract to build a post-office building, but I have yet to see any relief or hear any voice raised in this House in behalf of the man who has a star-route contract, and there are thousands of them scattered over the country. I heretofore called attention to the exceptional star-route mileage in the district I have the honor to represent. Practically every contractor, where the contract was made a year or two or three years ago, is to-day faced with bankruptcy. Many of them have already been wiped out.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KREIDER. I wish to say to the gentleman that the Post Office Department has authority to change their contracts and agree on a new price.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is mistaken. They absolutely refused to do it down in my section.

Mr. KREIDER. I know they have done it.

Mr. BLANTON. I have had 20 different cases up with them, and they refuse to change the contract.

Mr. GANDY. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] is in error on that, because I have had much experience in the last few months with that proposition.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. I yield.

Mr. SINNOTT. I will state that I agree with the gentleman. I have had the matter up with the Postmaster General, and he refuses to approve a bill that tries to remedy the condition. I have one contractor that offered $4,000 to be relieved from his contract.

Mr. KREIDER. I have had a route in my district where the carrier had agreed to carry the mail for, I think, $500. He took it up with the department and the department adjusted it on the basis of $800.

Mr. SINNOTT. The department not only refused to adjust the matter in my district, but refused to approve of a bill to give them authority to adjust it.

Mr. CRAGO. One of the troubles I have had is this: I have had cases, just as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] had, where they have voluntarily increased the pay in existing contracts. But what I do object to is that they do not seem to have a uniform rule. A man comes up and makes a good case, and they refuse to increase him. There ought to be some uniform system.

Mr. GANDY. It is my understanding there is no provision of law to adjust the compensation except where the Government wants to increase the service on the route or because of something of that kind it is deemed wise to let a new contract.

Mr. CRAGO. And where there has been an increase of the amount of mail matter carried.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true that the contract is practically prescribed by the law that Congress has passed, and the Postmaster General has no discretion whatever about them?

Mr. GANDY. The Postmaster General has no discretion.

Mr. BRIGGS. Congress has taken no steps to change the situation.

Mr. GANDY. That is exactly it.

Mr. JUUL. I wondered if the gentleman was going to offer an amendment to cure the case he complains of.

Mr. GANDY. I have no opportunity to do that on this bill, but I do hope to offer to this House in the very near future an amendment to a bill, where I think it will be in order, to take care of that situation. There should be an adjustment of pay based on present-day costs, for certainly this great Government of ours ought not to receive service at less than the cost thereof.

CUSTER STATE PARK GAME SANCTUARY.

The 1919 session of the Legislature of South Dakota memorialized Congress for an addition to Custer State Park, which is located in the Black Hills in Custer County. Pursuant thereto I introduced and secured the passage of an act authorizing the establishment of the Custer State Park game sanctuary, not exceeding 30,000 acres in the higher ranges adjoining and west of the State park and including Harney Peak. The land will remain a part of the national forest, but the State will be permitted to fence it, and on a basis of even exchange to acquire not to exceed 1,600 acres within the area for camp sites, administrative and other locations. With this addition, South Dakota's State park will contain nearly 100,000 acres and will be the largest in the Nation. Without doubt in the years to come it will be a heritage of which the State will indeed be proud. It is now well stocked with game, and its rugged mountain grandeur, set out by lofty peaks, deep gorges, and clear, sparkling streams, makes it an ideal recreation place.

THE CHAMBERLAIN BRIDGE.

The pile and pontoon bridge of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, across the Missouri River at Chamberlain, early in its existence acquired a habit of journeying down the river with the flow of ice in the early spring or late fall and of drifting on the crests of such freshets as chose to pass that way during the late spring and summer. Before I came to Congress the State board of railroad commissioners had taken action in court, the State legislature had passed appropriate resolutions, commercial clubs and private citizens had protested, cussed, and discussed this situation, which was then, and is now, a menace to the safety of the property and persons dependent upon that bridge for crossing the river. The very uncertainty of travel that way has retarded the settlement, growth, and development of the country along the Milwaukee Railroad between the Missouri River and Rapid City.

Seeking to remedy this almost intolerable situation, I introduced in the Sixty-fourth Congress and secured the passage of the act of April 28, 1916, to compel the building of a new bridge. That act gave the railroad company two years within which to commence construction, but within that time came the war with Germany and incidental war conditions, including control of the steel industry by the War Trade Board, which made impossible the erection of the bridge. Then, also, came the Federal control of railroads, during which an authorization for the erection of the bridge could not be secured. In 1918, after the bridge franchise lapsed, the railroad company, although not able to procure a new bridge, moved to Chamberlain two secondhand steel spans of 300 feet each. The work of erecting those spans and the building and launching of a new 200-foot pontoon was completed in the spring of 1919. I refused to introduce a bill for another franchise unless it carried adequate safeguards of the public interest, for it must be remembered that under the general laws governing bridges across navigable streams no authority is retained over the structures except that pertaining to navigation. During the summer and early fall of 1918, in conferences with Government officials here and with railroad officials in Chicago, I insisted that the bridge, as contemplated, would not meet the requirements of continuous railroad traffic, and later events have justified that opinion. H. R. 13004, Sixty-fifth Congress, introduced by me on September 25, 1918, which became a law on February 25, 1919, granting extensions of time within which to commence and complete the bridge, provides:

> That if the bridge * * * shall be found, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, to be so constructed that it does not reasonably meet the requirements for continuous and uninterrupted railroad traffic, then, and in such event, he may order such changes as in his judgment may be necessary to make said bridge meet such requirements. All the privileges herein conferred and the right to maintain the bridge to be built hereunder shall cease and determine unless such changes as the Secretary of War shall direct shall be commenced within six months and completed within two years next following the date of service of such order.

Thus, twice has a precedent been set in bridge legislation—once when the building of a new bridge was sought to be compelled by the repeal of the bridge franchise then in force with a requirement that plans be submitted for a new bridge; and, second, when the Secretary of War was given jurisdiction to see that the bridge meets the requirements of continuous railroad traffic. I filed formal complaint against the bridge, and an investigation by Army engineers sustained the complaint. A hearing has been ordered at Chamberlain, S. Dak., before the Army district engineer, Maj. R. T. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., upon the question of alterations or additions necessary to meet the requirements of continuous railroad traffic, and, the Secretary of War having already found the bridge to be deficient, there is no question but what changes will be ordered. In fact, the Chief of Engineers of the Army has announced that in his opinion the following changes are necessary:

> Replace the pontoon draw by a lift span or other satisfactory form of opening providing a vertical clearance of not less than 38 feet above the extreme high water of the navigation season.
> Replace the western pile approach by two steel spans, with adequate protection for the western abutment.
> Maintain the channel within the draw or lift span.
> Replace the present pile piers by concrete or masonry piers extending below the scour line.

I thus have reason to believe that there will shortly be erected at Chamberlain such a structure as will make certain the crossing of the Missouri River at any and all times of the year.

PENSIONS, COMPENSATION, AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

The pension law lately enacted for Civil War veterans is the most generous ever placed on our statute books. The "boys of long ago" who by their service in the Union Army made possible this great country of to-day will be materially assisted by the increases provided. The recent enactment by Congress of a bill to pension the disabled veterans of the Spanish-American War, whether that disability arose in or subsequent to war service, is evidence that Congress believes those who offered their services to the Nation in its hour of danger ought to be assisted in case of disability. Pensions for the widows of Spanish War veterans were provided during the last Congress, and rightly so. Assistance has also been given during my service here to the veterans of Indian wars. Several private pension bills introduced by me for veterans who were equitably entitled to assistance but were unable for some technical reason or other to secure a pension under the general law have been enacted. Allowances under the war-risk law provide for disabled service men of the recent war. They are the most liberal ever paid by any country, and experience under that law is demonstrating just how helpful it is, both to the veterans and the country. Vocational training and rehabilitation are provided for those veterans whose disability indicates they can not return to their previous occupation.

Looking back over my service in Congress, it will always be to me a pleasant recollection to know that I have advocated liberality in providing for the defenders of the Nation, and have heartily supported pension, war-risk insurance, and vocational-training measures.

BELLE FOURCHE IRRIGATION PROJECT.

The Belle Fourche project is one of the most successful of the Government projects. Nearly 100,000 acres will be irrigable when it is completed and water is now available for over 82,000 acres. Complete success will not be assured until a sufficient water supply is provided for the Johnson lateral and the Willow Creek lateral is constructed. Water for the Johnson lateral is taken directly from the inlet canal between the Belle Fourche River and the reservoir; hence it is dependent on the unregulated flow of the river, which has been insufficient during 4 of the 10 years of the operation of this unit that serves approximately 3,750 acres. A plan for constructing a storage reservoir in Chicken Creek, southwest of Belle Fourche, has been approved by the Reclamation Service, which, if constructed, would not only serve this lateral but furnish additional water to the Red Water project, a private project of many years' successful operation. The estimated cost of the reservoir and incidental works is $300,000. The Willow Creek unit is a proposed extension of the north canal a distance of approximately 20 miles, and between seven and eight thousand acres will be served. The cost of the unit is estimated at $180,000.

On May 8, 1920, during the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill in the House, I fully discussed the urgent need for storage for the Johnson lateral and for the construction of the Willow Creek lateral, and was assured by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that additional appropriations for the Belle Fourche project will be made just as soon as money is available in the reclamation fund, which is thought will be within the next few months.

LIVE-STOCK DEMONSTRATION WORK.

In 1916 I secured an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill making provision for investigations and experiments in problems connected with dairying and meat production in the semiarid and irrigated localities. Under that amendment at the Government farm at Ardmore, S. Dak., barns have been erected and other improvements made, and dairying, hog raising, and the production of beef cattle are receiving careful attention. That is known as a dry-land station, while the one at Newell is an irrigated station, and there hog feeding and pasturing, sheep pasturing, and the testing of mixed-grass pasturing are being carried on and studied. Mr. Chairman, the records of this work, experimentation, and study will be disseminated among the stock raisers of the West and great benefit will be derived therefrom.

The two stations mentioned are not only furnishing excellent examples in live-stock demonstration work but in crop production as well. Every farmer in western South Dakota who possibly can ought to visit one of them, for I dare say no one can thus spend a few hours without acquiring new ideas and useful information.

DEADWOOD ASSAY OFFICE.

Early this year the House Appropriations Committee again made an effort to close the Deadwood assay office by eliminating the item from the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, but it was restored in the House by the adoption of an amendment which I offered. That office is needed by the prospectors and the gold producers. Thought should be given to making it more useful instead of trying to close it.

THE SIOUX CLAIMS.

Long before I became a resident of South Dakota the Sioux Indians were complaining that they were practically forced to cede the Black Hills country in 1876 and received no real remuneration therefor. The Constitution of the United States provides that private individuals can not sue the Government; hence without special authority from Congress there was no way they could secure an adjudication of their claims. Early in the Sixty-fourth Congress I introduced a bill to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine not only the Black Hills claim of the Sioux but all claims of the tribe or any band or bands thereof, to the end that there might be a complete accounting between the Government and its wards. I reintroduced that bill in the Sixty-fifth and again in the Sixty-sixth Congress, and recently it became a law. The Indians of western South Dakota are thus to be given an opportunity to balance accounts with the Government, for which they have striven for nearly 40 years.

IMPROVEMENTS AT INDIAN BOARDING SCHOOLS.

At Rosebud Boarding School, at Mission, S. Dak., and at Pine Ridge Boarding School, at Pine Ridge Agency, improvements and additions are under way which will cost approximately $100,000 at each place. These improvements will increase the capacity of both schools, will make them more convenient and enjoyable for pupils and employees, and will provide better educational training.

Appropriations totaling $67,000 have been made for a new school building and assembly hall, remodeling of buildings, construction and maintenance of the road through the school farm, and for irrigation and drainage at the Rapid City Indian School since I came to Washington. These improvements when completed will increase the capacity and efficiency of this school, which is held in high esteem by the Sioux Indians and neighboring tribes. At the next session of Congress I will offer further plans for strengthening it.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN SOUTH DAKOTA NATIONAL FORESTS.

The Public Lands Committee of the House has favorably reported H. R. 11118, which I introduced to authorize an exchange of lands in the national forests in South Dakota between the Government and private owners. There are many instances in the forests where a property owner would like to trade some land chiefly valuable for forest purposes for adjoining agricultural Government land, or where one may have timber property in two or more locations and it would be to his interest and the forest's interest to have his holding consolidated. Both of these classes of cases would be taken care of by the passage of this bill, which now has an advantageous position upon the calendar of the House.

DESIGNATION OF LANDS.

Subsequent to the amendment which on March 4, 1915, made the half-section homestead law applicable to South Dakota and the passage of the section stock-raising homestead law on December 29, 1916, thousands of original and additional homestead applications were filed for lands in western South Dakota. In the public-land States of the West 60,000,000 acres were filed on under the section law alone within 60 days after the approval thereof. It was not humanly possible for the Interior Department officials to pass on this great number of applications without some delay, and in many cases long delay. Practically the first designations under the section law were made in South Dakota, and while delays have tried the patience of many homesteaders, the work has progressed steadily. I am happy to have been advised that within the next few weeks, when designations shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior in the cases now prepared for action, there will be less than 100 pending applications in South Dakota, except the new cases filed. No other public-land State of the West is so fortunate, for nowhere else are the designations so near to completion. Practically all the public lands in South Dakota have been filed on, and it is apparent we are now approaching the time when we shall no longer be called a public-land State. Within a few years at most final proofs will have been made, patents will have been issued, and the land offices will be institutions of the past. One of the most pleasant of the remembrances of my service here will be that thousands of western South Dakota citizens have secured original or additional homesteads under laws or amendments which I either introduced or assisted in the consideration of in the Public Lands Committee of the House.

FORT MEADE.

The Mexican border service and the war brought about such concentration of troops that Fort Meade, near Sturgis, has not been utilized for some years. It is a very excellent post, of brick and stone construction, with electric lights, and a gravity water system. Twelve sections of land provide ample room for maneuvers. Many similar posts are also practically unoccupied.

During the consideration of the general hospital bill for the Public Health Service, which is charged also with the hospitalization of the patients of the War Risk Bureau, I on January 27, 1919, called the attention of the House to the large number of military posts unoccupied and offered an amendment which, in my judgment, would have, if adopted, made possible the use of quite a number of them. A provision in that bill made available to the Public Health Service all space and equipment in Battle Mountain Sanitarium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., not needed for the purposes for which that institution was established. That has somewhat helped the situation, although the majority of the patients at the sanitarium are veterans of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars. Recently during consideration by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of an additional estimate for appropriation for hospital needs of the Public Health Service, I again specifically called attention to the desirability of Fort Meade. I pointed out that in the tenth district of the Public Health Service, which is composed of the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, and Montana, the Surgeon General estimated that additional hospital capacity will be needed for 1,300 patients of varying degrees of incapacity. By the expenditure of a relatively small sum, Fort Meade could quickly be made ready to accommodate that number. The Secretary of War was called before the committee, and although not declining to transfer the post for the time being, he stated:

> This post is only vacant at this time by reason of the necessity of retaining certain cavalry organizations on the Mexican border. A change in conditions which would permit the material reduction of the large body of cavalry now required on the border would require the use of Fort Meade.

The post has recently twice been inspected by officials of the Public Health Service. Whether the Surgeon General will ask for the transfer of Fort Meade I now have no means of knowing, but I do know this magnificent piece of Government property ought not to stand idle if use can be found for it. I have persistently urged that it be occupied, either with troops or by some other Government agency, and shall continue to do so.

IN CONCLUSION.

The review of this legislative record is a pleasant task for me. The accomplishments therein have concerned in one way or another practically every resident of the district I have the honor to represent. I have tried to be faithful to the task at hand and to merit the confidence reposed in me. In attending to business before governmental departments or to other requests of western South Dakota citizens I have endeavored to serve one and all regardless of political affiliation or other distinction. The financial needs of the many governmental activities in my district have been given very careful attention through the maze of details in the various appropriation bills and adequate provision made therefor. My record of votes in the House will show a conscientious endeavor to honestly represent my constituency.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KREIDER. I wish to say to the gentleman that the Post Office Department has authority to change their contracts and agree on a new price.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is mistaken. They absolutely refused to do it down in my section.

Mr. KREIDER. I know they have done it.

Mr. BLANTON. I have had 20 different cases up with them, and they refuse to change the contract.

Mr. GANDY. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] is in error on that, because I have had much experience in the last few months with that proposition.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. I yield.

Mr. SINNOTT. I will state that I agree with the gentleman. I have had the matter up with the Postmaster General, and he refuses to approve a bill that tries to remedy the condition. I have one contractor that offered $4,000 to be relieved from his contract.

Mr. KREIDER. I have had a route in my district where the carrier had agreed to carry the mail for, I think, $500. He took it up with the department and the department adjusted it on the basis of $800.

Mr. SINNOTT. The department not only refused to adjust the matter in my district, but refused to approve of a bill to give them authority to adjust it.

Mr. CRAGO. One of the troubles I have had is this: I have had cases, just as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] had, where they have voluntarily increased the pay in existing contracts. But what I do object to is that they do not seem to have a uniform rule. A man comes up and makes a good case, and they refuse to increase him. There ought to be some uniform system.

Mr. GANDY. It is my understanding there is no provision of law to adjust the compensation except where the Government wants to increase the service on the route or something of that kind it is deemed wise to let a new contract.

Mr. CRAGO. And where there has been an increase of the amount of mail matter carried.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true that the contract is practically prescribed by the law that Congress has passed, and the Postmaster General has no discretion whatever about them?

Mr. GANDY. The Postmaster General has no discretion.

Mr. BRIGGS. Congress has taken no steps to change the situation.

Mr. GANDY. That is exactly it.

Mr. JUUL. I wondered if the gentleman was going to offer an amendment to cure the case he complains of.

Mr. GANDY. I have no opportunity to do that on this bill, but I do hope to offer to this House in the very near future an amendment to a bill, where I think it will be in order, to take care of that situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 7 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this and other subjects connected with my service here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this subject and other subjects in connection with his service here. Is there objection?

Mr. RAMSEY. What are they about? If the remarks are on the bonus bill, I object.

Mr. GANDY. It is not on the bonus.

There was no objection.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the star-route contract, so-called, is a contract for carrying the mail for so much per year, generally for four years. Now, there were some contracts before the war, and the general level of prices were so increased that it was thought best for Congress to pass an act authorizing the department to readjust them. We did so in 1918 and gave the department authority to readjust the contracts, and a great many of them were readjusted.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] and several other gentlemen introduced bills of a similar character.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I can not yield.

Mr. JUUL. I wanted to know from the gentleman if at the time you did that an appropriation was made to enable the department to comply with it?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. There was money in the appropriation bill for that purpose.

Mr. JUUL. Excuse me. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON. A bill was introduced by the gentleman from Oregon, and other gentlemen introduced similar bills, authorizing the department to readjust star-route contracts made since July 1, 1918. The committee had a hearing on it and called upon the department officials to give their reasons for or against this relief bill. We heard the First Assistant Postmaster General and other officials, and it was explained to us that the contracts about which complaint was made were all let after careful information, and it was printed in the contracts that the contractor must be bound by the terms of the contract.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; wait a minute.

Now, then, the theory of these contractors seemed to be that the United States is a guarantor of a profit on every contract that is made with it; that if the contractors make a profit it is all right, but if they have a loss they can come back on the Government.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. STEENERSON. Not now; the gentleman will excuse me.

The department by these bills was authorized to readjust the compensation in their discretion. We asked the officials if they would readjust these contracts if that bill became a law, and they said there was not a single contract in the records of the Post Office Department that they would readjust if they had the authority to do so, and consequently the committee did not see fit to recommend the passage of a bill that would be absolutely fruitless.

It would be no good to anybody, because they pointed out that these contracts were all fairly let with men who were already of age, who knew what they were doing. It was after the war had begun. Anyway, it was after the previous act had been passed, and adjustments had been made under it, and there was no occasion to readjust any of those contracts.

That is the reason why the Post Office Committee did not recommend the passage of any other bill, because if they had passed it and it had become a law the department would not have given the contractors one cent.

Mr. GANDY. There is not any difference in the contract, so far as the obligation of the contract is concerned, with a star-route contractor, or a man who had a public building contract, for whose relief a bill has been passed, or an Army or Navy contractor, is there?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I am not familiar with those contracts where readjustment was made, but I know that the contractors for envelopes, for all sorts of supplies, came in with new bills, just as these star-route contractors did, and we did not recommend them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, before you do that, I would like to have unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill; not only these remarks that I have just made, but the remarks I made before on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Sinnott bill is as follows:

That the Postmaster General is authorized to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star route, screen wagon, and other vehicle service entered into prior to June 30, 1918, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation and to adjust the same for service hereafter to be furnished or rendered in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment; or, in his discretion, with the consent of the contractor and his bondsmen, the Postmaster General may cancel such contracts.

It will be noted that it simply confers authority to adjust, and if the department states there is no case that would be readjusted after authority is given it would be useless to pass the act. Here is the testimony on the subject:

Mr. KOONS. I will give you my views on it. Personally I am not in favor of going back with any further readjustment of these contracts. Now, the contractor when he makes a bid naturally takes a risk. It is a gamble with him as to what service he will be required to perform under the contract. That is the natural risk of any contractor, and when they bid prior to June 30, of course, they did not know that we would enter into the war. I think that it was all right to make the adjustment if the increased costs were not covered. I think that was considered by Congress at the time this original legislation was passed. But by July 1, 1918, they had been in war conditions, and I don't think that readjustments should be made after that period.

* * * * * * *

If you will let me refer to a memorandum—I think the reason June 30, 1917, was the date specified was this: Because the contracts entered into beginning July 1, 1918, were entered into after we had entered the war, and the contractor knew at the time he submitted the bids that the country was engaged in war, and should have taken that into consideration in submitting his contracts, and that was the reason that the contracts entered into prior to June 30, 1917, were entered into before there was any declaration of war.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that that is what they brought up before the conference committee, that these bids were invited before the contract was dated.

Mr. MADDEN. That is right; it is pretty hard to remember the details of all those things.

Mr. KOONS. That is the reason June 30, 1917, was fixed, and the cost did not mount immediately, and for that reason the service that was to be rendered after the approval of that bill was the date fixed.

STATEMENT OF MR. GEORGE L. WOOD, DIVISION OF RURAL MAILS.

Mr. WOOD. A star-route contract is a funny thing, and a star-route contractor is a still funnier thing. I have gotten things from star-route contractors that you could see tears all over the page. The children were barefooted in the wintertime, and the contractor was wearing a straw hat in the wintertime, "and for God's sake do something for us." They asked more money, however, than I thought they ought to get, so I advertised the route, and those same contractors would come back and bid less under the new advertisement than they were getting beforehand, and they would get the contract awarded at less money, too.

I am opposed to any modification of the law that would raise the date a year to contracts made prior to July 1, 1918. There is altogether too prevalent an idea, and it is very common, that nobody should lose money on Government contracts. That is inherent—that nobody should lose money on a contract for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. You have the star routes?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; and I am reactionary on this.

Mr. MADDEN. It has become more common since the war began than ever before.

Mr. WOOD. It is very common—the belief that nobody should lose money on a Government contract—but I don't believe that we should look at it that way.

Now, while we are all sitting here together, I want to show you a typical case. This is Mr. SINNOTT's great case, on which he has written letter after letter, and letter after letter. I am just going to read an extract on how this man came to make his contract: "I had never made any inquiries of any former stage drivers as to the general outlay and expenses, nor had I ever even driven a car to have any personal knowledge of the cost of upkeep of touring cars."

That is the way he came to make the contract. That is the gist of his complaint. "When I put in a bid, I only bid $1,100 for the first-class mail, but I was perfectly green as to the expenses of operating such a line, as I had never talked to any carriers to get their opinions or figures, nor had I ever driven a car to know what ordinary car expenses were. Consequently I find myself going behind every month, and I can't possibly stand it."

Now, this contract was made in 1918, by the way, early in 1918, right after the war began. He simply bit off more than he could chew.

Mr. MADDEN. What do you do in a case like that?

Mr. WOOD. I hold him to his contract, of course.

Mr. MADDEN. He knew the conditions?

Mr. WOOD. He knew the conditions; he knew every one of them.

Mr. MADDEN. He knew all the conditions, except how fast an automobile would run and how many tires it would use up and how much gasoline it would take and how much oil it would take and how much mail he had to carry, or anything about it. He just made a bid.

Mr. WOOD. Now, every star-route bid contains this—and it is not hidden away in small type:

"This proposal is made in my own interest and not by me as the representative of another person or company, and with full knowledge of the distance over the route, the weight of the mail to be carried, and all other particulars in reference to the route to be served."

That is in the bid that the man signs when he makes it; and it is in the advertisement.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose he can't read; then what about it?

Mr. WOOD. He is in a pretty bad way, anyway, if he can't read.

The CHAIRMAN. That is about all we want to know. As I understand it, the department is not in favor of any bill to readjust the compensation of star-route contracts?

Mr. WOOD. Beyond what is already law.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, in a new law?

Mr. WOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. KOONS. And the same about screen wagon.

The CHAIRMAN. And the same thing you have stated about screen-wagon service. So that eliminates those two. Now, what else is there in here? We have covered star routes and vehicle service.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that is the most absurd, unreasonable, argumentative excuse that I have ever heard on the floor of this House for not doing a man's duty.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] admits that the star-route contractors are now facing bankruptcy, and such is the fact. He admits that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] introduced a proper bill to adjust the matter, and thus save these star-route contractors from ruin, and the bill was before his committee, and that he had the Postmaster General before him, and yet he says that because, forsooth, the Postmaster General, in his opinion, would not obey Congress, he virtually threw the gentleman's bill in the wastebasket and did not do anything more about it. And thus he denies all relief to these deserving star-route mail contractors.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield. I say, it is absurd, ridiculous, unreasonable.

I do not yield. The gentleman has argued himself out of court here for the last five minutes. I say what the gentleman should have done was to report out that Sinnott bill and have Congress pass it, and then if the Postmaster General did not carry out the mandate of this Congress we would know how to attend to him, would we not?

Mr. JUUL. What would the gentleman do to him? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will tell you what I would do to him. He is from my State, and he is my friend, and he is the most efficient officer in this Government. [Laughter and applause.] But if he were to disobey the mandate of Congress I would vote to kick him out so quick that it would make his head swim. [Applause.] Cabinet officers do not often disobey the mandates of Congress. You should pass that bill and authorize the Postmaster General to adjust these contracts with the star-route carriers, every one of whom is facing bankruptcy now, and I will guarantee that the contracts will be adjusted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to Francisco Montefredini for legal services and expenses in the matter of the claim of the United States Government for coal on German steamship Waltrante, at Brindisi, Italy, $800, and the value of 3,860.41 lire at the time actual payment is made, in all not to exceed $1,500.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. To whom did this attorney render these services, and why should the Government pay him?

Mr. GOOD. He rendered these services to the United States, and collected, as I recall, about $25,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The appropriation, of course, does not set out any of the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers are authorized and directed to allow the claim of Edward Fraser, Leavenworth, Kans., for $21 for expense of repair of damage to his automobile by automobile belonging to the penitentiary.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee has this claim been passed on by the Claims Committee of the House?

Mr. GOOD. It has been examined by the Department of Justice and recommended.

Mr. CALDWELL. I know, but has it been investigated by the Claims Committee of this House? These things as a usual rule are referred to the Claims Committee.

Mr. GOOD. The Claims Committee of the House does not have jurisdiction of an item of this kind. This is a deficiency.

Mr. CALDWELL. This is a collision claim.

Mr. GOOD. This is just a credit. It is a paper balance, practically to correct a bookkeeping item.

Mr. CALDWELL. But this is to pay a claim of $21 for the expense of repairing a private automobile.

Mr. GOOD. The claim has already been paid.

Mr. CALDWELL. I know; but they had no right to pay it.

Mr. GOOD. It was a claim that originated with regard to an automobile accident.

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand that; and that is the reason why it should go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GOOD. And the claim was paid, but the auditing department have refused to allow the account. Now, this is simply the method that is usually taken in matters of this kind.

Mr. CALDWELL. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The cash allowance of $5 and the clothing allowance of $12, now authorized by law for prisoners on discharge from the United States penitentiaries, are increased during the fiscal year 1921 to $10 and $20, respectively.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this item. What is the idea of legislating an increase in the cash and clothing allowance to prisoners on discharge from the United States penitentiaries?

Mr. GOOD. The present allowance, as the gentleman is aware, is $5 in cash and $12 worth of clothing for prisoners who have served a term in a United States penitentiary upon their discharge. The Department of Justice feels that the present allowance is so small that it does not furnish a discharged prisoner with clothing suitable for him to go upon the streets and travel any distance, and that under the present rates for subsistence the allowance of $5 would perhaps lead a man to go out and steal if necessary before he would get to his home. The matter was seriously urged by the Attorney General, and it seemed to us that in the interest of good morals, if not good administration, it ought to be allowed. It is true that it is legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. The $12 that used to buy a good suit of clothes would not buy a good teddy bear now.

Mr. GOOD. It might buy a necktie.

Mr. WALSH. I make a point of order against this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY.

General expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey, including the same objects specified under this head in the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $36,271.50.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph. I should like to have the chairman explain it.

Mr. GOOD. This expense was incurred in feeding the elk that during the latter months of the winter and the early spring are under the jurisdiction of this department. There was a great shortage in forage, and it was necessary to buy hay in large quantities, 576 tons, to keep the elks from starving. The hay was purchased and the herd was preserved, with a loss, I think, of about 8 or 10 per cent in number. The money was actually paid out and it is an actual deficit to that amount.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is an increase of $36,271 in general expenses of the Biological Survey. It relates to a matter included in the annual appropriation for the Department of Agriculture. At the time the officials of the bureau appeared before the committee they made no claim for additional money, as I remember it, and the committee recommended and the House approved of the same amount of money for this item of general expense for the bureau that was appropriated the year before, following the general policy of the committee to recommend no increases unless absolutely necessary, the idea being that each line of work as far as possible should be kept on a level with the present conditions.

Following the recommendation of the department, when the bill was under consideration and after the hearing of the testimony, the committee recommended, and the bill carried, and the House approved of the amount of last year, which was $34,600.

Evidently the officials of the bureau thought some additional money was necessary, because later they went before the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate and secured an increase of $5,135, bringing the total up to $39,735, and that was all they wanted at that time for expenses under this item.

The committee heard nothing about this additional amount. No testimony was given before the committee relating to it. I wish to know if it is properly a deficit; therefore, I reserve the point of order so the gentleman from Iowa may explain it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I wish to reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. GOOD. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That it is not a deficiency; it is an increased appropriation for the current year.

Mr. GOOD. That is a rather novel and new point of order that the gentleman is suggesting to the Chair. I do not recognize those as legal objections to an appropriation.

Now, what are the facts? The gentleman has been talking about an appropriation for the fiscal year 1921. The facts in this case are these: There was an appropriation for this service of $718,000 for this bureau this year. Out of that appropriation the Secretary of Agriculture, who had charge of 8,000 elk out in this locality known as Jackson Hole, Wyo., made an allotment of $45,000, because a severe snowstorm came on and it was necessary to preserve the herd of elk. These elk are under the charge of the Secretary of Agriculture. He is charged with the care and preservation of animals of this kind. He allotted out of that appropriation $45,000 for keeping these elk and preventing them from starving. There was a natural loss of elk of 500 out of 8,000. He has actually paid out the money or obligated the fund for the purchase of hay to feed the elk during the latter part of the winter and spring, all of which is authorized by law, and there is no question about there being a regular deficiency authorized by the act itself.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The truth of the matter is the gentleman's committee—the Committee on Agriculture—did not have jurisdiction.

Mr. GOOD. Of course not; it is a deficiency for this year, and the Committee on Agriculture did not have jurisdiction of that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman remembers that the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming——

Mr. TINCHER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON (continuing). Got an appropriation of $25,000 to feed the elk, and then he got another appropriation of $25,000 to feed the Wyoming elk, and now he wants $45,000 as another Wyoming deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. This is a different herd of elk. That was a herd in the northern part of the State.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if it is not a deficiency, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The appropriation by the Congress was made a year ago. This property belongs to the Government, and under the law it is placed in charge of the Secretary of Agriculture. Now, if this is subject to a point of order then the original appropriation would be subject to a point of order on the Agricultural appropriation bill. It is necessary to feed these elk, and the way to get rid of them and the expenditure in regard to them is to let them all die. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman from Michigan will read the provision of the current Agricultural act he will find the same provision with regard to the Biological Survey, where it is provided:

For the maintenance of the Montana bison range and other reservations and for the maintenance of game, etc., on public lands.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is made under a particular item for general expenses.

Mr. GOOD. Of course.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In the appropriation bill you will find, on page 65, an appropriation for general expenses. In my judgment the department has pursued an unusual course, although not unusual in some other departments.

Officials go before a committee and ask for money to enable them to carry on work for the next fiscal year, and the committee determines what amount is necessary and reports it to the House. A certain amount of money is then appropriated, and the department is limited to that amount in carrying on its work. Then some officials disregard that, and instead of planning their work on a scale——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to his point of order; he is discussing the merits.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not. I am talking to the point of order. If this is not a deficiency, but is an expenditure made in carrying on work on a larger scale than was justified by the appropriation, it is subject to a point of order. This is a deficiency bill and only real deficiencies can be provided for. If I am wrong, then I do not understand what a deficiency bill is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order against the paragraph under the Bureau of Biological Survey, general expenses, that it is not a deficiency.

The reading of that paragraph is as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey, including the same objects specified under this head in the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $36,271.50.

On turning to the Agricultural appropriation act for the current year the Chair finds that under the Bureau of Biological Survey there was an appropriation made of $686,300. The point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan is that this item making an appropriation for the same objects specified under this head is not a deficiency. The Chair is unable to rule that it is not a deficiency. Where there has been an appropriation for a particular item in the current law, and the committee comes in with an additional sum submitted upon an estimate of the department and states that it is a deficiency, how is the Chair to find that it is not? It is impossible in such circumstances for the Chair to determine whether or not it is an actual deficiency. In the view of the Chair it is a deficiency in a parliamentary sense, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this motion at this time for the purpose of remarking that there is considerable merit in the contention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] that the departments have a system of presenting their claims to one committee and getting a raise in the appropriations by going to other committees. That is one reason why I insisted upon voting for the budget system, which every Member of this House can clearly see eliminates any possibility of a duplicate appropriation, such as is claimed in this case. It will eliminate that system of the departments asking for all they can get from one committee and then practically appealing to another committee for a deficiency. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

For Signal Service of the Army, $15.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the chairman to the fact that he has an item under the head of "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the War Department" on page 50, and then he has another one in another place, and then he has one on page 56. Why do you just scatter them around that way over the place?

Mr. GOOD. There were two different documents. One was sent to the Senate after the House had acted upon the last deficiency bill, and the department sent that to the Senate. The Senate did not act upon these items, and as this committee considered the audited claims and judgments we took under consideration all that had been certified either in the Senate document or in the House document.

Mr. CALDWELL. I notice each line has a different item, and they are practically duplicates as to words but differ as to amounts.

Mr. GOOD. But they are not duplicates at all.

Mr. CALDWELL. I say they are duplicates as to words but differ as to amount. I presume the committee has carefully gone over and checked them up so as to see that there is no duplication?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely. The documents to which they refer give the names of each applicant and the amount of the claim, and there is no duplication. The committee has checked them up and can give the gentleman the absolute information if he requests it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to ask the gentleman, line 5, page 55, in reference to the item, "Total audited claims, $125,303"; is that the total of the preceding items or an additional appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. That is the total amount that is carried in the bill that was specified in the Senate document.

The Clerk read as follows:

For books for judicial officers, $10.56.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in the print I have, in line 20, the word "officers" should be corrected. It is misspelled.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the spelling.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For railroad transportation, $210,263.17.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is a considerable item in a deficiency bill for railroad transportation, $210,000, under claims allowed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department, several times larger than that carried under a similar item on page 54. Is this made necessary owing to the change from paying for transportation of the mail on a space basis rather than by weight?

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will take House Document No. 766, second session, Sixty-sixth Congress, and look at page 36, he will find several pages enumerating small claims of railroads—I suppose about 200 or so—which were incurred for services rendered in 1917. The appropriation for that year has lapsed, and the total is this amount.

Mr. WALSH. Then it is a matter properly to be charged against the great surplus that we were told they had in 1917 in the Post Office Department?

Mr. GOOD. I think in this case there was enough money appropriated for that year to pay these claims, but whether or not in making that statement the Postmaster General took his actual expenditures and did not take into consideration these claims, I do not know. Of course, if he did not take into consideration these claims, some of them must have been pending. If he did not take them into consideration, the surplus would be reduced to the extent he did not take them into consideration.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will permit, the surplus is determined by the difference between the audited expenditures and the audited receipts. This not having been paid at the time, the surplus would be diminished by this amount.

Mr. WALSH. Now, can the chairman of the committee state why these claims were not paid, the money being available for them?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose that in many cases there was some delay in presenting the claim, but the auditor, writing me under date of May 25, 1920, said:

In compliance with your request I have to report that none of the claims certified by this office and reported in Senate Document No. 222 and House Documents Nos. 606 and 766, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, represent deficiencies. In every case sufficient funds were provided by Congress, but the appropriation had lapsed and the balances had been carried to the surplus fund prior to the submission of the claim to this office for settlement.

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad to have the gentleman read that document and in his explanation corroborate the claim of the gentleman from Minnesota, which he has made here several times with reference to this alleged surplus on the part of the Post Office Department.

This should properly be deducted from any claim for surplus for that year. I understand the gentleman agrees with that.

Mr. GOOD. I understand it so.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman agrees with that provided it was taken into consideration?

Mr. GOOD. I understand it was taken into consideration.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. How does the gentleman understand that?

Mr. GOOD. I understand that from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. The item certainly was not audited as an expenditure during that fiscal year, because if it had been it would have been paid out of the appropriation, which they say was ample. Therefore it must have been audited and allowed since the surplus was stated.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Clem's statement is that it has been paid. If the amount had been carried in the surplus fund, of course it was not taken into consideration, and if taken into consideration the surplus fund would have been that much more.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is absolutely necessary to wipe out the surplus of the Post Office Department, which is the only department which has a surplus, before we get to the convention we will agree to wipe it out on paper and go on and pass the bill.

Mr. WALSH. It is only a part of what is claimed.

Mr. BLANTON. The surplus is there.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Texas, and another Member of this honorable body, and a gentleman who presides over a department of the Government, state and claim the surplus is there, and it is just such items as these that come staggering along two or three years later which lead one to believe that these surpluses after all may be a myth.

Mr. BLANTON. If we had time to get the Postmaster General's explanation, he would explain this item.

Mr. WALSH. The Postmaster General can explain most anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 14 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to page 14 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 9, insert:

"FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION.

"The Federal Power Commission is hereby authorized, within the limits of its appropriations and to the extent that the work under its direction can not be economically or practically performed through the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, to employ such expert, technical, clerical, or other personnel in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as may be necessary for the proper performance of its duties."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is not germane.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentlemen will withhold that for a minute.

Mr. CALDWELL. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that I have a letter signed by the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture, the three Secretaries that are intrusted with the administration of this act, calling attention to this fact: The act has recently been passed, but by some oversight no authority was given to use any funds carried in the act, and there is only one officer that can administer this law.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I have submitted the letter to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], who had charge of this legislation. They assure me that this or something like this is necessary. It is legislation——

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GOOD (continuing). But I think it is absolutely necessary that something be done, and if we do not do it in this bill we will have to bring in some other resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] withdrew their reservations of the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman how is it that this commission contend that they are without authority to function after this carefully prepared law was considered by the conferees for so long? And my recollection is that there was a provision made in there for this commission's expenses and operation.

Mr. GOOD. There is no authority for the employment of the necessary personnel.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman let me explain that?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ESCH. The water-power act contained these words:

The work of the commission shall be performed by and through the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, and their engineering, technical, and other personnel, except as may be otherwise provided by law.

The contention made by the three Secretaries is that if the personnel of the three departments is to be utilized for the carrying out of the water-power act it would deprive those departments of that personnel, and therefore the work to which they are allotted would remain undone. We thought when we framed the bill there was sufficient personnel in the three departments to carry out the provisions of the water-power act. They claim now that they should have further clerical and expert help. It is not an increase of the appropriation. They have to act within the limit of $100,000 that we have already appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] wish to be heard?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to return to page 2 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to page 2 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what amendment it is he desires to offer?

Mr. GOOD. I send the amendment to the Clerk's desk in order that it may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after line 11, insert:

"ANTHRACITE COAL COMMISSION.

"For salaries and expenses of officers, employees, and witnesses, including personal services in the District of Columbia, purchase of supplies, printing and binding, reporting proceedings, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, in accordance with the act approved August 1, 1914, and for all other necessary expenses in connection therewith; in all, $10,000, to continue available until June 30, 1921."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Iowa through?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for not exceeding 10 minutes, not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for not exceeding 10 minutes, not in order. Is there objection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I ask that at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks I may proceed out of order for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee should know upon what subject either of these gentlemen wishes to speak.

Mr. GARRETT. So far as I am concerned, I desire to make a very brief response to a remark made in the course of debate a few days ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] in regard to Mr. B. M. Baruch. I have advised the gentleman from Illinois of my purpose so to do. He told me that he could not be present.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, the committee should know what the gentleman from Kansas is going to speak on.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I wish to speak on the soldiers' adjusted compensation.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, was objection made to my request? Did the gentleman object to both requests?

Mr. WALSH. I made objection to both requests because the gentleman from Kansas made your request conditioned upon the granting of his.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not propose to object to the gentleman from Kansas speaking, but it is hardly fair, inasmuch as we are not intending to discuss the same thing, to tie our requests together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I object.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Too late!

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I reserved an objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was fairly liberal and repeated the request a number of times.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I reserved an objection, and the gentleman repeated his request, and I renewed it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to get the attention of the Chair for some time. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I tried for some time to get the attention of the Chair. If the Chair will not recognize us we will adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. CRAMTON. I was on my feet, trying to get the attention of the Chair for the purpose of making objection to that speech at this time in the night.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair repeated a number of times the words, "Is there objection?"

Mr. CRAMTON. If the Chair had looked in this direction he would have seen me on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire, of course, to impose on the courtesy of the House, and I regret that it is necessary to proceed with even apparent objection. But it seems to me that the remark of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] a few days ago, in regard to a private citizen who rendered to his country very great service in its hours of stress and strains, deserves a response. It was my purpose to respond to it at the time, but I had only a very limited time, and I was unable to reach the subject.

The gentleman from Illinois said on the 27th of May—and this appears on page 7753 of the RECORD:

I want fair play. I am willing to vote to have your Attorney General bring suit against Barney Baruch, the chief man, the closest man to the President of the United States, who stole $50,000,000 in copper alone.

That statement was made, of course, under the constitutional privilege of a Member of the House. Mr. Baruch has absolutely no recourse by which to defend himself against this direct charge of peculation in this tremendous amount. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read in my time a letter which I have received from Mr. Baruch.

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

Mr. GARRETT. This letter is addressed to me, and says:

NEW YORK, June 1, 1920.

Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GARRETT: On page 7753 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 27 the following occurs:

"Mr. MASON: * * * I want fair play. I am willing to vote to have your Attorney General bring suit against Barney Baruch, the chief man, the closest man to the President of the United States, who stole $50,000,000 in copper alone. * * *"

Under our Constitution there is guaranteed to each man life and liberty. Neither is worth having without character and reputation. When a man, especially a Member of the Congress, makes a statement such as Mr. MASON made upon the floor of the House, he should be so certain of his facts that there can not remain a scintilla of a doubt as to their truth; otherwise he unjustly besmirches reputation, a man's chief possession, and that which all men hold dearest. As Mr. MASON said, I, too, want fair play.

I am writing to ask you to demand of Mr. MASON that as he made that statement under the protection the Constitution gives the Congress, he should do either one or two things: He must use his utmost ability both as a Member of the Congress and as a private citizen to see that I am prosecuted to the limit of the law, if he be right; and, if he be wrong, he must make an apology as full as was his charge. I am not making this for myself alone; I am asking it in the interest of justice. No one guilty of theft from the Government should be permitted to escape.

[Mr. GARRETT here read from the letter a sentence, which he subsequently withdrew.]

Very truly, yours, BERNARD M. BARUCH.

[Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the words in the last sentence of the letter be taken down.

Mr. WINGO. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman has no right to demand that the words be taken down. The gentleman had a right to object to the reading of the letter. The rule applies to the words of Members themselves, and there is nothing in the rule which says that a quotation from somebody else may be taken down.

Mr. GARRETT. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this statement was not made under privilege, and that the gentleman [Mr. MASON] will have his recourse in the courts, if he desires it, against Mr. Baruch.

I read further a letter written by Mr. Baruch to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on the words being taken down?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the rule:

If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Chair hold that a Member getting consent to proceed out of order for a certain length of time comes within the provisions of the rule respecting words spoken in debate?

The CHAIRMAN. If they be improper words to utter.

The gentleman asked permission to speak out of order. Nevertheless, the Chair would hold that the gentleman would not have unlimited liberty. Therefore if the words were not proper to be uttered, the gentleman could be called to order. The Clerk will report the words.

The Clerk read the words.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the language is not contrary to the rule.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask this question——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will make his inquiry.

Mr. BROWNE. When a Member reads the remarks of another person, does he not really appropriate those remarks to himself? Or, in other words, can a Member of this body get up here and read slanderous words concerning a Member of this House written by some one else and still not come within the rule? If he can, if the gentleman's contention is correct, then it is a very easy thing for a Member to get some irresponsible person to slander a Member of this House and then read the words.

Mr. WINGO. My point was on something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is clearly right; that could not be done.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, may I make this observation? It was clearly within the rights of the gentleman from Michigan or any other Member to object to the reading of the letter. The general observation made by the gentleman from Wisconsin that a Member of the House could procure a statement to be made by anyone on the outside and read that and use it against any Member of the House of course could not be done.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Michigan had the right to assume that the letter which would be read by the gentleman from Tennessee was a defense of Mr. Baruch rather than a personal attack on the integrity and character of a Member of the House. The fact that it was such an attack was not apparent until the words had been read. I had not seen the letter and did not know until the words were uttered, and it became apparent that in the absence of one of the oldest Members of the House, toward midnight, words derogatory to that Representative were uttered and I objected to the words appearing in the RECORD of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I think I can settle this. I am willing to let those words be taken out of the letter. I assume no responsibility for the words and I do not express them as my sentiments, if that is what is intimated by the gentleman. I did assume the responsibility for reading the letter, but I do not want to violate any rules of the House.

Now, I will read a copy of the letter addressed to Mr. MASON by Mr. Baruch.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I will object to the reading of the letter.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman can not object to my reading of the letter. He can object to the Clerk reading it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is objection the Chair will have to submit it to the House.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Tennessee is proceeding under permission of the committee, out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the rule:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the objection was not made when the gentleman proceeded to read, and the objection can not be made after.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the gentleman can proceed, with the approval of the House.

The question is, Shall the gentleman from Tennessee be permitted to read the paper in question?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 75, noes 14.

Mr. GARRETT. I will read the letter:

JUNE 1, 1920.

Hon. WILLIAM MASON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: My attention has been called to the charge made by you against me on the floor of the House of Representatives, which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 27, 1920, reading in part as follows:

"I want fair play. I am willing to vote to have your Attorney General bring suit against Barney Baruch, the chief man, the closest man to the President of the United States, who stole $50,000,000 in copper alone."

I demand that you submit at once to the Congress and to the Attorney General the evidence which prompted you to make this statement. A course short of this would make you particeps criminis. In justice, therefore, to yourself, to the Government, and to myself, I demand that you immediately present your evidence, and that I be immediately brought to the bar of justice and condemned to punishment if found guilty, and exonerated, if innocent, from the infamous and malicious charge you make against me.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. BEE. On what subject?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. On the future compensation of soldiers.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I object.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14335) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR RECLAMATION OF LANDS IN OREGON.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14101) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14101) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized within his discretion to continue to not beyond October 21, 1930, the segregation of the lands embraced in approved Oregon segregation list No. 11, under the Carey Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I think we can take this up better to-morrow when we will have time to discuss the matter. It is pretty late and we have been here since 11 o'clock this morning. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Would the gentleman object to taking up two or three little bridge bills to-night?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the time is about to expire and I think this bill ought to be passed now.

Mr. GARD. How many of these bills have we?

Mr. SINNOTT. I just have this one.

The SPEAKER. There were two or three bills allowing bridges to be constructed, which should be passed, and the Chair thought they would be brought up to-night.

Mr. GARD. Why not take them up in the morning?

The SPEAKER. We shall be very much pressed for the next few days.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we have been here 12 hours now.

The SPEAKER. So has the Chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Does the gentleman from Ohio withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. GARD. If we are to have only two or three uncontested bills, I do not want to stand in the light of objecting to having the bills passed, although we have been here for 12 hours now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair intended to recognize Members to present bills only which he was perfectly confident there would be no objection to. The Chair does not think contested bills ought to come up for consideration at this hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk has reported. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to bring up the Mason resolution.

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Does the Chair speak for himself or for the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Did the Chair speak for himself or for the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan withhold that for a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. If we are going to pass bridge bills, I will withdraw it; but if we are going to discuss international and home politics, I insist upon it.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to have the Senate dispose of the adjournment resolution. I ask the Chair kindly to lay before the Senate the resolution from the House touching final adjournment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the adjournment resolution disposed of, but I yield for a moment.

RECLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I merely wish to call attention to the bill (S. 4475) to reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service. I think the Senator will agree with me. Yesterday I asked to have the bill laid before the Senate. Under the rule, objection having been made, it went over for a day. A recess was taken instead of an adjournment. The Senator who objected is not going to object again to the consideration of the bill at this time, but I should like to be satisfied that no objection will be made, or else I want the Senate to take an adjournment before 12 o'clock for a little time in order that we may end the legislative day and that I may get the bill up. I feel that it is of the utmost importance that the bill should be considered to-day and as soon as it can be done. The only way I see of obviating the difficulty is to take an adjournment now before 12 o'clock until 5 minutes after 12, so that I may bring it up.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know what the Senator's attitude is. I am not cricitizing the Senator. I take his word just as he gave it; but I am wondering whether there is anyone else in the Senate who is going to object to the consideration of the bill to-day.

Mr. POMERENE. I was engaged and just came into the Chamber. Is the Senator referring to the bill for the reclassification of postal employees and increase of postal salaries?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope there will be no objection made to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be considered in order to-day, the same as though we had adjourned on yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection, with the understanding that that does not necessarily mean that the bill will be taken up by the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not ask that it be the unfinished business. I simply asked unanimous consent that it might be considered in order to-day when a motion is made to take it up; that notwithstanding the rule it may be in order to-day.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 295).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims amounting to $276,212.23, which have been presented to the Treasury Department and require an appropriation for their payment, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL PARK COMMISSIONERS (S. DOC. NO. 297).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney General submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations in the sum of $3,250 required by the Department of Justice for salaries of national park commissioners for the fiscal year 1920 and 1921, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 14384. An act to amend the penal laws of the United States;

H. R. 13976. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Sixteenth Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania;

S. 3867. An act authorizing the State of New Mexico to apply the proceeds of the grant to said State of 1,000,000 acres of land, made by section 7 of the enabling act, June 20, 1910, for the reimbursement of Grant County, Luna County, Hidalgo County, Santa Fe County, and the town of Silver City, N. Mex.;

H. R. 1024. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to John Zimmerman for certain lands in the Colorado National Forest upon the surrender of other lands of an equal acreage also located in the Colorado National Forest, Colo.; and

H. R. 13108. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

CONDITIONS IN UKRAINIA.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I present a petition of sundry citizens of the United States of Ukrainian descent calling attention to the suffering in that portion of Europe known as Ukrainian East Galicia. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, omitting the signatures.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"To the Congress of the United States:

"We Americans of Ukrainian descent, interested in the welfare of humanity, and especially solicitous concerning the suffering in that portion of Europe known as Ukrainian East Galicia, respectfully call to your attention the following facts:

"East Galicia has been more devastated by the World War than any other country of Europe, for it was the theater of continuous warfare between the Austrian and the Russian Armies, and suffered repeated losses of life, destruction of property, and requisitions of food, cattle, money, and clothing.

"Because of the hardships incident to the war and its aftermath, starvation prevails throughout the country, and the entire population is in the grip of a deadly typhus. There are no medicines and no sanitary facilities and only a handful of physicians. Of a total population of over 4,000,000 in East Galicia, more than 600,000 already have perished. Five hundred thousand more are now dying of typhus and other contagious diseases, and the remainder of the populace is suffering indescribable want and misery.

"The other countries of Europe are so hard pressed in the matter of feeding and clothing their own people and in maintaining order that there is no prospect of relief of any kind being received by East Galicia from any European country. If help is received at all, it can come only from America. If no help is received, the condition of suffering will be so intensified that the population will be entirely wiped out eventually and civilization set back in Europe hundreds of years.

"It is likewise our sincere conviction that unless some relief is granted speedily the contagious diseases will spread rapidly to other countries, and the complete ruin of Ukrainian East Galicia will be felt in neighboring countries as well as in the United States where there are more than a half million natives of Ukrainian East Galicia who are good and prosperous workers.

"In order to prevent further loss of life and further suffering, we respectfully petition that the Congress of the United States send a special commission to investigate conditions in Ukrainian East Galicia, to the end that supplies of medicines, food, and clothing may be sent to relieve the intense distress."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduce a bill and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (S. 4497) to decrease the annual compensation of the President of the United States and to grant him annuity was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 3531) Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, granting an increase of pension to William L. Sapp, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. SMOOT. On May 31 the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] submitted a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations relative to affairs in Mexico and asked that the report, together with the accompanying documents, be printed, which request was agreed to. Accompanying the report is a map, which I now ask unanimous consent that the Public Printer be authorized to print in connection with the report and accompanying documents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE DYESTUFF INDUSTRY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a declaration by certain independent dyestuff and coal-tar manufacturers of my State regarding their position on the dyestuff bill.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"During the recent debate in the United States Senate on the bill H. R. 8078, to protect the coal-tar chemical industry of the United States, there was some rather vigorous comment on alleged contract relations between the Du Pont Co. and one of the large English concerns engaged in the manufacture of dyes. It was asserted in that connection that there was imminent danger of building up an American dye monopoly if the bill should become a law.

"This comment was widely published in the press of the country, and yet nothing could be further from the fact. Nothing also could be more unfortunate for a self-sustaining coal-tar chemical industry in the United States than the creation of such an impression in the public mind.

"It may have been aimed at one or two manufacturers, but it hits the entire American coal-tar industry. On the other hand, dyestuffs are not the only important coal-tar products.

"We, the undersigned, American manufacturers of dyestuffs, dyestuff intermediates, drugs, photographic materials, synthetic tanning materials, insulating materials, coal-tar aromatics, and synthetic resins, register our protest.

"There is no desire to create a dyestuff monopoly. The public mind and opinion should be set right, and this should come from the United States Capitol, and not from the managers of one or more political factions.

"Clear this matter right, right now, on the following misunderstood points:

"1. That we are positive that no such danger exists and most emphatically state that every one of the undersigned, representing the various manufactures, is independent of the other, and that there are no combined interests amongst us; we have at no time planned the creation of a monopoly. Furthermore, we are independent. We aver that none of us have any interests whatsoever in the Du Pont Co., nor has the Du Pont Co. any interest in us.

"2. That for several years we have been and still are manufacturing coal-tar chemicals or dyestuffs, and that all of us together have been instrumental in building up a large coal-tar chemical industry in this country, and during the war have aided the Government in carrying on warfare successfully.

"3. That the Longworth bill might benefit the large manufacturers only is erroneous to say the least. As a matter of fact, the bill will protect the small manufacturers to a much greater extent than the large manufacturers. Because of the technical knowledge required in running the business, the small manufacturer who gives personal attention to the manufacture is placed in a much better position to compete with the large concerns who have to engage experts for everything, and in that way have large production and overhead charges to contend with.

"4. If the present bill is not passed in suitable form, the large manufacturers might be able to stay in business for a long time, because they can produce staple goods on a large scale, this being the kind of products that the European manufacturers would keep away from for a time. The small concerns who are manufacturing mostly specialties either in dyestuffs or other coal-tar chemicals are going to be hit first, because the Germans are going to deliver specialties first and in that way are going to force the little man out of business in a very short time. Even now the small manufacturers are hampered by not being able to get proper financial backing. The bankers can not be blamed for their cautiousness, for the reason that they have learned through the papers and otherwise that the coal-tar chemical industry can not exist without proper and complete protection. The fact is that small producers of specialties in the coal-tar chemical line are suffering now, not so much by actual importation of coal-tar chemicals, but by the promise of the importers to deliver at lower figures.

"5. If we should be left with nothing but a tariff between us and the competition of the German trust, the small manufacturers would stand no chance. The struggle for the market in our products would depend entirely on financial strength. Whatever duties might be levied the Germans could well afford, with their advantages in costs and experience and with the aid of the rate of exchange, to pay them. By sacrificing, or rather investing in this way a sum so small as to be negligible compared to the capital which the German trust has at stake, they can drive us all out of business and then get their money back, in their old habitual way, by raising prices. Nobody can fight such a battle except a firm of immense resources. A tariff alone will give only the big fellow a chance to survive, and can hardly save even the biggest. The present Senate bill gives us an even chance, and we therefore urge its prompt enactment.

"6. It must be remembered that when the United States got into the war we had a two and one-half years start in the production of coal-tar chemicals for explosive purposes. These were previously supplied to the Allies, who later became our associates in war. Were it not for this start when the war broke out we never would have been able to accomplish the task which we undertook and which finally ended the war in victory for America.

"7. It is well to remember that chemical plants deteriorate rapidly and are suitable for the scrap heap unless run continuously. Therefore we, manufacturers of coal-tar chemicals, urgently ask that the Senate and the House of Representatives give the matter of the coal-tar bill immediate attention for the purpose of safeguarding the interest of the country's national defense as well as the interests of the undersigned representatives of American industries.

"8. The manufacturers, of which this is a representative list, emphatically state that unless due protection is given to the industry that they will not be able to finance their businesses successfully and will therefore be forced to abandon the plans laid out for the further development of a self-contained American coal-tar chemical industry.

"9. Any disputes, differences of opinion, or controversies which have arisen or which might arise between the representatives of the Du Pont interests, or any other single company, with any legislator or group of legislators should not be held against the entire coal-tar chemical industry. It would be unjust and unfair. We, the independent manufacturers of coal-tar chemicals, forming the backbone of this American industry, should not be made to suffer for any misunderstanding between factions at our expense, at the expense of national safety.

"10. The viewpoint of the undersigned is that the danger of the coal-tar chemical monopoly in this country is far-fetched and imaginary. This imaginary danger no doubt has been created by the importers of coal-tar chemicals and dyestuffs to safeguard their own selfish interests at the expense of the welfare of the American people.

"11. Were the peace treaty signed or a separate treaty with Germany entered into to-morrow, the American markets would within a short time be flooded with cheap wares dumped by foreign countries. There apparently are individuals who are attempting to mislead Congress by misrepresentation and thereby are manipulating dilatoriness in passing the bill, in the hope that such procrastination will bring it up for action at a time too late for effectiveness and thus a self-contained American coal-tar chemical industry will be killed without the full knowledge of the American people why and by whom this was accomplished.

"12. It has been rightly stated time and again by chemists, scientific men, and other influential men in this country that the coal-tar bill is of utmost national importance and that in order to protect and safeguard the interests of the country that the coal-tar chemical and dyestuff industry should and must be protected in a satisfactory manner. This is understood and acknowledged by the entire Senate and House of Representatives. We must have action or perish.

"13. In view of the foregoing facts it becomes imperative that protective measures be now passed; the industry must know whether there is a future, otherwise the industry is doomed to failure.

"14. We, as manufacturers, who have tied up our resources in the coal-tar chemical and dyestuffs industry for everybody's welfare, demand that suitable protection be given to this industry, and that a suitable bill be acted upon in this session and without further delay.

"15. The chemical plants, if only tariff protection is given, will have to return to prewar conditions; that is, simply as assembling plants for German-made goods.

"16. The coal-tar chemical business in general, and the dyestuffs business in particular, is an individualized business. It requires personal attention, personal acquaintance, and personal contact with the consumers, and therefore can not be easily monopolized by or transferred to any one of the large concerns in such a short time as the bill provides.

"17. It took the German cartel 40 years to build up a successful coal-tar chemical monopoly and we feel that, even if there was a danger of building up an American monopoly, would it not be better to encourage an American monopoly, which is subject to the control of our Government, than be servile to a German monopoly over which our Government has no control whatsoever?

"18. We might state, however, that the danger of monopoly in this country is remote because all we are asking is proper protection for a limited period in order to give the American coal-tar chemical manufacturers sufficient chance to perfect organizations for the purpose of keeping the United States out of the clutches of the foreign monopoly, which is in existence now, and in that way safeguard the welfare of the country. Live and let live!

"19. At the war's beginning American manufacturers of textiles pressed the dye makers to increase their facilities to produce more dyestuffs, professing at the same time their former shortsightedness in not encouraging the passage of suitable tariff legislation.

"20. The relative cost of labor considered, the American manufacturers can not successfully compete with the Europeans. We have recently been informed by a Swiss chemical manufacturer that their labor conditions were bad, their help being paid from $10.50 to $13 (60 francs) weekly for skilled labor. The American workers for the same class of labor receive 50 cents per hour; this, based on the Swiss 10-hour day, equals $30 per week. And our worker, corresponding to their $13 per week help, receives 65 cents to 75 cents, or about $40 a week. The German labor is paid even less.

"21. American chemical makers find it now difficult to market their products, since the importers are holding out inducements to their customers in the promises of early delivery of low-priced German and Swiss chemicals. This, of course, is well-planned propaganda, estimated to influence the minds of the reading public, of the customer, and the Senator alike.

"22. The weal of the American people and the country's safety should not be made subservient to petty squabbles of political factions. That is a wrong. When we small manufacturers do not fear the effects of a monopoly, why should the Senate fear it? We feel that neither factional squabble nor personal animosity were reasons sufficiently potent to withdraw the Senate's action on the Longworth bill.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 2d instant, approved and signed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 179) authorizing the use of Army transports by teams, individuals, and their equipment representing the United States in Olympic games and international competitions.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 13976. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River, at or near Sixteenth Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

H. R. 13977. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Millvale Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

H. R. 14384. An act to amend the penal laws of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 14101. An act providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 14335. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives relative to final adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 5th day of June, 1920, at 4 o'clock p. m.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I am instructed by the Appropriations Committee to report from that committee that the supply bills have now reached such a stage of perfection as to justify immediate action upon the final adjournment resolution which has just been laid before the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suppose the resolution for final adjournment is now before the Senate for consideration?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Can that resolution be taken up for consideration without unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has a right to interrupt proceedings to lay down a message from the House.

Mr. LODGE. I had supposed that the motion to adjourn was in order at any time; that it was a privileged motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, yes; a motion to adjourn now is in order, if that is what the Senator from Massachusetts desires to do.

Mr. LODGE. And I had also supposed that a motion to fix the time for the final adjournment of Congress was a privileged motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is not a motion to adjourn now.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a motion to adjourn at some time in the future.

Mr. LODGE. But I had supposed, perhaps erroneously, that the motion to fix the time for the adjournment of a Congress was a motion of the highest privilege and was always in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. LODGE. This is a matter that certainly ought to be disposed of. I do not desire to interfere in the slightest degree with the Senator from Washington, and I do not want to make a motion to displace his motion; but I supposed the matter of final adjournment could now be disposed of, and I supposed I was making a privileged motion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Could not the motion pending be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that that be done, without prejudice to the motion I have made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would object to that.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I have the floor, although I seem to have lost it two or three times.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I had supposed, as I have said, perhaps erroneously, that the motion to adjourn finally is a motion of the highest privilege. Certainly the motion to adjourn is a motion of the highest privilege, as also are the motions to adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourns it shall be to a day certain, privileged motions. A motion fixing the time of final adjournment has always been treated, I am sure, as a motion of the highest privilege. I think the motion as to final adjournment may be disposed of in two or three minutes, if the Senator from Washington insists on his point, and I think he would not be interfered with longer than a motion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly willing to give way for the purpose of taking up the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, if it can be done without displacing my motion altogether, and I think that it could be done. I have asked unanimous consent that my motion be temporarily laid aside to consider the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, without prejudice to my motion.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we have arrived at a stage in the public business where Congress either ought definitely to determine that it is going to adjourn on Saturday in accordance with the resolution or not, in order that plans may be made accordingly, and I think we ought to have a definite vote on the resolution.

I saw a statement in one of the newspapers this morning that if the Congress should adjourn the President would call Congress back in extraordinary session. In order that there might be no misunderstanding about the matter, I took the question up with the White House, and the President's Secretary has authorized me to state to the Congress that when it concludes such business as it determines to pass and the necessary supply bills to run the Government the President will not call them back in extraordinary session unless a grave emergency should arise.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there are some very important measures which are not yet disposed of; I have one such in mind, and I do not feel disposed to consent, so far as I am concerned, to fixing a time for final adjournment until that measure is disposed of by the legislative branch of the Government. I refer to the merchant marine bill. The conference report has not yet been agreed to with reference to that bill, though I expect it to be acted on in the other House to-day. I do not know whether or not there will be opposition to it in the Senate. The bill as agreed to in conference is substantially the bill as it passed the Senate; but I do not want the vote on that bill endangered by fixing a definite time for adjournment, when any Senator who might be disposed to use an unusual amount of time in reference to the bill could defeat its passage. That bill is one, I think, of tremendous importance. There may be no opposition to it; I do not know. We may be able to take care of the conference report to-day, but I do not desire to have legislation so important as that endangered by fixing a definite time for final adjournment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am through.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the Senator a question, if the Senator from Massachusetts will yield for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Washington mentions one bill of great importance, the merchant marine bill, and I agree with him in his statement regarding that bill. The Senator, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, also has in charge the river and harbor bill, which is still in conference. That is a piece of legislation of a great deal of importance to certain sections of the country and to the people at large. May I ask the Senator what is the status of that bill, so far as the conference is concerned?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state frankly to the Senator just what the status of that bill is. At the last conference the Senate conferees, in recognition of the situation existing between the two Houses and in recognition of the situation with reference to appropriations and moneys available for river and harbor work, submitted a proposal to the House conferees that they would accept an appropriation of $15,000,000 instead of the $24,000,000 appropriated by the bill which passed the Senate. The House conferees refused, and the conference dissolved. On yesterday I talked with some of the members of the conference and suggested that we meet and report a disagreement and let the House take such action as it might see fit with reference to the matter. The conferees on the part of the House stated that they thought the House was very much inclined to instruct them to that effect, and I thought that if the House should so instruct them, of course the Senate could decide what action it would take. They telephoned me this morning that they had met and decided that they would not meet for the purpose of reporting a disagreement. Since that telephone message I have seen one of the conferees on the part of the House, and he said he would confer with the chairman over there and see if he could not get them to consent to call the conferees together for the purpose of reporting a disagreement, and that he would advise me. I have heard nothing further. That is the status of the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. So that they are standing out for an appropriation of $12,000,000 for river and harbor improvements——

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are.

Mr. HARRISON. Although the engineers of the War Department recommended forty-odd millions of dollars in their initial estimates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will not argue the proposition.

Mr. HARRISON. That, however, is the fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair clear the parliamentary situation. The Chair holds that the motion to consider the pending concurrent resolution relating to adjournment is in order. The resolution does not, however, require the Senate to adjourn at 4 o'clock on Saturday; it only authorizes an adjournment at that time; it is not an imperative requirement to adjourn at 4 o'clock. In holding the motion in order, the Chair is going to hold, also, that immediately following the disposition of the motion, the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] will be in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. When the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is before the Senate, as, I take it, the decision of the Chair practically places it before the Senate, is it debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. NORRIS. If the motion is going to be held not debatable—and I have no desire to debate it for any length of time—I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts submit a unanimous-consent agreement providing that it can be debated, and limiting the time of each Senator to five minutes, if the Senator so desires, but I am not willing to vote for the resolution. I should like to have an opportunity, as I think other Senators would, to explain the position we take. I do not believe we ought to be compelled to vote on the proposition now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator from Massachusetts is very much interested in the merchant marine bill, and I will ask him if he is willing to take the chance of the defeat of an important piece of legislation like that by now fixing a definite time for adjournment?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my belief is that nothing will so expedite the disposition of the merchant marine bill, in which I am very much interested, as to fix a time for final adjournment. It will be perfectly proper to reconsider that action later, if it should become necessary—and I hope it will not become necessary—but I think we ought to decide now whether or not we propose to adjourn on Saturday.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would not the Senator be willing to hold up the final adjournment proposition until later in the day? As I understand, the House will act upon the merchant marine conference report early to-day; it will come over here promptly, and we may be able to dispose of it in a very few minutes. If the Senator will withhold his proposition, he can probably take it up before the day is over, and I think that would be the wise thing to do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will yield, no Senator is more anxious than I to see the bill to which the Senator from Washington refers go through——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I do not know of any reason in the world why it can not be passed before Saturday at 4 o'clock. If, however, anything extraordinary should happen, the action of the Senate in connection with the concurrent resolution for final adjournment can be rescinded. I think that the time has come when, in order to get the supply bills out of the way and settle the differences in conference that exist, there must be some determination of the matter; and, for that reason, as much as I am in favor of the Senator's bill, as much as I desire to help him, as much as I believe that there is going to be no unreasonable delay about it, if he will bring the conference report before the Senate before 4 o'clock on Saturday, I think this question should be determined now. We have got to reach a decision one way or the other; we have got to have a vote of the Senate in order that we may know where we are going.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the resolution.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KENYON. I hope the Senator from Washington does not contemplate brushing aside the unfinished business. I desire to inquire if this matter in any way will supplant the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will not supplant the unfinished business unless the Senate takes up the bill which the Senator from Washington is asking to take up.

Mr. LODGE. Under the ruling of the Chair, if I may be permitted, the action on the concurrent resolution will disturb nothing; it will leave the position exactly as it was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask that I may be permitted to make a few remarks not exceeding five minutes on the pending question of final adjournment.

Mr. LODGE. I shall not object if the Senator desires to speak for five minutes, with the understanding that I shall hold the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I realize the importance of this proposition and the importance of settling it now. I am opposed to the motion, but if the majority of the Senate wants to pass it, it ought to be disposed of as soon as possible; and yet I can see the danger that the Senator from Washington has suggested.

I am particularly interested because there is pending on the calendar a bill reported by the Committee on Patents that if the Senators would take the time to consider they would realize is of vital importance to the country. I have been trying for two or three weeks to get that bill up. I have never heen able to do it, because either of objection or of some other business taking precedence over it. It ought to be disposed of before this recess. As far as I know now, there is no Senator here that objects to it. Some of them have objected in the past but by talking it over and by agreement as to certain amendments that make some objectionable features plain, as far as I know, there is no objection; and yet, just the other evening, when we had an evening session, I came here supposing that there would be an opportunity to consider measures of that kind and discovered, after I got here, that a few leaders had agreed that only one matter should be considered and that, when that was disposed of, nothing else could be taken up.

If this motion is agreed to now, I am afraid that it practically puts it in the hands of any one Senator to defeat any legislation that he wants to defeat, because it does not require very much time to make it perfectly apparent that any particular proposition can not be passed on until the hour of adjournment shall come, and if the adjournment resolution is passed we will not have a quorum here, perhaps, to-morrow. It will disappear; and I do not feel as though the Committee on Patents has been treated fairly by the Senate. I do not think we have had a square deal. We ought to have an opportunity to have the legislation which we unanimously report here either voted up or voted down and a fair and an honest opportunity to debate it if the Senators are opposed to it.

Mr. President, I do not believe myself that Senators or Members of the House of Representatives ought to be delegates to either one of the national conventions, and go there practically for the purpose and with the object to some extent of passing upon their own work. We ought to remain here until we complete some of this important legislation and let the national conventions be taken care of by those outside.

I realize that that can not be done now, because there are too many Members of the House and too many Members of the Senate who, under existing conditions, feel obligated to go, and I am not inclined to interfere with it; but unless we can dispose of some of these important matters it seems to me we ought to be back here when the conventions are over. Personally, I do not believe we ought to adjourn without day. We ought to take a recess to a time not later than the 1st of September, and be able to clean up some of the business that has accumulated on our calendar and the calendar of the House.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to occupy a moment, let me say that while I am sensible that much needed legislation will go over with this adjournment, I am also sensible of the more important fact that unless we adjourn our reckless and prodigal appropriations of money from the Federal Treasury will continue. I shall therefore support this resolution, because, if adopted, it will temporarily suspend the profligate expenditure of the public funds by this Congress, already far in excess of our estimated receipts.

While I am on the floor, let me call attention to this circular letter, which solicits membership in the American Legion. It is printed upon Government paper, and it is franked in a Government official Treasury Department envelope, signed by William G. Glenn, representative of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and by Cecil J. Dowd, chairman of the American Legion membership committee. I ask to put both in the RECORD, that the people may know how the franking privileges of the Government are being used for proselytizing membership in a private organization.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"EVERY MEMBER GET A MEMBER—THIS IS THE WEEK OF THE AMERICAN LEGION MEMBERSHIP PUSH.

"Will you get one new member for your post? Get an application blank from your commander or adjutant. Have a buddy fill it out and send it in this week.

"Or you can drop in American Legion headquarters, 823 Fifteenth Street NW., and obtain general application blanks that are good for any post. At the same time get some of the questionnaires that the Bureau of War Risk Insurance has placed there.

"Fill one of these out yourself and pass them along to any ex-service men who think they have not gotten a "square deal" from Uncle Sam in matters of compensation, insurance, bonus, allotments, medical aid, travel pay, vocational training, clothing allowance, Liberty bonds, or any kind of Government aid to which he is entitled.

"Send them to your post war-risk officer, and he will see that you (or any ex-service man, whether he belongs to the legion or not) is "fixed up" in record time.

"This is only one of the many things that the American Legion is doing for ex-service men.

"Get another buddy this week.

"CECIL J. DOWD,
"Chairman of the American Legion Membership Push Committee."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the adjournment resolution: At the close of the resolution, insert:

Said adjournment to be to August 30, 1920.

Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for just about a minute?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to state all the reasons why I am opposed to adjournment at this time. I do not think we ought to adjourn until we have disposed of the important business we have before us that we think ought to be disposed of. We should not adjourn, however, because we are afraid of ourselves. We ought not adjourn because we are afraid that we will not act wisely or properly upon legislation pending before us. If there is important legislation pending here, it ought to be acted upon by adoption or rejection.

There are many other reasons why I think we should not adjourn. I am not going to take the time to present them. I want to get away, I think, just as much as any other Senator here, but I feel that we ought to stay here and dispose of the legislation that is pressing, that is important, that is urgent—dispose of it one way or the other; either pass it or express our views by rejecting it. We ought to recess three days at a time, until the conventions are over, and then act upon the situation that confronts us at that time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask for a vote now. The question, I suppose, is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say just one word before the pending question is voted upon.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the pending question is to agree to the resolution with an amendment fixing the 31st of August as the time to adjourn.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that motion is entirely one that should not be considered at all. If we do not want to adjourn, the Congress ought to stay here now and attend to its business, and when we finish the business, whether it be in June, July, August, or September, then adjourn; but for us to pass a resolution now fixing a day in August, when we may have finished our business in July, it seems to me is something that should not be considered for a moment. The real issue is the pending resolution, and that is to wind up our business now, as we have it in hand, or stay on here indefinitely.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alabama has the same misconception that I had of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Possibly I have. What is it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. His amendment, as he now explains it, is that the Congress adjourn until the 30th of August.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. President, if that is the angle, I think that is worse.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we have business that requires our attention for the good of the country, there is no excuse for our leaving here now at all. If we have wound up the business that it is necessary to pass before we adjourn, now is the time for adjournment; but to adjourn now and be called back here in the middle of the summer, facing a great national election, I think, would be a disaster. In the first place, it would bring men back here out of their campaigns; in the second place, it would have Congress functioning in the midst of an election; and either condition is bad.

I think the real issue comes on the main resolution. So far as I am concerned, I think we should pass the supply bills and the conference reports and go home, and we can do that by Saturday next; but for those that do not agree with me upon that—it seems to me, the course is clear—that we ought not to inject this session into August by partial adjournment and summon Congress back here in the middle of the summer to work under those conditions.

I hope very much that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he make the date July 10.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am willing to do that to make the test on this question. I will perfect my amendment by susbtituting "July 10" for "August 30."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I point out to the Senator from Iowa that July 10 is Saturday?

Mr. KENYON. I will make it July 12, then, in place of August 30.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as modified. On that amendment the yeas and nays have been called for and ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask if this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will force the Chair to withdraw from another ruling that he has made if we do not go ahead by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Chair to say that we were proceeding by unanimous consent. I am not going to make any objection if the Senator wants to speak.

Mr. REED. I hope the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee will not object simply because I want to say something, after everybody else has debated the matter at will.

Mr. LODGE. I am not going to make any objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there are some things that ought to be done before this Congress adjourns. The war legislation, which was intended to be of a temporary character, most of it containing a clause providing that it should become inoperative within a given period after a presidential proclamation of peace, ought to be taken off the statute books. It is of the highest importance. From every consideration, for almost every reason that can be imagined, much of this legislation should be repealed. There is a general demand in the country for it.

As I have said, the legislation that I am speaking of was adopted strictly as war legislation. If this concurrent resolution passes this morning for an adjournment, that bill will not receive consideration. I am unwilling that this Congress shall adjourn with this legislation upon the statute books.

Powers have been vested in some departments of the Government which were entirely proper to be there vested during the war which are entirely improper to be there vested in time of peace. That legislation ought to be removed. The statutes of the country ought to be purged of its existence. If we pass this resolution, that legislation will not be removed until after next December.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri permit an interruption?

Mr. REED. I will.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Missouri, of course, is aware of the fact that the repeal of war-time legislation has been under consideration by the Judiciary Committee to a limited extent. The Senator knows of the appointment of a subcommittee to consider the bills which have been referred to that subcommittee by the full committee. Two of the members of the subcommittee have been out of the city for some time. The Senator from Missouri himself has had duties which prevented his attendance, as I understand it, upon the meetings of the subcommittee during the last two or three days. So the subcommittee have not been able to frame a report or recommend a bill for the repeal of the war-time legislation. But let me say to the Senator that there is now before the Judiciary Committee, which meets again at 2 o'clock this afternoon, a bill which would repeal war-time legislation, which will be submitted, I think, on behalf of the subcommittee.

Further, may I say to the Senator from Missouri that I understand a bill is now pending before the House, which is likely to be passed to-day by the House, which will repeal the war-time legislation. So I do not believe there will be need to continue the session after Saturday for the purposes of an act of that kind.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am a member of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee having in charge the bills there pending. I introduced one of the bills, I think the most general. I did not know that the subcommittee had been called in the last two days, but if I had known it it would have been impossible for me to be there and also at the same time to be in attendance upon another committee investigating campaign expenditures. But I have not made any complaint of the progress that has been made. I think the chairman of the subcommittee has done all he could, but——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In just a moment. But the very fact stated by the chairman shows the necessity for time to shape this legislation. When we once pass this resolution, then the time can be easily consumed, and if by next Saturday night we have not passed the bill, Congress is forced to adjourn. I want this legislation out of the way or a vote upon it assured before we tie our hands so that we may not be able to vote upon it at all.

I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to call the Senator's attention——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The point of order is that this motion is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will have to rule that it is debatable. It is not a motion to adjourn; it is a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, and it is debatable. Anything the Chair has said contrary to that will not be deemed a ruling by me.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand, then, that the ruling of the Chair is that it is debatable for any length of time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly, because it is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I ask if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The original question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution sent to the Senate by the House?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the concurrent resolution, and that Senators may know how to vote upon the ruling of the Chair, it reads——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is my object—to inform us as to what we are to vote upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution reads:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 5th day of June, 1920, at 4 o'clock p. m.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that the Senator from Iowa has proposed an amendment to the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; that we adjourn until the 12th day of July, 1920. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The amendment is to adjourn to a day certain, and the Chair rules——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the resolution on which the Chair is ruling.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I beg pardon. I understood that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] raised a point of order that the matter which was being debated was not debatable. I supposed that the matter which was being debated is the pending question, which is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question which is being debated, if the Chair can understand it, is the original concurrent resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The pending question is the amendment, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. Then the question is whether a Senator has a right to debate the amendment; and the Senator from North Dakota asked for a ruling of the Chair on that question.

Mr. MCCUMBER. That is the situation I intended to appeal from.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply want the matter which is appealed from to be distinctly understood before I vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The difficulty about the Chair ruling is that the Chair can not tell what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is debating. The Chair can not tell whether he is debating the original resolution or whether he is debating the amendment to adjourn to a day certain.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, if there is any talk, I assume it must be construed to be upon the pending question, whether it is germane to it or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to say merely one word with reference to the appeal from the decision of the Chair. I would like to see the pending question determined at as early a date as possible, without undue delay, because the direction in which we are moving must be determined by this vote. But to my mind it is absolutely clear that the Chair's ruling is right, that on a matter of adjournment, not the daily adjournment, but a final adjournment, or the fixing of a day for adjournment, there are many important questions which come before the Congress to consider, and it is absolutely in order to consider the angle from which the adjournment shall come. It seems to me clear that the Chair is right, although personally I hope we are not going to have any undue delay in determining the question.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, may I quote the rule under which I make my point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It is Rule XXII, and reads:

PRECEDENCE OF MOTIONS.

When a question is pending, no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn.
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn it shall be to a day certain.
To take a recess.

Then it enumerates several others, and proceeds:

Which several motions shall have precedence as they stand arranged; and the motions relating to adjournment, to take a recess, to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

The pending question is a motion to amend so that the resolution shall read that Congress shall adjourn to a day certain, and I do not think it is debatable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. If we can expedite this matter, certainly it is to the interest of the Senate to expedite it. This is not a motion to adjourn or to adjourn to a day certain; it is a concurrent resolution authorizing a final adjournment. That is all the Chair cares to say. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Missouri had yielded to me for a suggestion. I wanted to suggest, in addition to what the Senator has said, that if it is known that we are going to adjourn on Saturday, then wherever there is a disagreement on any of the propositions to repeal war-time legislation it will be within the power of any one Senator to compel the entire Senate to sumbit, or he can easily defeat action by prolonging debate. So, as a matter of fact, the suggestion made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] that we may pass that kind of a repealing act before Saturday will have no practical application if we pass this resolution and it is known that we are going to adjourn on Saturday.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I merely want to say that if it becomes necessary of course this resolution for adjournment can be easily repealed by both Houses. It is not absolutely final, and you can not make it absolutely final. It is a future order, and it can be repealed. I think Congress ought to know what the intention is, and I wish we could have a vote upon the resolution and dispose of it, for it is delaying the very bills which Senators are so anxious to get through.

Mr. REED. Of course Congress could repeal the concurrent resolution, but of course they will not, and the Senator knows that. It is because this resolution is to be a finality that he desires to have it passed. But he mistakes the situation. If we could have an arrangement made before the resolution is passed, providing for a consideration of the war-time legislation and a vote upon it by a given hour, I think, as far as I am concerned, I would be content.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say about it. I am opposed to the resolution to adjourn on June 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. The yeas and nays have been requested.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I hope we can adjourn by Saturday evening, but I am afraid to vote now for this resolution and put it in the power of nearly any one Senator to prevent the passage of legislation which ought to be passed before we adjourn. Take the Post Office bill, to which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has referred. There are a number of bills we ought to pass. There are Senators opposed to some of those bills. I am simply afraid of their efforts at delay. If they know we are going to adjourn they can defeat bills by preventing action upon them.

Mr. LODGE. Every moment this discussion is prolonged helps to defeat the bills we want to pass.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the majority of this body is responsible for legislation. Legislation is generally inaugurated by the majority. The majority can be said to be responsible for the inaugurating of legislation and the control of it. If the majority is united, as it has been, with respect to most of the legislation at this session that is vitally important, it can absolutely control legislation. But, however that may be, it is responsible for legislation. If the majority of the Senate feel that there is no other important legislation in the interest of the people which calls for Congress remaining in session, I assume that if Congress does remain in session it will not be likely to pass any additional important legislation.

In those conditions personally I feel that if the majority desire to adjourn it will be in the interest of the country to permit them to adjourn, because they will likely do nothing if we remain in session. If the majority of the Senate feel this way, I think it would be a waste of time to adjourn to a day certain. I think it better to finish the job right now.

Personally I believe we ought to stay here, because I think there is a great deal of very important legislation that ought to be passed before the next regular session of the Senate, but I think that is a matter which we should largely permit the majority to determine, because if they are adverse to the legislation or its consideration at this time, we would be likely to accomplish little by staying here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] or his side of the aisle can by a suggestion of that sort escape any responsibility upon the question of adjourning. The majority of the Senate on this side of the aisle to which he refers could not adjourn the Senate if they tried. There are, however, enough votes on this side of the Chamber with those on the other side to prevent it, and if the Senate adjourns it will be done by the other side of the aisle.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], on which the yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], but on this matter I am privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Has the Senator from New Mexico [Mr FALL] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT He has not.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], but under the arrangement I have with him I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is still unfortunately ill and absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALDER. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. BALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GAY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. In his absence and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

So Mr. KENYON's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending resolution, that said adjournment shall be until August 2, 1920.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think that in transacting the public business, when we approach the question of whether or not we shall quit the job, we should look over the calendar and see the status and condition of the legislative calendar, or, in this instance, I may more appropriately state, the business of the people of the Nation. I have yet to hear any of the advocates or the champions of the idea of an adjournment, which would probably result in Congress not to be in session until December, state upon the floor that there was not considerable uncompleted important work pending before the Congress.

About the only reason suggested—I submit it is not a good reason, though it might be an excuse—is that some of the Senators, in furtherance of their political aspirations and their partisan purposes, desire to hike off to the national conventions. With public business pending, with matters before the Congress that need to be legislated upon, we find Members of Congress desirous, it seems, of abandoning the public work for the purpose of going off to try to guide and dominate the politics of the country.

I submit it is not really a patriotic purpose or a good reason that we should adjourn Congress for the purpose of attending the conventions, so far as that is concerned, but that seems to be the old idea, possibly, of a great many, and we are necessarily going to have to do that now. Some have been elected delegates, but after this mission has been performed, whether it is a proper one or not, whether Congressmen and Senators are justified in deserting their posts of public duty to go and try to plan for the approaching campaign—after this purpose has been carried out, after they have played the little political game of chess, if you please, and either lost or won in the conflict, certainly, then, there is no reason why we should not return here that we may consider the many important problems that are before the Congress.

Some say that the people of the country want Congress to adjourn, that they do not desire Congress to be in session. Why, Mr. President, since my entrance in public affairs, since I have been observing the trend of public opinion in the country, I have always found a certain class of citizens of the country who, after they have obtained all the legislation that they want, say that the legislative bodies of the country are a public nuisance and should fold their tents and go back home. I dare say that is true in this case. The majority of the Congress has been rather generous in legislating along the lines of matters of interest to the big business of the country. They, too, have been equally as generous and considerate in refraining from laying hands upon the profiteers of the country and trying to exclude them from carrying on operations against the American people.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to ask the Senator if he believes in good conscience that a Republican Congress will do anything to cure profiteering? The Senator knows they will make no attempt to do it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Whether or not they will, as far as I am concerned, I do not propose to be particeps criminis in the neglect of a public duty. Of course, I know and realize that the Republican Party, the majority party in the Senate, is in control of the program of legislation, that it controls the committees, and that those who have tried to bring about much legislation and relief which seems necessary in this country are greatly handicapped. However, I say that it is the duty not only of the majority members but the minority members to display their desire to look after the public business and to at least exert every effort possible in the matter of endeavoring to have enacted needed legislation, and that we should not take an adjournment, which would mean that Congress would probably not be in session for six months.

I do not think, Mr. President, that the condemnation, if there is condemnation, which is being heaped upon Congress is particularly on account of its being in session, but it is more directly because of the neglect of Congress to legislate upon questions that demand consideration at the hands of the legislative body of the Republic. I submit that that neglect will become emphasized, and it will become all the more glaring and apparent, if the House of Representatives and the Senate say, "A little more folding of hands, a little more ease, and a little more comfort, and we will go out and enjoy the balmy breezes of some summer resort, or we will go off on one joy expedition or another, and the business of the American people shall be forgotten for a season."

I think it will be, Mr. President, a case of about as little concern for the public business as that displayed when Nero fiddled while Rome was burning. I am opposed to an adjournment which will cause Congress to desert the post of duty until December, and I therefore hope that my amendment making the adjournment until August 2 will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. REED and Mr. TRAMMELL called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, is the vote now to be taken directly on the resolution for final adjournment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to adjourn until the 2d of August.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously in regard to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement in reference to my pair and its transfer as previously, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement in reference to my pair and its transfer which I made upon the last call of the roll, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GAY. Making the same announcement as on the previous vote in reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BALL. Making the same announcement as I made previously in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. CALDER. Making the same announcement as on the last vote in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

So Mr. TRAMMELL's amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I move to amend the concurrent resolution, in line 3, after the word "to," by striking out the words "close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "recess this session of Congress," and to add at the end of the resolution the words "to July 12, 1920," so that the resolution, if so amended, would read:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to recess this session of Congress on the 5th day of June, 1920, at 4 o'clock, to July 12, 1920.

I desire to get a vote on the question of whether there shall be a recess or adjournment, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is an inquiry I would like to make in connection with the pending motion. If the present session of Congress should take a recess, would there, in case of necessity, be any power on the part of the President to call the Congress back before July 12, the date fixed for the expiration of the recess in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa? As I understand, if Congress adjourns, it may be convened by the President at any time, but if the Congress is already in session, as constructively, at least, it will be if a recess is taken now until a day certain, can Congress be called back in case of an emergency during the intervening time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make that inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have great faith in the legal opinions of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would not undertake to decide any such question as that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like to know before I vote on the amendment, and I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts what his opinion is as to that matter?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have not the slightest doubt that the language of the Constitution is such that the President can call Congress back, whether it is in recess or whether it has adjourned. The provision of the Constitution is perfectly sweeping, and my judgment is there can be no doubt about it. I was informed by the Speaker of the House that he had made some researches or inquiries in that direction, and that he had no doubt of the power of the President to call Congress back whenever it was not in session.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The difficulty which has occurred to me is that when Congress takes a recess it is still practically in session, and there has been some uncertainty in my mind as to what effect a call by the President for the reassembling of Congress would have under such circumstances. That is what disturbed me, and, while I am opposed to a recess for so short a time as indicated, I should like to know what the real situation is. I am ready for a vacation, and would like to have it extended till fall, and am indifferent as to whether it be called recess or adjournment provided the President is not estopped from calling an extraordinary session in case of emergency.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment offered by me.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BALL (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the previous roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. GAY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. On account of his absence, and being unable to obtain a transfer, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the explanation made upon the former roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 18, nays 52, as follows:

So Mr. KENYON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I move to amend the concurrent resolution by inserting at the end of it the words:

Said adjournment to be to August 30, 1920.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL and Mr. KENYON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the original concurrent resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. NORRIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BALL (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the previous roll calls, I vote "yea."

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 383) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the powers conferred upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the subcommittee heretofore appointed by it under Senate resolution No. 357 be, and they are hereby, extended so as to authorize and require the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or the subcommittee thereof now acting under Senate resolution No. 357, to investigate, after the adjournment of the Democratic national convention, and before the November elections, 1920, the receipts and expenditures of the several political committees, and the receipts and expenditures of the campaign conducted by, and on behalf of, or against, the election of the several candidates for President and Vice President, and the United States Senate, and for said purposes the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or the said subcommittee, and the members thereof, are hereby clothed with the same powers conferred on said committee and said subcommittee, and the members thereof, by said resolution No. 357; and they are further directed to make report of their proceedings to the Senate not later than the first Monday in December, 1920.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is a very long and important resolution, and I ask that it may go over.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not understand the observation of the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I asked that it go over, under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

MAGNESITE ORES.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5218) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of magnesite ores and manufactures thereof in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to renew it; it is the order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the motion is debatable, I want to say a word on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is debatable.

Mr. KENYON. I do not understand just why the unfinished business, which is a measure to help the underpaid employees of the Government, and give them a living wage, should be supplanted at this time by a tariff bill. From all I understand of the situation, if the Senator succeeds in bringing up his bill, it will not be voted on during the present session. I have been so informed on what I think is reliable authority. If that is true, what justice could there be in setting aside the unfinished business in order to occupy all the time of the Senate until it adjourns with a tariff bill which can not be passed?

I realize that probably there are gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who will vote to take up the bill of the Senator from Washington in order to displace the unfinished business; but they will deceive nobody in so doing. It is unusual, I think, when a bill has been made the unfinished business, as House bill 5726 was last night, when there has been no chance for the consideration of it, to have an attempt made the next morning to set the bill aside.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall vote against the motion, and I shall do so principally for the reason assigned by the Senator from Iowa. We have less than three full days remaining of the session, as a result of the resolution just adopted, and it is impossible that this or any other of the tariff bills can reach a vote in this body between now and 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. I deem it my duty to make that announcement so that Senators may understand that if the bill is taken up it will in all probability occupy the remainder of the session.

Mr. KENYON. So the statement I have made is corroborated by the Senator from Colorado, that the tariff bill can not pass at this session. If the Senate, under those circumstances, wants to displace House bill 5726, all right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I entirely concur in the statement made by the Senator from Colorado, that it will be utterly impossible, if the Senate devotes every minute of time between now and 4 o'clock Saturday, to get action upon this bill. But the Senator, I think, is wrong in the assumption that this side of the Chamber will assist in taking up the tariff bill in order to prevent action on the unfinished business.

Mr. KENYON. I said some Senators upon the other side.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on House bill 13587, the Army appropriation bill, returned from the House of Representatives on the request of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for a vote on the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to inquire what the result will be of agreeing to the conference report?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a matter which was taken up last evening in executive session, and the Chair thought it was thoroughly understood just what would be done. It would go back to conference.

Mr. KING. I did not have an opportunity of being at the executive session, and I would like to have an explanation before voting on the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I announced last evening that when the papers were returned to the Senate I would ask for a reconsideration, and also for a disagreement, in order to get the matter back to conference.

The conferees met this morning, I say quite frankly to the Senator, and determined upon their action, and they authorized me to report it back immediately with a change in it which will relieve it of all matter which will endanger the passage of the Army appropriation bill at this session.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire of the Senator from New York whether the tentative arrangement which has been reached by the conferees means that certain officers of the Army over a certain age are to be denied promotion or advancement? Will it affect the cases to which I invited the attention of the Senator this morning?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Over a certain age?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The question at issue has been minimum ages, not maximum.

Mr. KING. Will the result of the conference deprive certain officers of the promotions which, under existing law, as I understand it, they would be entitled to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It deprives officers under certain ages of being appointed in certain grades. That was the way the Army reorganization bill passed the Senate and passed the House and went to the President. On the request of the Secretary of War an amendment was inserted in the appropriation bill by the conferees, stringing it rather loosely, I may say, to an amendment which had been adopted on the floor of the Senate, having to do with emergency officers, taking the chance of a point of order being raised against it, modifying that provision in the Army reorganization bill. Since then, as the Senator probably knows, a further discussion has arisen. The Secretary of War intimated that he did not like the language in which it was phrased. The conferees met this morning, the Secretary came before them, the matter was discussed at some length, the Secretary intimated quite clearly that nearly all this language was entirely acceptable to him, and if one little phrase was changed it would be entirely acceptable. However, a day has been lost. We have absolutely reliable information that a point of order will be raised against this matter in the House of Representatives if it is retained in this conference report. We have the best of advice that the point of order will be held well taken. So the conferees have decided, subject, of course, to the approval of the Senate, to strike out the whole matter and not endanger the bill.

Mr. KING. I regret that the conferees have reached that conclusion. It results in a very grave injustice, I understand, to at least 50 officers now in service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The legislation was acceptable to the conferees of both Houses, and this one day's delay was due to a misunderstanding on the part of the Secretary. I may remind the Senate that the legislation was put in the conference report originally at his request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now I present the report of the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ELLEN M. STONE RANSOM FUND.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4434) for the relief of the contributors to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund, introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I shall object for the moment. I would like to get a vote on the motion which I have made.

Mr. POMERENE. This will take only a short time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it will take only a moment to get a vote upon the motion which I have made, and after we have had a vote upon that I will not object to the Senator calling up his bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I feel quite certain that it is not going to lead to any discussion. It will take probably only a moment's statement.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there will be any objection to it at all. There ought not to be.

Mr. POMERENE. A similar bill has already passed the Senate three or four different times.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4434) for the relief of the contributors to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to return, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such contributors, or, in the event of the death of any such contributor, to the legal representative thereof, as may file their claims within one year from the passage of this act, the money subscribed by such contributor to pay the ransom for the release of Miss Ellen M. Stone, an American missionary to Turkey, who was abducted by brigands on September 3, 1901, said total sum not to exceed $66,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAGNESITE ORES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, the question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5218) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of magnesite ores and manufactures thereof in the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the bill my colleague moves to take up. I would like to see it passed. I think it should be acted upon by this Congress, and that was one reason why I was opposed to fixing a time for final adjournment. I thought the Senate ought to stay here and pass upon some of these bills.

But now we are informed that if the bill is taken up, all the rest of the time of the Senate from now until 4 o'clock on Saturday will be taken up in discussing it, and that it will be defeated in that way. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, as strongly as I am in favor of the passage of the bill, I do not feel that I should vote to take it up and displace the unfinished business. I felt, in view of my position in the matter, that I should make this brief statement as to the reason why I shall have to vote against the motion of my colleague.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington who has just taken his seat has expressed my views with reference to the pending motion.

I have been in favor of taking up the so-called tariff bills and disposing of them, without committing myself as to how they should be disposed of, for some time. I have so expressed myself to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. But it is perfectly apparent that the taking up of this bill now will not result in its passage or in its disposition. I know from personal conversations with Senators, and also from the public statements of Senators, that there is no intention that the bill shall be permitted to pass at this session. I do not see, therefore, knowing these facts, how I can vote to take up this measure, and prevent the consideration of some other matters which may be disposed of.

Let me say, Mr. President, while I am on my feet, that this accentuates the unwisdom, in my judgment, of passing the resolution for final adjournment. This is only one of 25 or 30 measures which are here upon the Senate Calendar and in the House which ought unquestionably to be disposed of as soon as they can be properly considered and voted upon, and there are some measures which, it seems to me, it is really a dereliction of public duty, if I may say so, not to dispose of.

In the first place, our statutes are jammed with what are known as the war measures, which were necessary for the carrying on of the war, or at least were believed to be necessary for the carrying on of the war, but which are no longer necessary, and which ought not to be permitted to remain upon the statute books.

I think it is a manifest error upon our part. I do not think this Congress should adjourn without taking these unnecessary, arbitrary war measures off the statute books and, in addition to that, passing some measures, such as the one now pending, in the way of constructive legislation. But it is scarcely worth while to discuss that proposition now. The motion in favor of final adjournment was so overwhelmingly carried that I have no doubt it represents the judgment, whether the deliberate judgment or not, of the Senate, and it would be useless to urge a reconsideration, although I should like to have it.

There is absolutely nothing to be gained by voting for this particular motion of the Senator from Washington, as I see it. If I could have any assurance or any reasonable belief that the bill would be disposed of at this session, I should be disposed to vote for it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to state that I am very heartily in favor of the bill which the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] desires to call up. I reported it from the Committee on Finance. However, I believe it would be unwise to take it up at this time. I do not think we should displace the unfinished business, because, as has been well said, it is known that if the bill is taken up several days of discussion will occur on it, and no other business will be transacted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if there was no other business pressing, and if there was a likelihood of securing the passage of the bill, I should vote for the motion made by the Senator from Washington, but I have known for weeks past that it was the purpose of certain Senators to prevent the passage of any of these measures. So I have thought it a perfect waste of time to undertake to secure its passage at this session of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BALL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote regarding my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when Mr. EDGE's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. EDGE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GAY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I understand that if he were present and voting, he would vote "nay," and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). May I inquire if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KNOX. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement regarding my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN entered the Chamber and voted "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the negative). I noticed that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has not voted. He is necessarily absent from the Chamber. I feel, in view of the vote on the other side of the aisle, that I am at liberty to vote on this question, and so I shall allow my vote to stand. I have a general understanding with the senior Senator from Virginia that when he is necessarily absent I will take care of him with a pair.

Mr. CALDER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 45, as follows:

So Mr. POINDEXTER's motion to take up House bill 5218 was rejected.

NOMINATION OF JAMES C. DAHLMAN.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire that the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of the pending bill, if there is no other morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). The Chair begs pardon, but the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has not yielded the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I merely desire to ask unanimous consent that, as in open executive session, the nomination of James C. Dahlman, of Omaha, to be United States marshal for the district of Nebraska, vice Thomas J. Flynn, deceased, may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course, I shall not object at this time, but I served notice yesterday that it is wholly wrong for the Senate to do executive business as in legislative session. As I then said, we run around and with a forked stick pick up a rag and put it in the basket and run over here and pick up with a forked stick another rag and put it in the basket, and spend our time jumping from one thing to another. Why not proceed with one subject until we have finished it? I can not refuse my good friend, the Senator from Nebraska, the unanimous consent which he asks, but I do hope that the Senate will not grow more slouchy than it is by acquiring a habit which it never before had and into which it ought never to fall, of transacting its executive business in legislative session. Senators, the day will come when you will regret that you ever fell into the habit of transacting executive business in such a way. Let it be known that there will be an executive session so that Senators who are interested may be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to object to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I will not object; but I trust this will be the last time that there will be a request that executive business be transacted in legislative session.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I trust that these lapses will be the only thing that the Senate will regret in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REFERENCE OF NOMINATIONS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am going to make a further request, and I desire to explain to the Senator from Arizona that there is a reason for my doing so. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations which have been received to-day from the President for promotions in the Army and Navy be referred to the Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs. I make that request in the interest of urgency, because such nominations are coming in during the closing hours of the session, and they should be referred to committees which have jurisdiction of them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to exercise, I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that if the reason stated by him constitutes a valid reason, let it be understood that all nominations which come to the Senate from the President between now and adjournment may be referred to the respective committees as in the executive session, although they arrive in legislative session.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that should be done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska and to the Senate that such a reference of nominations is not strictly the transaction of public business, except in the most limited sense, for it is a mere formal transmission or reference to committees which if made under a standing order, if the Senator should make a request for unanimous consent for its application in all cases, would involve no motion on the floor at all and no knowledge on the part of anybody. The nominations would then take the regular course of going to the appropriate committees.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If it is agreeable to the Senate I will make a request now that all other nominations now upon the desk of the Vice President and all that may be received between now and adjournment may be at once referred to the proper committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to exercise, I want to say that I am very much surprised that the Senators who voted to fix a time for final adjournment should now be so fearful that matters in which they are interested will not be disposed of before the hour of adjournment arrives.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We want to do all the business we can while we are here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, when a regular executive session is held we have notice of that fact by the ringing of bells and Senators have the opportunity of coming here.

Mr. ASHURST. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But if nominations are disposed of at any time in the manner now proposed, of course, it will eliminate the opportunity of Senators to attend.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not asking that the nominations be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Georgia to object to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think the Senator from Georgia will object when I explain to him that the proposition is not to dispose of the nominations, but merely to refer them to appropriate committees, where of necessity they must go.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Had not the unfortunate motion to adjourn so soon been adopted this morning, thereby embarrassing all business, I should object; but in view of the congested condition which has been imposed by the agreement to adjourn, I shall not object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Georgia had better not object, because we accorded to him within two days the courtesy of action on an executive matter in legislative session.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was remembering that, too, and I thought it an additional reason why I should not object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I presumed the Senator remembered it, but he refrained from stating it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator from Connecticut for calling it to my attention publicly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is quite welcome.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have myself just recalled the incident.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it does seem to me that if there is any intention to get through with business, we ought to proceed with the business that is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa object to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I do not; but I am surprised that my good friend from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] does not object to such a proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

FLOOD CONTROL AND RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, in order that I may report from the Committee on Commerce a local bill and have it considered and passed. It is a very short bill, and I think there will be no objection to it. The department has recommended its passage.

Mr. KENYON. I want to accommodate the Senator from Minnesota. Everything seems to have a chance here except the unfinished business. I am willing that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for this particular measure, and then I am going to ask that we proceed with the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 13313) to authorize the construction of flood control and improvement works in Boise de Sioux River, the Red River of the North, and Lake Traverse, between the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the drainage districts and other municipal authorities of the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, or any one or more of them now or hereafter organized and existing under the laws of said States, are hereby authorized to construct a dam at or near the outlet of Lake Traverse in the Boise de Sioux River, together with such dikes, spillways, diversion channels, and other works in said river and lake, and the Red River of the North, as such districts or municipal authorities, or any of them, may agree upon as necessary for the prevention and control of floods, the improvement of navigation, and the drainage of lands, and for that purpose may deepen and straighten any part of said rivers: Provided, That plans for the work hereby authorized shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, and unless and until approved by them, no part of such work shall be built or commenced.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, as I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is pending. It was discussed last night to some extent, and I do not think that we need spend any time on it. I think it is entirely satisfactory and should be in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the words "Panama Canal Zone," it is proposed to insert "nor to members of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers employed at or in connection with said home."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On page 2, line 2, after the name "Porto Rico," I move to insert the words "Guam, the Virgin Islands."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the name "Porto Rico," it is proposed to insert the words "Guam, the Virgin Islands."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the amendment is offered at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, who thinks the employees of the Government in those islands, as well as in the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Hawaii should be excluded from the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill, because I really do not think it a proper way to fix compensation. There are quite a number of Government employees away from Washington who are not receiving $1,080 a year who ought to receive it; I grant that, and I wish their pay increased even beyond $1,080; but there are a great many such employees here in the District of Columbia who do not deserve it. There are a great many negro boys, messengers, around the departments who would be well paid at $60 a month, and there are other employees around the departments, such as those who run elevators, who are already well paid. There are others receiving $1,200 who are underpaid. I do not believe that the principle of arbitrarily saying no employee shall be paid less than a thousand and eighty dollars a year, regardless of his capacity, is sound. We have employees in the service of the Government who are as far from being skilled employees as any who work in any industry of the country or any that work on any farm. If the principle is to be established that no one is to work who does not receive as much as a thousand dollars a year I do not see how a great deal of the work that is being done now outside of the public service can be performed at all.

We have no statement as to the number of employees or the class of employees in the Government service to whom this bill will apply. As I remember, we do not know how much the increase will be.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that the testimony, I think, showed that, with the age limit as fixed by the House bill, which was lower than that fixed in the Senate bill, the number would be about 66,000; but the Senate increased the age limit to 20, and with that age limit the number will be very much less. The Senator, however, is correct in saying that we have no figures as to the actual number, but it would be considerably less than 66,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We increased the age at which the minimum wage should apply to 20.

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And we also eliminated the bonus?

Mr. KENYON. We did.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So that employees are only to receive as a minimum $1,080 instead of something over $1,300?

Mr. KENYON. Personally, I think it was a mistake to cut off the bonus. I think the employees covered by the bill should have the bonus; but that amendment was agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The argument made before our committee in favor of the minimum wage bill was that no one could support a family on less than the amount provided. I grant that; but is only one person in a family to work? Is compensation to be fixed upon the theory that each person who is to work is to support a family? It ofttimes happens and should happen that a number in each family work. Take conditions in the city of Washington. There are first-class messengers and second-class messengers and women who run elevators who are members of the same family. It is entirely untrue that each person in the Government employ supports a family; and the principle is economically unsound that compensation for service should be limited on the theory that each person doing work supports a family.

I wish to say that there are a number of Government employees, I understand, who are receiving less than $1,080 a year, whom I should like to see receive that much or more. There are Government employees in my own city who are not receiving as much as I think they ought to receive. I have telegraphed there for information about them. I think in the Government penitentiary at Atlanta there are men who ought to receive more than they are receiving. I understand that there is a clerk in that institution who receives only $900. That is wrong. There is no one employed in that work, so far as I know, who ought not to receive $1,080 a year, and I would be glad to see them get it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask for information whether this bill covers the multitude of young men—perhaps there are thousands of them—in the various departments who sit at the doors of the different offices and have nothing to do except to indicate to inquirers that Mr. Jones is in or is not in and perhaps show the inquirer to the office of some employee of the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And they usually do not know where the office is.

Mr. KING. Would it include those hundreds—I was about to say thousands—of employees?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; it covers them if they are 20 years old. Really one of the most offensive features of the bill to me was the idea of paying $1,080 a year to the incompetent boys who have been sitting around the offices of the various departments, who do not get up when you speak to them, who do not know where anything is when you inquire about it, and who ought to be at work somewhere instead of loafing in front of a door of a Government office, without intelligence enough or politeness enough to show a visitor who wants to locate a particular office in the department where he wants to go. It is to paying them that I object more than anything else connected with this bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator that they ought to be discharged.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I really think that is the best treatment that could be accorded them.

Mr. KENYON. The incompetent and useless workers should be discharged; but that is not any argument against a living wage for those who are competent. While the bill may cover some such cases, I do not think it covers a great many; but it covers the cases of the janitors in the Federal buildings throughout the country, who are drawing salaries of $850 and $900 a year. Those are the employees who appeal to one in connection with a measure of this character; but we are always met with this argument, and the answer to that argument is that useless employees ought to be discharged. It is no argument against a living wage for the faithful and efficient employees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am going to yield to the Senator. I have made my statement explanatory of my objections to the bill, and I am through.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for information, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what proportion of the beneficiaries under this bill reside in the District of Columbia?

Mr. KENYON. At the time the bill was reported a much larger number resided in the District than now, because some have gone away; but I will say to the Senator that I understand the number is about 23,000 to 25,000.

Mr. KING Twenty-three thousand to twenty-five thousand?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I am not exactly accurate about that. That is my judgment about it. It is mostly throughout the States of the Union. I will look up those figures.

Mr. KING. Those 23,000 or 25,000 would largely, if not wholly, be messengers and operators of little elevators in some of the public buildings, would they not?

Mr. KENYON. They cover that class.

Mr. KING. Eighty per cent of whom are colored, perhaps 90 per cent.

Mr. KENYON. Now, Mr. President, that raises the question of color.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, would the chairman of the committee accept an amendment providing that this bill shall not apply to the District of Columbia? With that, I will vote for it.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Utah has let the cat out of the bag. I say that a colored man has just as much right to a living wage as a white man.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Iowa is not quite fair to me, if he will pardon me for saying so.

Mr. KENYON. I may not be fair to the Senator, but I know a good deal about the opposition to this bill.

Mr. KING. In making that observation, I did so more for the purpose of determining the persons who would be included within the bill. I inquired of the Senator from Georgia a moment ago about these messengers, and the Senator knows that the great majority of them are colored. I agree with the Senator that there should be no discrimination. I think that a colored man who performs work is entitled to the same compensation as a white man who performs the same grade of work, and I would not make any distinction at all; but I was just trying to determine the class of men and women who would come within the terms of this bill.

Now, if the Senator, having answered that question——

Mr. KENYON. I have not really answered it. I want to be fair to the Senator. Perhaps I was a little hasty in my remark; but I can not tell, because I have never tried to find out whether a man was a black man, or a white man, or a Catholic man, or a Protestant man.

Mr. KING. Oh, I did not ask the Senator to apportion them among the races at all.

Mr. KENYON. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. KING. Oh, no; I did not. I was asking with reference to those who were engaged as messengers in the various departments, and, for my own information, I made the inquiry as to whether they were not largely colored. Now, I ask the Senator what other persons are embraced within this bill? The Senator has referred to the messengers and those who operate the elevators in the public buildings. What other class of employees are embraced within it?

Mr. KENYON. All employees of the Government above 20 years of age, under our amendment, who do not receive $3 per day. All the charwomen, whom we are paying very small wages, would come under this bill. They work by the hour; but under this bill there is a limitation that they must be paid 37½ cents an hour. It is that class, it is the poorly paid class, of Government employees that this bill touches, and they are in every State of the Union. They are in the customhouses of New York; they are in the courts of New York. I have lists here that I could give the Senator and I could go on and discuss the matter at some length; but that, in general, is the state of affairs. The Senator knows the hundreds of thousands of Government employees throughout the United States, and I think it is a good deal of a reflection that we have 66,000 Government employees who really do not receive a living wage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether or not the Reclassification Commission, which has made a report, takes into account all employees of the Government, regardless of whether they are within the civil service or not?

Mr. KENYON. I asked the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] about that matter to-day. I am sorry he is not here. He is on the Reclassification Commission, and I asked him the question because the point was raised last night that this should await that work; and he authorizes me to say that this bill fits into the plan and scheme of the Reclassification Commission.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is not here, and I do not want to do him an injustice; but my understanding of his position was that he wanted to be heard upon this bill, and I gathered from his observations that if we fixed a standard in this bill it might have some relation—whether favorable or unfavorable, I am not prepared to state—to the measure which has been submitted by the Reclassification Commission.

Mr. KENYON. I really am not prepared to give the Senator the facts on that matter. The Senator from Missouri, however, made the statement to me that it did not, and that it fitted into the plans of that commission.

Mr. KING. It did seem to me, Congress having appointed a commission to reclassify the salaries and the employees of the Government—a commission which, as I am told, has devoted very intelligent work to this task, and has spent months, at an expense of a great many thousands of dollars, and has submitted a report—that it was rather premature to take up any phase of the question that would be embraced within their work or covered by their field of activity. I recall that in the Judiciary Committee we have had up the question of fixing the salaries of marshals and district attorneys throughout the United States, to classify them with reference to the importance of their positions and the amount of work which was involved in their respective offices; and upon a number of occasions when strong statements have been made by Senators asking for immediate relief on behalf of their respective districts, I have always opposed it, because I have said that if you attempted to fix salaries in that manner it would produce lack of uniformity and injustice; that the way to fix the salaries of the district attorneys and marshals of the United States was in one bill, and not to take up each particular district separately. It occurred to me that, having appointed a commission that has considered this matter at great length, we ought to consider the whole subject at one time and in one bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment adding after the words "railway mail clerks" the words "nor to employees in the District of Columbia." If that amendment were agreed to, the proviso would read:

Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to persons enlisted in the military or naval branches, * * * nor to employees in the District of Columbia.

In support of that amendment I have this to say: We are right here in the District. We know what these employees do in the District. We are familiar with their work. If there are those in the District who are underpaid, they are right under our observation and we can increase their pay. I am sure there are a number that work here in the District who are not worth $1,080 a year. There are two or three in a family, frequently three in the same family, at work here, and $1,080 a year is excessive for their work.

If this amendment can be adopted, I shall have nothing else to say against the bill. It is, at least in part, on account of my desire to see better pay given to those of skill that I object to spending $10,000,000 more arbitrarily on a minimum wage without reference to service rendered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2 of the blue print, line 6, after the words "or railway mail clerks," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or employees in the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, of course the fact stated by the Senator from Georgia that he would cease opposition to this bill if this amendment were adopted is quite persuasive, but I can not understand why the bill should apply outside of the District of Columbia and not within it. The prices of shoes are just as high in the District of Columbia; bread is just as high; clothing is just as high; and the Government clerks in the District of Columbia who are receiving less than a living wage get just as hungry if they can not secure food as the Government clerks outside of the District of Columbia. The distinction that the Senator makes is economically unsound.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is not a Government clerk in the District of Columbia who does not get $1,080, is there?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes. We had testimony before our committee in regard to women in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, some of whom have been compelled to work at Huyler's soda-water fountains in addition to their work for the Government, trying to get money enough to live on. I am sure that if the Senator would read over that evidence he would see that while what he says about certain messengers is true—I agree with him as to that matter, and I wish we could get rid of them—yet that is overborne by the great weight of the testimony of these women who are toiling in the District, many of them supporting dependents—I think the great majority of them—at these perfectly inadequate wages. That is true of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in particular. I know especially about that bureau. The testimony is full of cases that are rather pathetic.

I see, however, that the Senator from Georgia has left the Chamber. So I shall not discuss the matter further.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he has recently looked into the question of education? He had some figures here on that subject some time ago. I should like to ask him if he can tell us the average pay that school-teachers get in some of the different States?

Mr. KENYON. I can not, but I can tell the Senator that it is entirely too low.

Mr. DIAL. We agree on that, perhaps; but, still, that does not answer the question.

Mr. KENYON. And I will join the Senator in any movement to increase the pay of school-teachers to a living wage. A lot of them do not get it.

Mr. DIAL. I think they are a class of people whose salaries ought to be increased, too, considerably, certainly in a great many States; but my recollection is, Mr. President, that the school-teachers in certain States receive possibly less than $800 per annum. Now, it seems to me that when some of the people of sufficient education to teach school are getting only $800 per year, certainly this increase is altogether out of proportion. I saw some statistics some time ago, and my recollection is that the ministers of the Gospel in certain of our States receive an average of less than $800 per annum.

I look at this bill as absolutely a step in the wrong direction. It is bad legislation to undertake to fix a minimum wage for any class of people. I am against it on principle. If we go ahead here now, and Congress passes a law saying that $3 a day is a minimum wage, that will be heralded all over the United States as fair compensation for all labor. We will thereby encourage people to quit work, and they will hold it up to employers all over this country that Congress has said that no one need work unless he gets a minimum compensation of $1,080 a year. It does seem to me that now, of all times, we need more work and more activity, and especially more work on the farm.

When we can scarcely get enough to eat, when people are quitting the farms and coming to town, you encourage them to quit. You invite them to come to town, to work seven or seven and a half or not over eight hours a day. Therefore there is no use for them to toil out there some 12 or 14 hours a day. The people in town get better wages than they get, and especially in these attractive cities, Mr. President, where there is free education, free amusement, free books for the children who go to school, where not one person in a family alone works, but, as the Senator from Georgia has just said, various members of the family work and draw pay. It is not fair for Congress to talk about everyone who draws a salary supporting a family. I am not well posted on this line, but I do not doubt but what there are cases where there are several members of a family drawing pay.

Not only that, but by these short hours of work people now are enabled to work two shifts a day. I have heard at least two men say recently that they were doing that, and thereby getting double pay. I want to encourage industry on their part; I think it is well for them to work longer, but I think it is wrong to expect the taxpayers of this country to pay them a full day's pay for a half day's work.

Mr. President, we have a great deal of unrest in this country. I am strongly in favor of everyone laboring. My own personal opinion is that it matters not if a person is well off financially, he is under obligation to society to set a good example, and he should be employed in some line of labor. His State has educated him very probably, and now it is due his neighbor and it is due the community and it is due the young for him to set them an example of industry.

I do not suppose anybody would accuse me, Mr. President, of trying to speak for the Republican Party, but I read of an incident the other day that was certainly along the right line of encouraging people to work. The time has come when we all jump over ourselves in trying to educate people, and I believe in education, Mr. President; but it seems now that one of the great desiderata of education is to quit work. It seems as if they have educated you to quit making a living, and think you must get off in a different sphere. So what I read the other day which encouraged me about the Republican Party was that they offered a premium to the person who could write the best platform for that party, and I believe the only qualification of the man was that he must be under 25. It was a magnificent premium they offered; I think it was $6,000; and the man who won the first premium was working his way through a college in one of the Northern States, in Massachusetts, I believe, but I have forgotten the name of the institution.

That should be an example to the young of this country not to sit down and expect the Government to pick them up and carry them about and educate them and give them free books and free pencils. Mr. President, I look for Congress before long to say that we must feed the children of this country, must give them free lunches, and things of that sort.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I rather agree with some of the Senator's observations about this desire in the country not to work, but does he not think that has gotten into the American Congress, too? Did the Senator vote to adjourn?

Mr. DIAL. I do not know, Mr. President, that it is very prevalent here.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator voted to adjourn. Does he not think Congress would better stay here and do business?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I think that was the wisest thing Congress has done since I have been here, if I may be allowed to say so. I am a young Member, as you all know; I have been here but a year, and I think, with all due respect to my brother Members and colleagues, if they do not throw me out of the body, that they could have passed the legislation they have adopted in at least one-half the time it took them to pass it. It is a magnificent body of gentlemen; the most social, courteous, and ethical body I have ever been associated with, as a whole, and I regret, Mr. President, that I have to separate from them for the summer. I will miss their congenial spirits, their pleasant jokes, and their eloquence, but I think, Mr. President, that the business interests of this country will feel at ease; to-day they felt at ease when they heard we were going to adjourn this session next Saturday. My understanding of the business problems of this country, although I do not claim to be an expert, is that the men who carry on the affairs of this country, men who are providing employment for the people of this country, do not care so much what the law is if that law is fixed and not always being tampered with. They want rest in this country, and I believe now there will be a spell of satisfaction, and we will let the people know that they must go home and work out their own prosperity, and not be knocking at the door of Congress all the time for some appropriations.

I wish there was a law on the books that Congress could not sit over four months in any year. We would be better off; the whole country would be better off, Mr. President. I voted to adjourn, and it is one of the votes I am proud of.

Mr. President, I want to say that this bill will encourage idleness; it will encourage vagrancy; it will simply tell labor all over this country that there is no use for them to work unless they can get the maximum pay.

I am in favor of paying every man, woman, and child who works a reasonable compensation for what he does, but, Mr. President, I say that I am totally opposed to fixing by law a scale that all laborers can come under without allowing the employer to discriminate between the more faithful, the more diligent, and the more efficient laborers and those who are less so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator if, in his opinion, it will not prevent those laborers who can not perform a good day's service from getting a fair compensation for their services?

Mr. DIAL. I think so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Because of the fact that no one would employ at this minimum wage a person who could not perform reasonably a day's work.

Mr. DIAL. There is no question about that, Mr. President. Those who are partially disabled would be turned out of employment, where they would be satisfied, perhaps, to take half pay and work half time; this would shut the door against them. They would have to live some way. The next thing would be a pension for the disabled or for people out of employment.

Mr. President, we have gone far enough in this Congress. We ought to set examples for this country. We ought to pass laws which would be examples which the States could go by, laws we would all be proud of.

I have heard some talk in the Senate of some men shirking their duty, Mr. President. I believe, in the common parlance of the day, it is called "passing the buck." I look on that as an obnoxious proposition, Mr. President. Since I have been here I believe I have let the buck jump once or twice, but I do not expect to follow that practice any longer. I feel that a man is a coward and he is a poor representative if he allows his brother Senators to assume the responsibility which rests upon his shoulders and shirks any vote, whether he knows his vote would change the result or not. That is not what we are here for, Mr. President, and I would prefer to have the consciousness of knowing that I have done my duty, let my term be long or short. I feel, Mr. President, that it is too serious a proposition, it is too solemn a matter, for us to come here and deal with the public money in any other way than that in which we would deal with our own pocketbooks. For us to say this Government must pay everyone that minimum wage would practically say to the people of this country that they should fix that as a standard.

I have no prejudice against any class or any calling or any religious sect, or anything of that sort, Mr. President, but I do not admit that all persons are equal in intelligence or in industry, and things like that, which tend to make them more competent servants or laborers or employees in any calling in life.

We need people to be menial servants. There have been such since the foundation of the earth, and will continue to be as long as there is time, Mr. President, and it will not do to say that all should receive the same wages. They are not worth it. They have not the intelligence to make them worth it, Mr. President.

Most of the Senators present are men of family. One or two are not, I believe, fortunate enough to have families; but, Mr. President, we are by this saying to the people of this country, "When our wives employ you to cook you will get $1,080 a year." If Senators want their wives to be cooks and washerwomen, then they had better pass this bill. If you pass it, the people who have heretofore been performing that service will say, "Nothing doing with me. The Congress has done said I should get a thousand and eighty dollars a year for my services."

It is left to each one whether you want a servant or whether you want to employ anybody or not.

Mr. President, I believe the estimate which goes out to this country now is that this would increase taxes about $5,000,000 a year, and this is no time for an increased tax to be placed upon the people of this country. The burdens are already heavy. I received a letter the other day from a man in my State. We do not boast of our wealth down there much, although we do not like to talk of our poverty in company.

This man said that the Government is taxing him in so many things, and taxing him so hard, and has imposed so many restrictions, and there is so much red tape around his business that he has about made up his mind to quit and not try to produce more.

Somebody has to pay the taxes in this country. Somebody has to provide employment in this country, Mr. President. Ordinarily I have pretty good nerve, I think.

I do not get excited. I am a Presbyterian, and I believe in predestination, and I let things sort of go along the line of least resistance, but I must say that I am alarmed at the tendency of Congress to go back into lavish expenditure of money in unnecessary appropriations.

We pass retroactive laws. I would not be much surprised if next there would be an effort to make this bill retroactive. It is bad legislation, Mr. President, as was so well demonstrated here by the Senator from New York in the correspondence he read, showing a certain class of people who ought not to be included in this bill, and I am satisfied that if we studied out all the conditions and all the people who would profit by this bill, we would find many other glaring mistakes, and it would convince the balance of the Senate that this kind of legislation ought not to pass.

We ought to encourage people to work; we ought to encourage young people to work; we ought to encourage the old to work where they can do so without detriment to their health. We ought to encourage the women to work. It does not hurt them to be occupied. But, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] said, this bill will practically throw out of employment everybody except the strongest.

So I say it is bad legislation, it is along the wrong line, and it will tend to cost this Government millions and millions of dollars. If we establish this principle here, it will spread all over the country, which is a bad thing now of all times. We have been through this Great War, with years of destruction, with hundreds of thousands and even millions of people destroying property instead of creating property, and it will take us a long time to get back upon our feet again. We ought now to go out and follow even the example of Russia, where the people are working 12 hours a day. We ought to create more to bring down the cost of living.

Down South, where I live, labor has been exceedingly scarce this year. I read in the paper just yesterday a report from one of the Government bureaus on the cotton crop, which shows that this year it is only 62.4 per cent of the normal crop, the lowest in the history of the bureau, which estimates the crop to be less than 10,000,000 bales of cotton.

By not letting people work and earn more, the cost of living is going to continue to mount higher and higher. Cotton cloth will soon bring the price of silk; indeed, it is almost doing that now. If the pending bill is passed and it becomes an established fact that there are even two or three employees in the town who draw pay not commensurate with the salaries paid surrounding fellow employees, it would have a tendency to discourage the whole community. Everyone occupying a similar position would at once claim compensation the equal of the highest; otherwise he would not be satisfied and content with his employment.

So I think that the bill certainly has not been maturely considered. If it has been, Senators have certainly overlooked conditions at the present time. The price of everything is going to mount up and up, higher and higher, and I see no way in the world to take care of the high cost of living except by bringing about more production. This is merely taking money out of one man's pocket and putting it into another's, and that does not create anything; it does not even create wealth. What we need is to employ people to work more. I would prefer to have less employees and pay them a higher salary. I believe that is the correct principle, and we had better adopt it. For the reasons I have stated I hope that the bill will be defeated.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

LANDS IN OREGON.

The bill (H. R. 14101) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands have considered this bill and have directed me to report favorably upon it. It refers only to the reclamation of certain lands in my own State, extending the time for such reclamation. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized within his discretion to continue to not beyond October 21, 1930, the segregation of the lands embraced in approved Oregon segregation list No. 11, under the Carey Act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the report of the House Committee on Public Lands on the bill.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[House Report No. 1040, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14101) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act, having considered the same, report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to continue the segregation of lands in Oregon, Carey list No. 11, for a period not continuing beyond October 21, 1930. The legislation is in response to a request of the State Desert Land Board of Oregon asking for an extension of not exceeding 10 years in order to enable it to complete the irrigation of lands within this project. The Secretary of the Interior recommends the enactment of the bill in the following report to the chairman of this committee:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 20, 1920.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: I am in receipt of your request for report on H. R. 14101, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to continue the segregation of lands in Oregon, Carey list No. 11, for a period not continuing beyond October 21, 1930. You also inclose resolution of the State Land Board of Oregon, reciting that because of unavoidable delays the State has been able to reclaim but 9,000 acres of the amount segregated; that a new company, composed principally of local business men and farmers, is continuing work on the project, and the State land board, in view of the increasing demand for irrigable lands, asks for an extension of not exceeding 10 years in order to enable it to complete the irrigation of the lands in the project.

I recommend the enactment of the bill, giving the Secretary of the Interior discretion to grant necessary continuances for the limited period mentioned.

Cordially, yours, JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Secretary.

The reasons which prompted the State desert land board to ask for this extension are more fully set out in a letter from Percy A. Cupper, secretary of the desert land board, State of Oregon, and in resolutions adopted by said land board at a meeting held May 12, 1920, copies of which letter and resolutions are herein set out for the information of the House.

SALEM, OREG., May 12, 1920.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In accordance with our telegram of this date, I am inclosing a certified copy of the resolution of the desert land board requesting the enactment of a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant an additional extension of the period of reclamation covering the Deschutes and Klamath County lands embraced in Oregon Carey Act segregation list No. 11.

This, you will remember, is the old Deschutes Land Co.'s irrigation project in the vicinity of Lapine on the upper Deschutes River.

I am also inclosing a draft of a bill for introduction, which follows the bill enacted by the Sixty-fifth Congress covering the Tumalo project segregation, which I believe was introduced by yourself.

I am transmitting a copy of the resolution and the bill to the other Members of our delegation in Congress, also to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and requesting their cooperation to the end that action may be had, if possible, prior to the adjournment of the present session.

If there is any further information you desire in this connection, kindly advise,

Yours, very truly, PERCY A. CUPPER,
Secretary of the Desert Land Board.

SALEM, OREG., May 12, 1920.

A special meeting of the desert land board was held this day in the Capitol Building, at 10.30 a. m.

Present: Ben W. Olcott, governor, chairman; Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state; O. P. Hoff, State treasurer; George M. Brown, attorney general; Percy A. Cupper, State engineer, secretary; J. L. McAllister, assistant secretary.

Thereupon the following proceedings were had, to wit:

"Whereas by contract entered into by and between the United States and the State of Oregon on October 21, 1905, 31,082.21 acres of arid land located in Deschutes and Klamath Counties, Oreg., was segregated for reclamation under the Carey Act, said segregation being for a period of 10 years, and designated as 'Oregon segregation list No. 11'; and

"Whereas on May 25, 1916, the Secretary of the Interior, under the Carey Act, granted an extension of five years within which to complete the reclamation of said lands; and

"Whereas on account of unavoidable delays, the irrigation company under contract with the State for the reclamation of the above lands is unable to complete the reclamation work within the segregation period as extended, which will expire October 21, 1920. Prior to the war some construction work was done, however, not to an extent so as to permit the diversion and use of water on the lands. On April 1, 1919, an assignment was made of the State's contract covering the construction of the irrigation system. The new company, known as the Walker Basin Irrigation Co., composed mainly of farmers, and local business men in that vicinity, has continued the construction work during the past season, and has recently reported the completion of construction work for the west unit of the project comprising approximately 9,000 acres, and has asked the State to secure patent for the lands thus reclaimed; and

"Whereas there is at present an increasing demand for lands reclaimed by irrigation, and the prospects are good for the reclamation of additional lands on this project under the present management, and it being deemed in the interests of both the State of Oregon and the United States that an extension of 10 years' time be authorized for the completion of the reclamation of the above lands: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Desert Land Board of Oregon, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, earnestly and respectfully requested to enact a special measure providing for an extension of the period of segregation on Oregon Carey Act segregation list No. 11 from October 21, 1920, to October 21, 1930; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Hon. N. J. SINNOTT, our Representative in Congress in whose district the above lands are located; also that the cooperation of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the other members of the Oregon delegation in Congress be requested, urging action on the proposed measure prior to the adjournment of the present session, in view of the fact that the present period of segregation expires October 21, 1920."

There appearing no further business, the meeting adjourned.

STATE OF OREGON,
County of Marion, ss:

I, Percy A. Cupper, State engineer, secretary of the Desert Land Board of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the records of the board, do hereby certify that I have compared the above and foregoing copy of the board's resolution with the original as it appears on page 181, volume 3, record of board minutes, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy, and of the whole thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 12th day of May, 1920.

PERCY A. CUPPER,
State Engineer.

Assistant Secretary.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to speak on the amendment, but more particularly on the bill itself. I do not care to go into detail, but in substance the bill provides that no man in the Government service, except those especially excluded in the bill—and they are not many—shall receive a wage of less than $1,080 per annum. This is on the basis that every man in the Government service should receive a living wage. Now, of course, it is true that every man should receive a living wage or get out of the service, and that no Government should expect a man to serve it without receiving a living wage; but it seems to overlook the fact entirely that every man who is in the Government service and receiving his wages from the Government to-day is doing so voluntarily and not by compulsion.

I recognize the fact that there are a great many men in the world—splendid men, men of high character, of high ideals, who desire to live within the law, good citizens—who lack initiative. Whether such men are employed by the Government or engaged in private employment, they undoubtedly do labor under a handicap, because from temperament they accept conditions as they are and do not battle to better themselves. If, however, there ever was a time in the history of this country when this character of legislation was unjustified from the standpoint that men can not receive good employment if they can render good service, this is the hour and this is the day. I know of no time in the history of America when there was a greater opportunity for every man who is willing to labor for his daily bread and willing to render efficient service to secure good employment and good wages.

As a matter of fact, despite the activity of the great productive industrial establishments of the country, the people of America are in danger in the future for their daily bread because there are not sufficient men who are willing to seek employment on the farm. There is a dearth of farm labor, as is recognized throughout the country, due, in the main, to the fact that there is a shortage of labor in America, but in part due to the fact that the stimulated wage price in industry has drawn the men from the farms to cities, from the plow to the factory.

So the greatest productive endeavor of the Nation is in danger for lack of employees to carry it on, not because agriculture is not productive of results, not because agriculture is not earning a good return for the effort it entails, for we all know that in almost every line of agricultural production prices are higher and there is a greater opportunity for profit than we have had in the country for decades past, if it were not for the one sole problem that labor has left the fields and has gone to the factories. So if we seek to stimulate wages by legislation of this kind we must recognize the fact that we are only taking one more step to drive up the cost of living to the American people by reducing the power of production and limiting the food supply.

"A living wage," friends of this bill say. What is a "living wage" and who has the power to fix it? Oh, I am not discussing the question of a salary, for, of course, I know that the Congress has the power to fix the salary of the employees of the Government. The private employer has the right to fix the wage or the salary for his employee, but who determines what is a "living wage"? Of course, if the Congress desires to attempt to be omnipotent and live within the home of every man on this continent, to know his surroundings and his necessities, and then to determine for him what "a living wage" is, it will enter that domain of socialism that was proposed and tried in Russia and failed; that was proposed and tried in Germany and destroyed government. It will attempt to do the impossible thing. A "living wage." What is a "living wage"? Is a "living wage" the same for all men? Must all men be measured by the same yardstick? Are all men expected to live within the same conditions of life? Are all men's necessities and wants the same? Is the burden of life that rests on one man the same as that which rests on another? I think not.

I can picture the man who lives along the frozen zone of the St. Lawrence, who must wear woolen clothes in winter, who must have high-priced fuel with which to heat his house that he may not suffer, in contrast with the man who lives in the sunny climes of this country, where the cheaper cotton fabric will comfortably clothe the family, where the necessity for fuel is seldom known except for the purpose of cooking food, and to say that the "living wage" is the same for the one as for the other is a contradiction upon its face.

The illustration may be carried further. Take the case of a man just from his schoolbooks seeking an opportunity in life, endeavoring to find a fulcrum on which he may rest the lever of opportunity, in order that he may work out the destiny that life holds for him. No obligations rest on his shoulder; he has no family to care for; he is endowed with strength and health and with the vigor of youth—a "living wage"—what is his "living wage"? Then, compare him with the man who has struggled on through the decades of hard work behind him, with a growing family that must be fed and clothed and schooled, and in whose life possibly old age or sickness have already made their inroads. Can any man say to me that the question of a "living wage" is the same for these two classes of men? No; the suggestion denies itself on its face.

The "living wage," which everybody will agree is but abstract justice for every human being, is an equation that does not write itself in dollars and cents. We can not take the mass of men throughout the country, or the mass of men employed by the Government, and do equal and abstract justice by all of them in any such manner. By determining that one equation the problem of life is not solved for all of them. It is an absurdity.

This legislation, in my judgment, is an indictment of the Congress of the United States; it is a proclamation of inefficiency in the Halls of Congress. It may make many unnecessary charges upon the Treasury of the Government, and at the same time may not relieve the stress where relief is needed.

It may be said that during the period of the war Congress passed a bonus bill arbitrarily to raise the wages of the clerical forces in the Government employ, regardless of individual work, regardless of individual efficiency. True; but that was a war measure, passed under the distress of war conditions. Only war and war conditions justified the slovenly legislation that was passed without consideration of the individual equation. Congress did not have time, in the midst of war, to solve equitably the problem of meeting the pyramiding conditions of the cost of everything, the cost of living, the cost of food, the cost of clothes, and the cost of rent; and therefore the Congress did the only thing it could do under the circumstances. It took the direct road to remedy the evil temporarily.

Now, however, the war is over. That time has passed, and the committee from which this bonus bill was reported recognized that the problem could not be solved in that way; that equal and exact justice could not be worked out through giving an arbitrary amount to every man upon the pay roll. Therefore they carried in the folds of one of the great supply bills a provision appointing a commission to investigate, work out, and report to the Congress a new scale of wages for Government employees.

Mr. President, I want to say that there is no man within the sound of my voice who has a greater sympathy than I have for the clerical force of the United States Government. There is no man here who realizes more than I do that the scale of wages fixed before the Great War, before the pyramiding of prices and the increase in the cost of living, is absolutely inadequate to meet present living conditions. The commission to which I refer has reported. Its report is now before the Congress. I am not critical of the gentlemen who are responsible for evolving legislation from that report for not having done so at an earlier date. I realize as well as anyone that it is a difficult problem to solve; that it will probably take months of time to adjust the salaries in the United States Government to the new conditions of employment and provide, not a living wage, but a just, fair, and reasonable compensation to the men who give their time and their lives in the service of a great Government. Show me the man who is begging here for a living wage, and I will show you a man who is a mental or a physical cripple or a man who is inefficient or a man who lacks the spirit to fight the battles of life.

No man should be content with a living wage. The man with the right spirit should battle for a wage which is just and equitable for the service that he renders and for the necessities of life for himself and his family. To give every man a living wage smacks of the sound of the pauper; of him that must take the generous doles of a Government; not of that fearless, independent American who stands to battle for his place in life and asks favors of none; ready always to render loyal service to his Government and demanding the just dues to his family and his home. That is the spirit of America, and that is the American. We are not filled with the spirit of pauperized Europe as yet, and I hope we never may be.

I say this bill is a badge of legislative inefficiency, to fix a minimum wage for all men because the Congress is not willing to take the time and the labor necessary to do justice and give a square deal to all its employees. I predict that this bill would have no standing on the floor of the Congress if the real men of America only knew what it meant, and not what it pretends to mean. The man who is receiving less than a thousand dollars a year thinks it is a stepping-stone for him to get a better wage; but is it? In my judgment, if this bill becomes a law, more of the employees of the United States Government will be injured by its terms than will be benefited.

Why do I say that? Some years ago I saw a bill passed through the Congress, and it was said that it was to protect the women from the sweatshops; it was to protect the women from cruel employers, from long hours of service, and it was passed to limit the hours of work of the women of the District of Columbia to some hours less than the men. What was the result? Did it help the women? No. Many employments where it was necessary for the business to go on longer than the hours limited in that particular bill were driven to discharge employees who were women and hire employees who were men, or else they were unable to conduct their business successfully. Of course, the situation has since adjusted itself by the women losing the opportunity for employment in many restaurants and other businesses in Washington, having their places filled by men, and being compelled to seek other and often less remunerative employment.

So it is with this bill. It is admitted on the floor of the Senate by the distinguished Senator who has the bill in charge that a number of employees who are not receiving this wage should be discharged from the Government service.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I think that is hardly a fair quotation of my statement. My statement was that useless employees, rendering no service to the Government, should be discharged.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure.

Mr. KENYON. That should not be construed into a general statement as broad as that which the Senator has just made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I was coming to. I would not for the world misquote the Senator from Iowa. Of course, I am glad to have him correct me. I had not concluded my statement. I intended to say that the Senator put it on the basis that the employment was useless. There may be a few places in the Government service where employment is absolutely useless—not many—but there are many places in the Government service where employment is inefficient, and the inefficiency is often due to the age or the health, mental or physical, of the employee of the Government.

There was a time, a few years ago, when we were so rich a Government that our budget, either by way of taxation or of expenditure, was not a problem to give us serious thought; but to-day, with a war indebtedness of $24,000,000,000, with increased expenses due to pyramiding prices, with the necessity for increasing the wages of all Government employees, with the people of America already staggering under the burden of taxation, the hour has come when the Congress of America must be efficient. It must produce efficiency in the great departments of this Government, or it must plead guilty to the indictment that it can not properly run the business of the Nation.

Therefore I say that with reasonable pay, not a living wage for a full grown man, not a living wage for the man who must carry on his shoulders the burdens of a family, but possibly sufficient to carry through to the final end of the road the men who have been wounded on the battle field of life, and can partly serve, although not efficiently. When you place this wage at the point where you will not receive efficient service in comparison with the ordinary employments of the Nation, outside of the Government service, the men who are now surviving ultimately will perish, because, Mr. President, if there is one thing which the American people in the future will demand of their Government and the Congress of the United States, it is that we shall have efficiency in public employment, and economical conduct of the affairs of the Nation.

When you carry this problem to the point where you must produce economy—and often higher wages and better service are more economical than poorer wages and poorer service—where only the efficient can measure up to the salary you fix, then the wreck of humanity who possibly has given the better part of his life to the Government must go down and be discharged, and that is what this bill means. It means an attack on the weakling.

There is no necessity for it. The Congress only a few weeks ago passed an employees' pension bill to take care of the faithful servants of the Government who have grown too old and too infirm to serve the Government further. That was a just and reasonable measure that the taxpayer can afford to carry, because it holds out the promise of reward at the end of the road and encourages efficient men to give their lives to the Government.

This bill is a blindfold bill. We do not know where it goes, where it starts, and where it will end. Already, though it has not become a law, it has proved that fact to the country.

In a lapse of mental effort some time ago the Congress allowed this bill to be passed through the Senate without resistance because of the rush of other great measures which were occupying the time of the Senate. It was recalled by a motion to reconsider, and that is how it comes here; and the first thing we are confronted with, now that the bill is having real consideration, is the fact that it would have taken away from a number of infirm and decrepit old soldiers of the Union Army a pittance of $15 a month, if it had been enacted into law, because they were given nominal employment. Of course, they receive their board and lodging at the Soldiers' Home, but for a little spending money they could do a few hours' work for the Government at $15 a month; and if you allow this bill to become a law as it passed the House and was reported to the Senate originally, the Government could not have paid those men $1,000 a year for the service rendered, with the result that the soldier would have had to be discharged and his pittance taken away from him.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I was very glad to agree to the amendment designed to cure that defect, because the condition was as the Senator has stated. But the bill provides for a minimum wage as to hours, 37½ cents per hour, which would have covered the situation, because those old soldiers can not work many hours in any event. However, that clarified the matter, and so the amendment was accepted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I talked to the superintendent of the Soldiers' Home, and I think his case was clear; and I think the Comptroller of the Treasury would have sustained him. But be that here or there, accepting the position which the Senator from Iowa takes, that it is necessary to clarify, what I am leading up to is: What is in the folds of that bill that we know not of? I do not know, and I am sure the Senator from Iowa does not know.

Mr. KENYON. It may be, Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not reflecting on the Senator's industry or his patience or his intelligence, because he has far more than other men in all those regards. I know that the Senator from Iowa is always sincere and earnest in his endeavors, patient in his undertakings, and industrious to the last degree. But still I know, with all the study which the Senator from Iowa gave this bill, this question of its effect on the old soldiers in the Federal homes had not occurred to him before he reported the bill, or he would have taken care of it at that time.

Mr. KENYON. We had evidence before the committee on that disputed proposition, and the committee thought, as I did, that it was taken care of. I still think so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Without reflecting on the Senator from Iowa in the slightest degree, or intending to do so, I will remind the Senate that we are all human; we are not omniscient; we can not know and see all things; and I predict now, and have no doubt in the world that my prediction will come true, that if you write this bill upon the statute books as it stands before us you will find in the near future that you are paying salaries to men which the Government can not pay, and you will force them out of Government employment by the very enactment of this legislation.

There is a right way and a wrong way, Mr. President, to do everything. The right way is to legislate intelligently, and the wrong way is to legislate blindfolded. There is pending before this Congress now a report not for a living wage but for just payment for employment for every employee.

We are about to adjourn. The probabilities are that this bill will not become a law before the December session, if it is passed now, because amendments have already been agreed to which will send it back to the House of Representatives, and except under the stress of extraordinary circumstances it can not be expected to be considered and gotten through, and before the December session the responsibility will rest on the committees having the matter in charge to work out this entire wage system, as the Congress has already indicated it should be done, not by blindfold bonuses, not by minimum-wage bills, but by an intelligent determination of the question, by taking the clerks and employees of the Government in detail, deciding what is a fair and just compensation to them, not a living wage, but from the standpoint of their ability, their character, their standing in life, and their efficiency, weighed in the scale of private employment, and then write that on the statute books.

You can not pay all men the same wage. Of course, I know that men who drift to socialistic theories of life believe that God Almighty put men here, some with strong hands and some with weak hands, some with powerful intellects and some with none at all. Then they think those men who are created should have the same earning capacity in life and the same opportunity in life, and if the Creator of the Universe did not give it to them they are going to give it to them by law. That may be a beautiful theory, but like all theories of that kind it will fall and fail after you have paid the price for the trial.

I am not at all sure that the man who attains the greatest earning capacity is either the happiest man or the most successful man in life. The burdens of work, the burdens of responsibility that are attempted to be compensated for in dollars, have on the red side of the ledger often the destruction of a human soul balanced against them. Often the divorcement from home and children and all those affections that are nearest and dearest to the human heart can not be bought with dollars or measured in the equation of dollars and cents.

But when we come to employment we must measure the scale in dollars, as this bill does not do. This bill in a moderate way undertakes to perform a few miracles by the ideal of taking care of the poor. It is charitable. There is nothing greater than charity; but I say that the men in the Government employ are entitled to more than charity. They are entitled to justice, and you can not answer the demands of justice by passing bonus bills and minimum-wage bills. The summer months are before us ere we meet in December, and should carry the responsibility to the great committees to solve the problem of Government employment and have it ready to report after the Congress assembles at that time, and ready to do justice, not charity.

I think from that standpoint this is a very bad bill. It stands as a buffer and excuse for what the Congress really should do. It stands as a buffer and excuse between the man who is struggling to maintain his position, and what the Congress in fact has promised to do for him, that will never be carried out by the provisions of this bill. One thousand and eighty dollars! It may reach a few of the elder men or the middle-aged men who have been crippled in life's work, but not many. It may reach a good many of the boys who are just starting, with no burdens on their shoulders, who will probably get an increase in wage of $100 or $120; youngsters who are studying in night schools; youngsters with no families to support, with absolute health, ready for the battle of life, better off with not too many dollars to spend in idle places. Yes, it may reach them, but what does it do for the clerk of 20 years' service, the chief of a division or bureau, the man who has rendered the Government the best years of his life, who has a growing family, a wife and children to support, and a position in life to maintain? What does it do for him? Nothing!

It is an excuse to say that this Congress has done something for the employees of the Government. The excuse does not fool me, and I am not going to accept it as an excuse. I know that the man of family, the man of middle age, the man with life's obligations resting on his shoulders, who is a Government employee with $1,800 or $2,000 or $2,200 a year compensation, under the burdening and pyramiding increased cost of living, is confronting a very much more serious and dangerous problem to his home and his family than the messenger, the underclerk, the boy who is just in the service, has to confront at $800 or $900 a year.

The boy can go through. The boy is battling for an opportunity in life and not for dollars. The old clerk has got his way in life marked out. He must keep on the road on which he started, because the burdens that rest on his shoulders are too heavy for him to turn aside. That is the man whom you are neglecting in this legislation. That is the man you are forgetting under the idea of charity, the idea that every man should receive a living wage, which, of course, goes without saying. But it is proposed in the bill to give some more than a living wage, because, as I said, the boy just starting into manhood, who is in this department for the purpose of earning money to get an education, may make his way well enough on $75 or $100 a month, but no relief is furnished for the man who has a higher wage not commensurate with his position in life, and who is battling not only for his family but his Nation to carry on the great endeavors of the Government.

So, Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I wish to stand here and make my protest against the bill. I regard it as a travesty on legislation. I regard it as a monument erected to inefficiency in legislation. I regard it as an effort of the Congress to neglect its real duty and putting on the statute books an excuse for the shortcomings that it has already exhibited and does not propose to remedy in the future.

No, Mr. President; you can not measure all men's wages or their services on the same scale and with the same yard measure. You can not determine in that way what is a living wage for one man and what for the other. When you pass a bill like this, you give too much to some, as has already been demonstrated in the argument here to-day, and you do not give enough to others. The only way to properly determine it is to take the lists of clerks, study out what their employment is, what the needs of the man who has reached that employment may be as an average, what he does in life, and then fix a just wage, a fair wage, and do not excuse yourselves by saying that you propose to rest easy because you have passed a living-wage bill for Government employees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

With the general proposition that adequate compensation should be paid to all persons for the labor performed by them, there can be no controversy. Indeed, the welfare of society requires that a wage should be paid sufficient for the proper support and maintenance of those who render service, as well as their families. The day has passed when society and governments exist for the welfare and protection of a few only of its members. The day of democracy has dawned and the rising sun of industrial and political liberty is dissipating the murky clouds and poisonous vapors which have for so many centuries darkened the lives of the masses of the people. It is not enough that there should be civil and political liberty in the world. There must be economic and industrial freedom. From the dawn of history privileged classes have ruled to a greater or less degree in most nations. The toilers, the great army which struggled and slaved and produced, were treated with indifference by rulers and the privileged few and regarded as proper subjects for exploitation.

Those who laid the foundations of this Republic declared for political independence and equality, and the political philosophy which they followed found expression in the economic and industrial policies for which they contended. So long as we were a pastoral people the problems which exist in manufacturing communities, particularly where there is congestion of population, did not arise. But the marvelous growth of our Nation and the unparalleled development along manufacturing lines have raised new questions and their complexities have been accentuated because there have been established in limited areas thousands of important industries which provide employment for hundreds of thousands, and, indeed, millions, of persons. De Tocqueville, speaking of America's prosperity in his day, said, "The Americans are nearly all in easy circumstances." Our political and industrial organism is vastly different from what it was a hundred years ago.

Society in its growth and development is much like the evolutionary manifestations in the biological world—the simple yields to the complex. The needs of a pastoral people in sparsely settled districts are limited, but with the progress in physical science, with the development in art and industry, with the growth of manufacturing, and with the numerous economic changes which the last 50 years have produced, the requirements of society are greatly multiplied. As manufacturing enterprises increase and large numbers of people are brought together for service in manufacturing plants and in industrial occupations, what is denominated as the "labor question" becomes of paramount importance.

Illustrations of the truth of this statement are found when we examine conditions in Great Britain as well as in the manufacturing centers of our own country. The prosperity of the Nation depends upon the conditions of the wage earners and those who by their toil and their efforts, manual and mental, produce and create that which we call property, whether real or personal. Without production peoples would lapse into barbarism and nations would be overthrown. The products of the farm and mine and mill and factory constitute the wealth, or at least they become the basis for the wealth, of the community. But, Mr. President, there are riches more priceless than houses and lands or the precious metals dug from the earth. Mr. Money, in his work, Riches and Poverty, truly appraises the value of man when he says, "The only true riches of the nation, men and women—these are the people themselves."

Increased production makes for improved conditions, and the savings and accumulations of the people constitute the bases of what we call capital. The laborer, the man who produces, must receive a fair share of the products of his toil.

I have had occasion to state that there are too few workers and too many idlers and parasites and slackers, those who feed and fatten upon the efforts and struggles of others. In the animal and vegetable kingdoms there are parasitic growths, and these minute organisms fasten themselves upon other forms of life and are thus sustained. Our industrial organism is not without defects. It tolerates, if it does not permit, the development of a parasitic class. There are too many professional men, too many middle men, too many organizations and agencies between the producer and consumer. The machinery employed in converting the raw material into the finished product and in conveying it to the hands of the ultimate consumer is too extensive, complicated, and cumbersome. These organizations have been oppressive and burdensome and have been utilized to increase, beyond all reason, the prices of commodities and all other products entering into the life and health of the people. The producer, particularly the agriculturist, has often been denied a reasonable profit upon his investment and a fair return upon his labor. During the last five or six years the brokers, wholesalers, jobbers, middle men, and retailers have enjoyed a prosperity unparalleled in the history of our country—a prosperity indefensible as based upon accepted standards of morality and ethics. There seems to have been a mad race to increase prices and multiply profits.

The usual standards of fair dealing seem to have been departed from, and there has been a frenzied scramble, in which neither conscience nor honesty prevailed, to exploit and rob and extort from the great mass of the American people. The owners of corporations engaged in manufacturing business have made profits so enormous as to prevent concealment. Huge dividends have been paid. Millions of dollars have been improperly charged to operating expenses, improvements, obsolescence, and amortization, and stock dividends aggregating millions of dollars have been declared. Wholesalers have not been satisfied with reasonable profits, but have robbed deliberately and premeditatedly those with whom they dealt. And many brokers have disregarded the high standard of conduct supposed to prevail in their dealings with their clients and the public and have in a cruel and merciless way robbed and plundered the people.

It has been called to my attention that some brokers, taking advantage of the sugar shortage, have secured large quantities of sugar at prices beyond which the producer could not go, owing to the action of the Department of Justice, under the Lever Act, and have disposed of their purchases at a profit of millions, which were charged to the people to whom this product is a necessity of life. Retailers in substantially all of the articles of food and clothing which enter into the lives of the people have been absolutely unconscionable in their charges and have been largely responsible for the high prices prevailing in the articles which they vended, thus oppressing and exploiting the consuming public. It is regrettable that not more of those who have robbed and exploited the people have been prosecuted and punished as their evil deeds demanded.

During the war, when the spirit of patriotism should have actuated all and the protection of our country should have been the sincere desire of all Americans, there were thousands who willfully robbed their country. The Government was compelled to purchase billions of dollars' worth of food and clothing and war munitions and articles imperatively required for the comfort and welfare of our soldiers and indispensable to the successful waging of the war. There were those who in their dealings with the Government acted in a generous and highly honorable manner.

I know of many cases where men placed their plants at the disposal of the Government without charge; and there were others who placed at the disposal of the Government various forms of commodities and property, produced or owned by them, for which no profit was asked and none received. These examples of patriotism and unselfishness should be known to the people. The names of these patriotic Americans should be brought to the attention of their countrymen. But there were thousands of others who were willing to pillage their country when it was fighting for liberty and for the cause of civilization. The names of these individuals should likewise be known by the people; and I hope that in the near future there will be published a list of all who had contracts, directly or indirectly, with the Government during the war, and who took advantage of the situation to practice extortion and defraud their country; their names should be known far and wide throughout the land. War develops the best and the worst within a people. The highest sentiments and the most exalted virtues shine in a brilliant and splendid manner, and the mean and groveling and sordid characteristics of a people are brought to the surface. Those who robbed our country and the people during the war have continued, where it was possible, their nefarious conduct since the armistice was signed. As a result we have had exhibitions of cupidity and avarice and injustice and extortion that have proved shocking to all honest and decent people.

I regret that the States have not set in motion the machinery which they possess to punish those within their borders who have defrauded the people. Upon a number of occasions I have referred to the fact that the States have the power to deal with many of the trusts, combinations, conspiracies, and monopolies, and with the profiteering and oppressive methods and practices which have been followed so extensively during and since the war. But few of the States have instituted prosecutions or brought suits to prevent abuses by corporations engaged in the various branches of trade and commerce within their borders.

I have felt that there have been numerous violations of the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act and that combinations and monopolies existed which were injurious to the people, and were in part responsible for the high prices throughout the land.

Some time ago I offered a resolution in the Senate—and it is now before the Judiciary Committee—relating to the Sherman Antitrust Act. My object in its introduction was to secure a report from the Judiciary Committee as to whether additional legislation was needed to strengthen this law for the purpose of more effectually preventing trusts and monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade. I have felt that there has been too much interference by oppressive methods and combinations with the proper application and operation of the law of supply and demand. In my opinion there are combinations and monopolies existing in our midst which are in contravention of the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act. I have sometimes felt that the view is becoming prevalent that this law is obsolete and that its provisions may be flouted and contemptuously disregarded.

Mr. President, I believe in our form of government and in a fair and legitimate competitive system as applied to the industrial and economic organism. Every man should have an equal show under the law and a free and fair field within which to contest for the crown of success. The young men of our land who are now entering upon their life's work must feel that there are no handicaps; that the Government has no favorites; that each competitor in the field of life will have a free and equal chance with every other person. The man of small means must feel that he will be protected from injustice and sharp practice and oppression at the hands of individuals and corporations possessing great wealth. Our laws must be so framed and their administration be of such a character as that the people throughout the land will believe that this is a land of justice and that there is equal and exact justice to all. The strength of government rests in the affections of the people. The Government, to be strong and enduring, must deal justly and fairly with the people.

The American people are not opposed to the successful achievements of men in business. There is a feeling of pride when they know of the success attained by American business men. They realize that the poor boy of to-day will be the successful business man of to-morrow. They do not desire a benumbing socialism or the application of communistic principles. All that the American people demand is a square deal. If they fail in the race, they have no complaint if they feel that the conditions of the race were fair, that there was no jockeying. There are many fathers living upon farms and in humble circumstances who are filled with pride at the achievements and successes of their sons. Section men upon the railroads become railroad presidents. Messenger boys in the banks, without friends or influence, become bank presidents and national figures.

Poor boys without education or reared in poverty upon the ranch and upon the farm become the owners of flocks and herds and agricultural lands of great value. Their industry and thrift and devotion to duty have brought them success.

We want to preserve a Government that affords these opportunities and that holds out the promise of success to the ambitious, provident, and industrious citizen. It is unfortunate that some who have achieved great success have employed their victories for the purpose of either impeding the progress of others or attempting to destroy by improper methods those with whom they competed. I have sometimes felt there were too many who desired wealth because of the power which it brought rather than the opportunity for service which it offered. And there are some who by ruthless and brutal methods have risen to power. Those who were in their path have been crushed or thrust aside. They have been unfair to labor; they have taken advantage of every opportunity to exploit the public; and have sought profits not only unconscionable but so great as to constitute robbery. The wrongs committed by this class can not be repeated. They will not be tolerated. The widow and the orphan can not be devoured; our economic system can not and shall not be a juggernaut, driving over prostrate forms.

Those whom we describe loosely as capitalists should receive a fair return upon their investment, and there should be due recognition of the factor of safety measured by the risks and hazards incident to the business.

As stated, the investor is entitled to be fairly treated. He is entitled to proper protection for his property, and to be permitted to use the same in a fair and legitimate way. While he is claiming these benefits resulting from good government, he must also remember that those who are aiding him in his business, those who toil and labor that his enterprise may succeed, are entitled to consideration. They must be protected and their rights respected. They are entitled to not only a fair but to a generous wage. If the business is highly profitable, that fact should be taken into account in determining the compensation of those whose efforts contribute to the success of the enterprise. There should be a spirit of fellowship and cooperation and good will between the employer and the employee. Their interests are mutual. And a policy must be adopted which brings to the enterprise the good will and, indeed, the affection of the employee. He must not be regarded as an inanimate and lifeless factor in the enterprise. The employer must not be a slacker in dealing with the employee. The employee must not be a slacker in discharging the obligations resting upon him.

Every man of wealth, every employer of labor, should feel that he is a trustee, that his wealth must be devoted for the advancement of humanity, that in his position he must seek the welfare of the employee.

The spirit of cooperation and partnership, of mutual trust and fellowship, will solve many of the problems which we encounter in the industrial world and promote peace and prosperity among the people. Of course, in the final analysis wages must depend upon production, and there can not be a fixed and rigid standard of wages in any industry.

No one can defend the economic policy which developed in the United States following the Civil War. Many individuals had profited by the war. They invested in manufacturing plants and engaged in enterprises upon a colossal scale. The war laid an embargo upon importations, and they enjoyed a monopoly on many products during that period. They were quick to see the advantage to them of a protective tariff, and their selfishness prompted them to demand the imposition of such tariff rates as in many instances prevented importation and in many fields of production eliminated competition. Under the pretext of establishing "home industries" and developing a "home market" for American products protective bulwarks were erected and monopolies organized and protected.

Not satisfied with this indefensible policy, which produced enormous profits, a plan was devised to still further increase profits by the employment of what has often been spoken of as "cheap labor." Accordingly immigration laws were fashioned to permit the importation of laborers from various parts of Europe, particularly from the south and southeastern sections. This accretion to our population reduced wages in many instances and prevented in substantially all industries proper advance in wages. Moreover, there were introduced into our political organism millions of persons whose ideals were different from our own, and who had no desire to be assimilated or amalgamated. Much could be said upon the evils that have resulted from this unwise, unpatriotic, and un-American course. Many of our industrial and social evils and political problems have followed in the wake of this policy.

Stupendous fortunes were made by the beneficiaries of a system which enabled a limited number of individuals to control the domestic markets and to secure cheap labor. Those who were the beneficiaries of legislation which enabled the continuation of this evil and this unwise economic policy sought to control one of the great political parties of the Nation and to make this new policy the paramount issue in political contests.

For years the American people were taught that protection and the policies of the Republican Party were essential to the prosperity of the Nation and that the maintenance of high tariffs and the importation of cheap labor were essential to the development of our resources and the progress of the Nation. Economic heresies were assiduously inculcated and many patriotic Americans constrained to follow false leaders and accept pernicious and destructive political policies. Much of the industrial unrest which has disturbed the country, and the social discontent which has manifested itself from time to time, are directly traceable to these erroneous and evil practices and policies which for so many years were victoriously championed by the Republican Party.

But, as I have stated, a new day has dawned. A fair wage must be paid to every man, and this Republic can not fully meet its high mission until a full measure of social justice shall be meted to all.

"The necessity for an efficiency standard of living," to use the language of Mr. Nearing, "must be recognized." This writer states in his little volume entitled "Financing the Wage Earner's Family" that—

> It is comparatively easy to determine the character of a standard of living. There is an irreducible minimum of food, clothing, housing, medical attention, and recreation necessary to the maintenance of life; there is a larger, but a no less determinable amount of economic goods included in a standard of living which will insure physical efficiency. These amounts of goods may vary with nationality and locality, but for any given family they are well-nigh absolute.
> Given a unit family of five, it is possible to determine the amount of food, clothing, housing, and the other necessaries which such a family requires. The list of goods, once secured, may be appraised at the market rates in any locality. Thus a basis is established on which the relative efficiency of standards may be determined.

He recognizes what is obvious to everyone, that what will constitute a standard of living cost will vary with respect to the section of the country and that other factors will enter into the determination of the question.

I think all can accept the following statement appearing in the work referred to:

> In every city, as well as in every town and hamlet, there is a minimum of economic goods necessary for subsistence and for efficiency, and hence there is a minimum cost for such items. Below the minimum of efficiency lies insufficient education, absence of decency and privacy, ill-ventilated rooms, unhandsome clothing, and food ill adapted for nutrition. Below the standard of subsistence lies family dissolution, misery, want, starvation, disease, and death. These inevitable things, following as night follows day, present themselves to the consciousness of the thinking wage-earner who looks toward the future.

What is a "fair wage" or a "living wage" or an "efficiency standard of living" depends upon so many conditions that no inflexible standard measured in dollars and cents can be established. Mr. Nearing gives a budget of a typical American family supplied by Mrs. Moore, which is found in her Wage Earner's Budget. The family consists of a husband and wife and two children, one 4 years and the other 1 year of age.

> This family was receiving an income of $800—sufficient to provide a fair standard of living.

Various other examples are found in this interesting work of Mr. Nearing's, showing varying figures. It should be said, however, that it was published in 1913 and that what would be a living wage at that time would be inadequate at the present time.

It is obvious that in fixing wages throughout the country the total income of all the people from all sources must be taken into account.

Prof. Wilford I. King, instructor in statistics in the University of Wisconsin, in his work called The Wealth and Income of the People of the United States, published in 1915, furnishes valuable information upon the question of wages and the income from all sources in the United States.

On page 158 of his work is a table which contains some interesting figures. He shows the estimated total national income for continental United States for the census years beginning 1850 and ending 1910. In 1850 the entire national income was $2,213,800,000; that is to say, the value of the total national product amounted to the sum just stated. There were paid in wages and salaries out of this sum $792,800,000. Interest, rents, and profits constituted the residue. In 1910 the national income—that is to say, the value of everything produced in the United States, including the amount received as the products of labor and rents and profits—amounted to $30,529,500,000.

The various items which make up this total are as follows:

Government (including Federal, State, and local)	$2,591,800,000
Commercial and professional services	8,977,200,000
Manufacturers, light and power	8,437,600,000
Transportation	2,656,000,000
Fishing	48,900,000
Mining	976,000,000
Agriculture	6,842,000,000
Total	30,529,500,000

There were paid in salaries and wages $14,303,600,000. The various items which make up this total are as follows:

Government	$1,306,200,000
Light and power (private)	55,000,000
Fisheries	15,100,000
Agriculture	1,424,300,000
Telegraphs and telephones	117,900,000
Water transportation	56,200,000
Street railways	233,000,000
Railroads	979,000,000
Mining	698,000,000
Manufacturing	4,366,000,000
Commercial, professional, etc	5,052,900,000
Total	14,303,600,000

Prof. King further states that the total number of wage earners was 28,200,000, and the total number of persons "gainfully employed" was 37,550,000. At this time the total population of the United States was 91,972,266. The census reports state that in 1910 there were 12,850,000 children in the United States under 6 years of age, and 18,800,000 between the ages of 6 and 14 years of age, inclusive, and 9,068,000 persons between 15 and 19 years of age, both inclusive. Prof. King states that the net value of goods consumed for the year referred to amounted to $28,529,000,000, and that the estimated capital savings was $2,000,000,000.

The tables of this author, if I understand them correctly, establish that the total value of the efforts and labor of all the people of the United States, together with all sums resulting from rent, interest, and otherwise, amounted to $30,529,500,000, and that out of this sum $28,529,000,000 were consumed by the people. Assuming these figures to be correct there would remain but $2,000,000,000 for division among all the people of the United States for the year, and but a fraction of this amount would consist of cash; it would be represented almost entirely by new buildings, equipment, machinery, savings, and so forth.

Prof. King states that the average size of family was 4.5. The same tables show that the average income was $507 for all persons classed as employees receiving wages or earning salaries, and that the average for all persons "gainfully employed" was $813 per annum. According to these figures, if the total income from all sources was distributed among those who were gainfully employed each would receive $813. If it be assumed that nothing is to be withheld as profits or savings, and that the entire product of labor and income from all sources is to be distributed, then it is clear that for the year an equitable distribution would be but $813 for those who were gainfully employed in the United States.

But there were more than $2,000,000,000 to be deducted from this income for National, State, and municipal taxes. Hundreds of millions of dollars were required for interest, so that assuming an equal division of the residue it is quite likely there would have been for distribution approximately $650 for each person gainfully employed. If there were applied, as there was, an unequal system of distribution, it is manifest that some gainfully employed would receive less than others. If the doctor, lawyer, banker, skilled business man, merchant, engineer, expert, skilled mechanic, and technical man were paid for their services at a ratio which their salaries for that year bore to the compensation paid all other forms of labor, it is obvious that the overwhelming majority of those who were gainfully employed would receive considerably less than $500 per person.

These figures indicate some of the difficulties to be encountered in attempting to set a standard of wages or to fix a minimum wage. Unquestionably a minimum wage of $1,000 in 1910 paid to all persons gainfully employed would have consumed the entire income of the entire population of the United States and left a deficit of several billions of dollars. If all the products of labor and the entire income of all the people were paid in wages, industrial progress would be arrested and financial collapse would be imminent. If we would pay a large wage, there must be large production. The payment of high salaries and high wages will not solve our economic or industrial problems or ipso facto produce prosperity and contentment.

Of course the figures for 1910 are not entirely applicable to the present situation. I have no doubt that the total income of the people of the United States for the year 1919 exceeded that of 1910, and the population is greater by perhaps 20,000,000. However, there are evidences that the total production and total income for the year 1920 will be less than that of 1919, and doubtless that of 1921 will show a considerable decrease unless a radical change occurs among the people. This uncertain and unstable condition is to be reckoned with in all forms of legislation which has to do with investment or wages, and particularly if the legislation relates to the future and provides for fixed and rigid conditions. I repeat, however, that the welfare of the wage earner is a matter of supreme importance. Efficiency is desired, and efficiency will be obtained only where the wage earner has fair treatment and his rights are recognized and fully protected.

There must be greater production and larger savings in order that prosperity may continue. Thrift and industry must be encouraged and they must receive their due reward. The great problem to-day in our land, as well as in other countries, arises out of the fact that there is inadequate production. There are too many idlers and inefficient workers and prodigal sons. The kingdom of heaven, whether on this earth or in some other existence, is not for the idler and the spendthrift.

During the war there was a suspension of building operations. This has resulted in inadequate housing for many of our population. The recent census indicates further congestion in the cities and in manufacturing centers. This shifting of population produces hardships and adds to the problems and sufferings of the people. This situation calls for mutual cooperation upon the part of all the people. Those with capital must employ it for the comfort and welfare of the people. The tradesmen, the builders, the laborers, all who come within the designation of "workingmen," with hearty good will must seek to relieve the situation and by increased production add to the happiness and peace of the people. Of course there must be a proper wage paid. That may be done by lowering the price of commodities or increasing the demand for labor. What is needed particularly is a reduction in the price of commodities. Mr. Gompers and other labor leaders have appreciated the fact that no relief will come to the workingman though wages were increased only to be followed by advances in commodity prices.

Mr. Herbert Croly, in his Progressive Democracy, page 396, states:

> The opportunity for the enjoyment of a more liberal life by the great majority of the wage earners depends ultimately in the increased productivity of human labor.

He also points out the fact that increase in efficiency will ultimately be derived from a more—> comprehensive and more successful application to industry of the scientific methods and the results of scientific research.

This is an age of specialization and of experts and of the application of scientific principles to industrial activities. The business man who fails to employ the results of scientific research will be overwhelmed, and the procession of successful enterprisers will pass over his prostrate form.

The safety of this Nation will be found in the development of the democratic spirit, not a class spirit.

This is not a class Government, and as Lord Acton says:

> No class is fit to govern another class.

Mr. Weyl, in his work entitled "The End of the War," insists that—

> The final war for democracy will begin after the war. It will be a wider conflict than that which rages now and the alignment will be by classes and interests, rather than by nations.

There is no place for class struggle in this Republic, and any alignment of the character referred to by Mr. Weyl would overwhelm our economic and political system. If there are injustices, they can be corrected not by class struggles but by the application of the principles of justice. A truer statement of the policy to be pursued to secure economic freedom is found in the statement contained in the reconstruction program of the American Federation of Labor, promulgated in March of last year. It is there stated:

> The principles of democracy should regulate the relationships of men in all their activities.

That does not mean social or industrial revolution, but it does mean that the rights of labor shall be recognized and that the spirit of cooperation and fellowship shall control the relationship between employer and employee. It means that labor shall not be exploited nor that capital shall be oppressed.

I believe that a better period awaits us. In that day the paramount desire will be the welfare and progress of all the units constituting the social organism. The spirit of unity, of oneness, of solidarity more and more will take possession of the hearts and minds of the people. Poverty and sorrow and all of the evils that flow from the unjust and improper distribution of wealth and the products of labor will be regarded as a reproach to a State or Nation. Life will be more important and sacred and there will be greater joy and pleasure in its development and unfoldment than in the mere acquisition of material wealth. The moral and spiritual forces will become stronger and as they move forward the sterile soil of life will be fructified and the deserts in which we live will be made to blossom and to bloom. Man will stand erect in the likeness of his Creator and it will be said by all, as it was by the devout Novalis in olden times, that "He who places his hand upon man touches God." The future is radiant with hope and promise. There will not only be a reign of law but a reign of truth and justice, and we can look forward with steadfast faith to the dawn of that brighter day, perchance the millennial one, which will come "full of fresh hope with the light of morning in its eyes."

Man is more than the son of Saturn and will escape the general doom. The crown of immortality is upon his brow and he will live that he may have joy, and all the forces of the future will contribute to his deification. We remember the words of Cleanthes in his immortal hymn, and with uplifted hearts we do declare that there shall come—

> A world which thine own law shall right, and flow
> Through all existent things, and these combine;
> And, blending with the least and greatest, show
> How great the God of all; supreme, divine.

Mr. President, I am prompted to inquire the reason for considering separate branches of the Government service when the entire subject of reclassification of salaries of Government employees will be the subject of attention, if not at this session of Congress, then at the next. As I am advised, for many years there has been a feeling upon the part of those familiar with the public service that injustices were being done to many of the employees of the Government; that there were inequalities in compensation; that there was no coordination or proper system of classification, either of employees or of salaries. My own observations have led me to the conclusion that there are discriminations which can not be justified; that there are persons doing work of a character so valuable as to warrant reclassification and require increased compensation. There are others whose services are both indifferent and unimportant, and therefore call for changes in respect of their assignments in the present or any future service.

This situation has been so unsatisfactory, I am advised, that it culminated in action by Congress. Accordingly on the 1st day of March, 1919, a congressional Joint Commission on the Reclassification of Salaries was appointed. The Senator from New Mexico, Mr. JONES, was named as chairman of the committee, and the other members of the committee were CHARLES B. HENDERSON, Senator from Nevada; SELDEN P. SPENCER, Senator from Missouri; and former Representatives Courtney W. Hamlin, of Missouri, Henry A. Cooper, of Wisconsin, and Edward Keating, of Colorado. The commission, under the authority granted, secured the services of a staff of experts and clerks and entered upon the work, which was of greater magnitude than was anticipated, with earnestness and with a desire, I believe, to render a needed public service. Hearings were had, and after months of investigation the commission submitted a report consisting of a printed volume of 884 pages. The act of March 1, 1919, authorized the joint commission—

> To investigate the rates of compensation paid to civilian employees by the municipal government and the various executive departments and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia, except the navy yard and the Postal Service, and report by bill or otherwise, as soon as practicable, what reclassification and readjustment of compensation should be made so as to provide uniform and equitable pay for the same character of employment throughout the District of Columbia in the services enumerated.

As stated, I am advised that the contention has been made for many years that the reclassification of salaries was required in the interest of justice; that there were many employees in the service of the Government filling unimportant positions and receiving larger salaries than others whose duties were far more exacting and upon whom were devolved responsibilities of a higher character. The thought in the minds of Congress in the appointment of this commission was to reclassify the positions or to group the numerous positions in the Government service, so that there would be fewer groups, and to suggest salaries for the various positions within each group which would be fair and right and which would have in view the nature of the services and the responsibilities involved.

It is obvious the plan that would bring into proper relation all employees of the Government was one to be desired. The present grouping of employees is illogical, and the salaries paid in many instances have no relation to the responsibility or service. These inequalities necessarily result in friction and discontent upon the part of employees and between various branches of the Government. The situation which we find could not be otherwise when we remember that the departments of the Government and the various executive agencies and instrumentalities were not contemporaneous in their origin. I have no doubt when some bureaus or executive agencies were created influences prevailed which gave a higher rating to positions created, and increased compensation measured by positions and compensation paid in various other departments of the Government service. Congress has proceeded in a sort of stepladder way to fix salaries in the past. There has not been a rational, consistent, and orderly arrangement and classification either of the service or the compensation.

The report submitted by the joint commission has not, I believe, been examined by Senators because of the press of legislative work. It is only within the past few minutes that a copy of this report has been placed in my hands. I have hastily examined the recommendations made and the number of matters treated in the report. The thought occurred to me while the measure before us has been under discussion that its consideration at the present time is perhaps premature and anticipates the work of the commission, or at least would result in the consideration in a piecemeal way of matters treated by the commission. The commission was appointed to consider the entire subject of Government employees within the District—their classification and their compensation. It occurs to me that the commission having considered this subject and treated it as one entire harmonious whole, that if Congress shall now take any particular branch of the question and deal with it separately and isolate it from the rest of the subject it will tend to nullify the work of the commission and lead to further inequalities and compel, when the report of the commission is considered by Congress, a reclassification or rearrangement or readjustment of groups and of salaries. If the reasons justifying the appointment of this commission to perform the work assigned were sufficient, then it would seem unwise to ignore their recommendations and in a fragmentary way attack the various groupings and reclassification system. I ask the Senator from Iowa in all sincerity whether the reasons are sufficient to warrant Congress in passing the bill now before us instead of considering the report of the joint commission and the recommendations submitted by them?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have heretofore said, I will inform the Senator, in answer to questions asked me, that I am not familiar with the report of the joint commission or with the bill recommended by them. Of course, that bill will not be acted on at this session. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who is a member of that commission, stated to me and authorized me to so say on the floor that the pending bill fits in with the plan and report of the joint commission and that there was nothing antagonistic, as he viewed the matter, between them. That is all I can say. I have not gone over that report; I am not familiar with it; but it is not going to be acted on for a long time; and when it is acted upon, if it covers the same situation, it will be taken care of in that bill.

I reported the pending bill, I will say to the Senator, because the Committee on Education and Labor instructed me to do so, the bill having passed the House with only 40 votes against it, all of which I may say were Democratic, although that is hard for me to understand, and because I thoroughly believe in a living wage for the men and women who are working for the Government, regardless of whether they are black or white.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in accord with the views of the Senator that a living wage should be paid to employees. I am opposed to any discrimination in compensation because of race or sex. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and sex or color should not be determining factors in fixing the compensation for labor performed. If a woman performs the same work as a man she should be paid the same salary. The colored man should receive the same compensation as the white man if he performs the same kind of work in the same efficient manner.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is the Senator sufficiently familiar with the report of the Reclassification Commission to advise us what class of employees it has recommended for salaries less than $3 a day?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in reply I will say that I am not sufficiently advised to answer categorically the question of my friend; but——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator from Utah tell us, or can the Senator from Iowa tell us, what class of employees in the Government service now get less than $3 a day, and what class would be the beneficiaries of this measure?

Mr. KING. I can not advise the Senator upon that matter. My information is, and it has been obtained, in part, from the statements made by Senators during the debate, that there are several thousand employees of the Government, principally in Washington, receiving less than $3 per day. My information is that a majority of them are young men or old men who sit in the corridors in the various Government buildings, or act as messengers therein, to carry papers and letters from one room to another. Many of them are engaged in operating elevators in the Government buildings. A large number are engaged in sweeping or cleaning the Government buildings either during office hours or immediately upon the close of the offices in the afternoon. The Senator will recall hearing many criticisms by Senators of the army of messengers and attendants in the departments who seem to have little or nothing to do. It has been repeatedly said during debates upon appropriation bills that one could scarcely go through the corridors and the halls of the buildings occupied by the Government without stumbling over messengers, attendants, keepers of the doors, and other employees, some of whom appeared to be supernumeraries. There is no question but what thousands of unnecessary employees have been and still are in the departments. There were less than 35,000 employees in the departments prior to the war; there are now more than 100,000. It seems impossible to separate from the service the thousands who should go, now the war is ended. It seems as if many persons holding any sort of a position of responsibility have required a number of stenographers and typists and numerous messengers. There has been an indisposition on the part of many of the departments to dispense with unnecessary employees, and notwithstanding the work of the departments has greatly decreased since the war, it has been impossible to get executive officials in charge of the departments and bureaus and executive agencies to make proper and necessary reductions in the personnel under their direction.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the Senator give us a general idea concerning the salary recommendations by the commission for employees of the classes referred to?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President, I can not; but an examination of the report to which I just referred shows that the commission have placed employees of the Government in 1,700 classes, and this grouping, I understand, covers all grades of employment in the service of the Government. Let me read a sentence or two from the report which my eyes just rest upon:

> Your commission has devoted a year to the work and as a result of the time and the money and the efforts expended submits the following for the consideration of the Congress * * * There are about 100,000 civilian employees in these departments and governmental establishments in the District of Columbia which your commission has undertaken to classify. We have divided the positions held by these employees into something more than 1,700 classes, and employees of those doing substantially the same kind of work, needing the same general qualifications, and assuming about the same degree of responsibility. The number of classes may seem unnecessarily large, but the fact is that in the books of estimates submitted to the Congress the heads of the various departments use more than 2,000 pay-roll titles. So your commission has substantially decreased the number of titles. But we have done more than that. Our titles mean something, and that something is very clearly set forth in the specifications included in this report.

Then omitting some matter which is not relevant to the point to which I am now directing attention—

> The citizen who wants to get a job with the Government will know the minimum requirements for the position he seeks and exactly the salary he will receive if he succeeds in passing the examination.
>
> When the head of a bureau or department comes before an appropriating committee and asks for a hundred "junior file and record clerks," the committee will know precisely the kind of position and the character of service he is talking about.
>
> Your commission regrets that it was necessary to create so many classes, but it could not have created a lesser number without having departed from the underlying principle of classification as set forth above. Many of the positions in these classes should be abolished or consolidated, but your commission was not authorized to reorganize the Government service. We had to take it as we found it. We classified the positions that are now existing in the various departments and which have been appropriated for by Congress.
> There is not a class in our classification which does not describe a position now existing in the Government service, and we do not think there is a position in the Government service in the District of Columbia which is not described in some one of our sets of specifications.

Then the report proceeds further to a discussion respecting salary recommendations.

The commission say:

> The schedule of salaries submitted herewith represents the best judgment of the members of your commission, aided by a hard-working, intelligent, conscientious staff.
> The members of your commission never fully appreciated the limitations of the human intellect until they undertook to agree on "uniform and equitable pay" for more than 1,700 different kinds of jobs. Differences of opinion developed. The amazing thing is that we were able finally to work out a schedule to which we were willing to affix our signatures. In the fullness of time such a schedule was agreed to, however, and the more we have tested it the more we have been made to feel that it is "uniform" and that it is "equitable"—alike to the Government and to the employees. We earnestly recommend its adoption.

Mr. President, as I understand, the report contains recommendations as to the manner of promotion, the retirement bill, assistance from experienced experts, cooperation from departments and employees, and so forth.

These are the final recommendations of the commission:

(1) A bill embodying the legislation we deem necessary.

I am advised—and I hope the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] will correct me if I am in error—that a bill was submitted accompanying this report. Am I right?

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Utah is correct in that. The bill is now, I think, before the Committee on Appropriations. It was introduced in March of this year by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

Mr. KING. So, Mr. President, this commission, after more than one year of investigation and after taking testimony and receiving the aid of experts, have submitted a report of 866 pages for our guidance, and this report is accompanied by a bill which is now before us for consideration. The bill makes provision for the salaries and compensation of all employees of the Government in the District of Columbia except those in the navy yard and Postal Service.

Let me read just a few lines further from the report:

(2) A classification embracing a statement of duties, of qualifications, and of suggested lines of promotion for each class, together with salary recommendations.
(3) A report setting forth in some detail our findings, recommendations, and a historical review of the work.

The report proceeds:

In addition, our statistical division has prepared a series of tables showing the number of employees in the Washington service, the number in the various classes created by our specifications, the salaries now received, with and without the bonus, and many other facts of the utmost importance.
All this material is available for the use of the committees of Congress.

The report proceeds:

We are confident, however, that if our recommendations are adopted the Congress will not only have laid the foundations for a thoroughgoing reformation of the civil-service system in the great central departments at Washington, but will also have given the Government of the United States a modern employment policy comparable to the best to be found in the industrial world, and not in any sense inferior to the systems maintained by other enlightened governments.

Mr. President, a hasty examination of this elaborate report reveals the various classifications of the employees of the Government, and one would think that nearly every grade of employment in the world had been provided for and was embraced within the 1,700 standard classifications submitted by the committee. I inquired yesterday of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] whether, in view of this report which is before us for consideration, it was proper or wise to consider the present bill at this time. If the report submitted by the Reclassification Commission is of the character indicated by the few words which I have read, then it would seem that the consideration of the compensation of any of the employees of the Government embraced within the report ought not to be taken up until action has been taken upon the report.

It will be observed that this report covers all employees of the Government within the District (with the exceptions noted), messengers and watchmen and all grades from the least important to the highest. Doubtless the commission have made their classification of the positions and salaries taking into account all elements that must be considered in dealing with the question of labor and wage. Undoubtedly there is a fixed relation between the various grades and the compensation allowed the employees therein. The report no doubt presents an orderly and systematic classification and arrangement. If we now take out of this submitted report any class or group and deal with it separately, the result may cause a disarrangement of the plan and scheme submitted, which would call for readjustment and rearrangement and reclassification in some, if not all, branches. I merely suggest this matter for the consideration of the Senate so that we may be advised as to the exact situation. It would seem to be the wise and proper thing to consider the report of the commission. If there are injustices and inequalities and improper classifications in the Government service, then the wise and proper thing to do is to take the subject and treat it as an entirety and consider it at the same time and deal with it in one bill.

My own investigation of the departments has led me to the conclusion that there was need of a readjustment and regrouping of the various positions, and a change in the compensation paid to many employees of the Government. In my contact with the departments of the Government I have found men and women of the highest ability and integrity. They have done and are doing excellent work, and their services are invaluable to the Government. Many of them are not adequately paid. There are others in the service who are receiving more than they earn. There are some who have failed in private life and who could not retain positions in private employment because of lack of ability, and they have drifted into the service of the Government. And yet under the system which prevails, persons in this category are receiving in many instances the same compensation as that paid to men and women whose qualifications are of the highest order and whose work is of the greatest value to the country.

I have found that promotions too often result from longevity rather than from ability and efficiency. Too many of the bureau heads and those in authority over groups and classes have been indifferent to the welfare of the public and have been more interested in maintaining a large personnel than in securing efficiency. Many complaints have been made to me by employees that they have been discriminated against in the matter of promotion, and that inefficient ones have been promoted, the promotion in some instances resulting solely from longevity in service. There would be improvement in the Government service if some of the bureau chiefs and executive heads were separated from the service. Hundreds of efficient and faithful employees of the Government have complained to me because of the inefficiency of employees. They have been ambitious to make good records and to have the branches of the Government with which they are identified brought to a high standard of perfection. The slackers, the laggards, the "ne'er-do-wells" in the public service not only hurt the Government but they are enemies to the efficient, faithful, and patriotic public officials who are doing such excellent work. There are employees in the Government service who could receive larger salaries in private employment, but they have a pride in their work and feel that they can be of benefit to their country. Persons of this class should not be held back or penalized because of inefficient and unworthy associates. They should not be brought down to a lower standard, to a monotonous and unprogressive level, to meet the inefficient and incompetent who find their way into branches of the Government.

I have made inquiry to ascertain whether there have been dismissals because of incompetency and inefficiency. Senators would be surprised to learn that seldom it is that action is taken by officials in charge of Government agencies to separate from the service those who are incompetent and inefficient. Indeed it is a very rare circumstance.

There can not be efficiency and proper work in the Government service unless heads of departments and bureaus and those in charge of employees are efficient and zealous and carefully supervise the work and reward the faithful and energetic and competent, and dismiss from the public service those who fail in the performance of their duties.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to longer occupy the floor. There may be many reasons justifying the passage of the bill before us. I can see some grounds which might warrant opposition to it, but I do not wish to further consider the economic questions involved in legislation of this character.

I suggest in conclusion that, having spent, as I recall, more than $200,000 to obtain a report with respect to the reclassification of salaries, and the report having been submitted and recommendations having been presented and a broad and comprehensive bill also having been prepared by the commission and offered for the guidance of Congress, it would seem that the proper course would require a consideration of the report and a postponement of the pending bill until action is taken upon that report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, Mr. CRAMTON, and Mr. BUCHANAN managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. EDMONDS, Mr. ROWE, Mr. HARDY of Texas, and Mr. BANKHEAD managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 406. An act amending an act entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Calif., certain public lands in California; and granting rights in, over, and through the Sierra Forest Reserve, the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, and the San Gabriel Timberland Reserve, Calif., to the city of Los Angeles, Calif.," approved June 30, 1906; and

H. R. 13870. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

MERCHANT MARINE CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. CALDER, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. RANSDELL managers at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back, with sundry amendments, the bill (H. R. 14335) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior years, and for other purposes.

I shall probably call up the bill at the evening session, if we have one, as I hope we may.

AMENDMENT OF PENAL LAWS.

The bill (H. R. 14384) to amend the penal laws of the United States was read twice by its title.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire whether that is the bill which heretofore passed the Senate, was sent to the President, and was returned vetoed because of an error of the enrolling clerk?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is so informed, but not officially.

Mr. KING. I hope the Sentor from Minnesota will ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered now.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Iowa consent to lay aside temporarily the bill under consideration?

Mr. KENYON. I am not yet giving consent, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. A bill was passed, after being reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, to amend the law in reference to lascivious pictures, and so forth, so as to include theaters and moving-picture shows. The bill passed both Houses, but on account of a mistake of the enrolling clerk of the Senate the President vetoed it, because there was a certain phrase in the bill which made it meaningless. The bill has been passed again by the House, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be put on its passage.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that if it can be passed without debate I will consent.

Mr. NELSON. It will not require any debate. It comes back only to correct an error of the enrolling clerk of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I do not like to consent to anything that will lead to any debate and delay the bill now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER FOR EVENING SESSION.

Mr. WARREN. I ask at this time unanimous consent that at half-past 5 we will take a recess until 9 o'clock to-night so that we may get along with some of the appropriation bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Until 9 o'clock to-night?

Mr. WARREN. I say 9 o'clock, because in one case a bill is being printed, and in another a conference report. We might make it 8.30.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does not the Senator make it 8 o'clock, and we could then take up other business?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to join with the Senator from Wyoming in his request. The situation is this: The deficiency appropriation bill has just been reported and it has been sent to the printer. There are a good many amendments to it, and the Senate will probably want to give it some consideration. It will not be possible to get it back here before about half-past 8, and to make sure of it we had better say 9.

If we are going into a night session, it may be a long one, and Senators should be given an opportunity to get their dinners and get back comfortably without being rushed. We are not likely to have the bill before that time, and that is the important measure for the night session. Meantime there are some conference reports that may be considered.

I think an evening session is very important, because if we pass the appropriation bill to-night it will go to conference to-morrow, and if we do not pass it to-night it can not reach the President until near the hour of final adjournment on Saturday, and he might not sign it. Of course we could get along without the deficiency appropriations. The Government would run without them, but there would be a great many people inconvenienced.

Mr. MCCUMBER. What objection has the Senator to the Senate taking up other bills from 8 o'clock until 9 o'clock? There are quite a number of them that ought to be considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection, except that there should be a reasonable time allowed in order that Senators may get their dinners, if we are going to stay very late to-night.

Mr. NORRIS. We can take a recess at 5 o'clock and meet again at 8.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we can have an agreement to recess at 5 o'clock and meet at 8, thus giving three hours for dinner, that suits me.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that that order may be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming that the Senate take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock this evening? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not understand that the request was simply to take up appropriation bills at the evening session.

Mr. WARREN. There was no request as to the work at the evening session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was no request, except that the Senate take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock.

FARM-LOAN BANKS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to inquire what disposition has been made of a joint resolution which I understood came over from the House, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, I believe, to allow the farm-loan banks to issue bonds or to take such steps as to see that there was a validation of the bonds that were outstanding for present applications in the farm-loan banks. As the matter now stands, there is a case pending before the Supreme Court and all applications have been suspended. The result is that there are many people who have taken this means of getting loans on their farms and they are now face to face with a condition that is jeopardizing their very homes. I wish to know if any Member now on the floor was a member of the committee which had charge of that matter?

Mr. WARREN. I know nothing of it. Naturally it would not come to the Committee on Appropriations. I assume it would go to the Committee on Banking and Currency or the Finance Committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is a matter of vital importance.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator if it was a joint resolution that passed the House?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was my impression.

Mr. NORRIS. It was a Senate joint resolution, was it not? I think we passed such a resolution. I believe it came from the Committee on Banking and Currency. I agree with the Senator that it ought to be attended to before Congress adjourns.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is a growing suspicion throughout the country that the action bringing this matter into court was at the instance of large private concerns who heretofore have had a monopoly of lending on farm property. Just to institute a system, to invite people to enter into it in order to help those who are struggling to pay for their homes, offering to give them long-time loans at a reasonable rate of interest, and when they have made their applications and gone through all the necessary forms and made no other effort to secure loans, with their mortgages coming due, then to leave them absolutely suspended in the air is an injustice to the people, and we should not sit idly by and allow such a thing to happen if Congress can apply a remedy.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with the Senator, but does he not think Congress ought to stay here and do something along this line for the farmers of the country? I think the Senator voted for the final adjournment resolution, did he not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did, and I think we should adjourn at 4 o'clock on Saturday, but I do not think we ought to take up the time between now and then in robbing the people of money rather than enabling them to make money. We had better address ourselves to helping the people to make a living rather than to take from them the living that they do make. I think the time could be better employed, and that is the reason why I have risen and said what I have. I think this is a matter to which we ought to address ourselves.

We passed a law and we invited the farmers of the country to come into the system. We established the banks and they came in. Then, when their applications were pending, they having made no other effort to get some relief when their mortgages were coming due, suddenly some one goes into court and suspends the action of Congress, and in the meantime some poor devil is likely to lose his home. We invited him to do this, and in good faith he did it, and now he may lose his home by virtue of that act on our part.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The only way I see to meet the question is to authorize the Government to make a temporary advance on these bonds from the farm-loan banking organizations until the Supreme Court decides the matter. Of course, they can not sell their bonds at present, with the issue raised as to the validity of their organization. I am not myself seriously troubled about the suit; I have been unable to find any real merit in it; but, of course, the purchasers of securties will not buy when there is pending before the Supreme Court an action attacking the validity of the organizations which issued the bonds.

We made a loan to the farm-loan bank when it started and it has been paid up. The way in which it seems to me we must meet this question is by authorizing the Government to take a portion of the bonds of the farm-loan banks and carry them until after the decision by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My understanding was that either in the House or the Senate a joint resolution to that effect had been passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We passed the joint resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have just been informed by a Member of the House that the joint resolution about which the Senator is speaking has passed both bodies. It was a Senate joint resolution, which went to the House and was passed there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was just about to say to the Senator that I knew we passed through the Senate a joint resolution authorizing the advance of $20,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If that be true, I hope that some member of the committee in the Senate which had the matter in charge will see that the joint resolution takes the proper course, and that the relief is granted. As I understand the terms of the joint resolution, it proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to take up these outstanding bonds to the extent of the applications already filed and duly accredited; and if that be true, of course, the relief is adequate until the court shall decide what is the status of the matter.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations, in the consideration of the general deficiency bill, H. R. 14335, have agreed to place two propositions in the bill touching a change in the school board. The amendments which I submitted, intended to be proposed by me to the bill, read as follows:

Insert the following new section:

"SEC. —. Section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. That the control of the public schools of the District of Columbia is hereby vested in a board of education to consist of six members, all of whom shall have been for seven years immediately preceding their appointment bona fide residents of the District of Columbia. The members of the board of education shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of three years each, except that the original appointments under this act shall be as follows: Two for one year, two for two years, and two for three years, the terms of each to be designated by the President, and members shall be eligible for reappointment. Vacancies for unexpired terms, caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The board shall meet for organization within 30 days after appointment. They shall appoint a secretary, who shall not be a member of the board, and they shall hold stated meetings at least once a month during the school year, and such additional meetings as they may from time to time provide for. The organization meeting, and all meetings whatsoever thereafter, shall be open to the public, except committee meetings dealing with the appointment of teachers.

"'No appointment, promotion, transfer, or dismissal of any director, supervising principal, principal, head of department, teachers, or any other subordinate to the superintendent of schools shall be made by the board of education, except upon the written recommendation of the superintendent of schools.

"'The board shall determine all questions of general policy relating to the schools, shall appoint the executive officers hereinafter provided for, define their duties, and direct expenditures. All expenditures of public funds for such school purposes shall be made and accounted for as now provided by law under the direction and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The board shall appoint all teachers in the manner hereinafter prescribed and all other employees provided for in this act.

"'The board of education shall annually on the 1st day of October transmit to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia an estimate in detail of the amount of money required for the public schools for the ensuing year, and said commissioners shall transmit the same in their annual estimate of appropriations for the District of Columbia, with such recommendations as they may deem proper.'

"The board of education, appointed in accordance with the provisions of such act of June 20, 1906, is hereby abolished as of the date of the enactment of this amendatory act.

"The chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on the District of Columbia under the provisions of this amendatory act are authorized and directed to cause a complete survey to be made of the public schools of the District of Columbia in order to determine and to recommend, by report to Congress, the new buildings, grounds, including playgrounds and equipment, deemed necessary, and such changes in educational methods, administrative affairs, and other essential details as are deemed advisable and appropriate; and for this purpose there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under the supervision of said chairmen, and one-half of which to be disbursed on vouchers by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House."

Of course that proposes a change in existing law, and it is legislation on an appropriation bill and will be subject perhaps to a point of order. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the rule of the Senate—clause 3 of Rule XVI—be suspended, so that these amendments to that appropriation bill may be in order. Under the Senate rule I must obtain unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi had better make that request when the bill is up for consideration and when we will know what the amendments are.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is familiar with the proposed amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I am familiar with the amendments, and I have no objection to the consideration of the amendments; but I hardly think it proper now to ask unanimous consent that the rule be suspended for the purpose of voting upon the amendments when they come up in the Senate at some future time.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course under the rule I would have to give a day's notice.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator from Wyoming desires to bring up the appropriation bill and consider it to-night. I am merely trying to expedite matters, if I can get unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator could get unanimous consent this evening as well as he can now.

Mr. HARRISON. I may not be able to do that.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator from Mississippi is not asking for a suspension of the rule except as to this one matter?

Mr. HARRISON. That is all.

Mr. WARREN. That does not expose the bill to an exemption from the rule as to other items?

Mr. HARRISON. No; just the one proposition about changing the school board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that when the general deficiency appropriation bill comes before the Senate clause 3 of Rule XVI may be suspended for the purpose of considering amendments touching the school system of the city of Washington. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not as familiar with the facts which underlie the so-called minimum wage bill as are the members of the committee which has given it more serious consideration. I am constrained to believe, however, that some features of the general subject did not receive that investigation which its importance requires.

If I understand the bill—and if I misstate it I hope I may be corrected—it is designed to fix a universal minimum rate of compensation for all civil employees of the Government. That compensation is a hard and fast standard of $3 per day except where the employment is by the hour, in which event the minimum standard is 37½ cents per hour, the former being designed for permanent or monthly employment and the latter for transient employment.

I can readily understand, Mr. President, how insistent the need for increased compensation is in these times of rising prices and stationary salaries, and the importance therefore of making some arrangement if possible to relieve this situation; I am also sensible of the strength of the contention that whatever is done should be done as speedily as possible; but, on the other hand, there are considerations of a very serious character—at least I so regard them—which should be thoroughly understood or at least partially appreciated before final action is taken.

This bill which increases the public expenditures by several million dollars, two weeks ago upon the call of the calendar was passed by the Senate, there then being less than a dozen Members of this body in their seats. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and I had been somewhat officiously objecting to a large number of measures. I do not think the Senator from Utah was present when this number was reached. I did not object to it because the amendment which defined compensation by the hour and which was designed to meet a class of employees whose work for the Government is less than eight hours per day seemed to cover the general objection which I had entertained to the bill. It was made manifest yesterday afternoon that our action was improvident; that, if permitted to stand, very serious injustice would be done the taxpayers; and that undue compensation would be paid to a class of men already provided for.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], with that faculty of justice and fairness which always distinguishes him, recognized the justice of that objection and made no further contention against the motion to reconsider, so the measure is again before us on its merits.

In the first place, Mr. President, our experience as to this bill should be an object lesson to Senators who are supposed to be attending to their duties, and particularly during the call of the calendar. A number of Senators interested in opposing the bill—some of them members of the committee reporting it and others familiar with its purposes—were absent from their seats. As a consequence, but for the motion to reconsider, the injury would have been accomplished.

I wish I could impress upon Senators the importance of attending the sessions of the body to which they belong. I have tried to so shape my committee engagements, my correspondence, and my other affairs as to enable me to be present between the convening of each session and its close. I have not been so successful in that practice as has the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who is virtually always in his seat; who is familiar to a greater or less degree with every measure which is brought to our attention; who is vigilant in the exercise of his legislative powers; and who has done more than any other one Member of this body since I have been here to clarify legislative conditions and to obstruct the enactment of measures which, directly or indirectly, might prove inimical to the public welfare. Indeed, the only criticism which I have to offer upon the record of the Senator is that his opposition always gives way when pension bills are the subject of consideration; but there are blemishes in all records, and, since it is not given to man—certainly not to Senators—to be perfect, we must overlook that one failure in the performance of his duties and be thankful for the services which he has rendered and will, I hope, continue to render in this body. Unless Senators attend to their duties here they ought to be held by their constituents to a strict responsibility for anything that goes wrong.

The cloakroom, Mr. President, is one of the most delightful places in the world. I do not know of any spot in Washington or elsewhere more prolific of good fellowship, of companionship, of social interchanges, and of good stories. If I gave way to my inclinations, I would be in the cloakroom 99 per cent of the time when the Senate is in session, provided always certain congenial spirits might be found there, as they generally are. But seriously, Mr. President, that is not what we were sent to Washington for. The position of a United States Senator is a very important one. It used to be an exalted and a dignified one. There was a time in the history of this country when to be a Member of this body was to occupy a position second to no position in the country save that of the Presidency itself. That was a time when Senators were in their seats; it was a time when legislation was seriously considered; it was a time when questions affecting the public were treated from the national standpoint; it was a time when Senators were indeed Senators of the United States and not delegates from their different localities, more interested in looking after the welfare of their constituents than of taking care of the interests of the entire Nation. I hope the time is not far distant when we will again have a National Senate in the sense that the Members of this body will regard the general welfare, will consider legislation from the standpoint of its effect on all the people of the United States, and advocate policies which have to do with us as a Nation and not as a collection of Commonwealths. Should that good time ever return it will be one of the strongest indications of the permanency of self-government, one of the surest indicia of the soundness of the contention that self-government is no longer an experiment but an accomplished fact, and one of the most gratifying evidences of the political development of the country that can well be imagined. When that time shall arrive bills like this will not enjoy the questionable distinction of having been enacted by the barest handful of Senators at a time when most of the Members of this body were either at lunch or in the cloakroom or attending to some other matter.

Coming back to the bill, Mr. President, for a moment, my objections to it as a scheme of legislation are several. In the first place, the attempt to measure compensation by a level standard applicable to all classes and conditions of men, whether it be minimum or maximum, is bound to work injustice in both ways. In the case of those who do not render a service to the Government equivalent to the compensation, it means overpayment; to those who render more than that equivalent, it means underpayment. It is as impossible for an aggregation of thousands of employees differently constituted, enjoying different degrees of health and having different standards of experience, to render the same character of service as it is for an army of 10,000 men to consist entirely of units completely efficient, inspired by the highest ideals, and capable of performing the most extreme service.

We may on the Fourth of July descant upon the equality of man, and quote to our heart's content Mr. Jefferson's celebrated apothegm that all men are created equal, but we know that such a thing as equality among the same species or even in nature itself is a patent impossibility. The mountains differ from the plains; the whites differ from the colored races; and the units composing the whites are in themselves unequal. One man may be superior in one particular and inferior in another; his neighbor may develop similar equalities in the opopsite direction, thus producing a balance between the two; but the inequalities are there; they always have been, they always will be, and can not, in my judgment, be removed even by a constitutional amendment, much less by a bill of this character.

Mr. President, if John Doe, with no family to support, working for the Government at $3 a day, employed by the month, yet works but five or six hours, and has abundant time for private employment, is it fair to limit to the same minimum Richard Roe, the head of a family of a wife and five children, all dependent upon his wage? Or, to suppose another case, if Robert Brown, husband of a loving wife and the father of five children, is so circumstanced that his wife is a wage earner, and some of his children who are minors are wage earners as well, all contributing to the family treasury, is he in a position to require the same minimum wage as that which the other family which I have supposed should receive; or does either of them occupy the position of the single man?

Mr. President, these are not imaginary conditions. They exist among those who labor for the Government just as they exist in private life. This measure, however, taking no note of these conditions, unmindful of the evident and palpable injustice consequent upon the application of the rule, goes blindly forward, fixes a minimum wage, and requires the Government to pay it, with the certainty that the inequalities will themselves develop the need for further legislation, and the additional legislation will be progressive. The minimum will remain for the single man; it will be increased for the man with family, and ought to be, if we are going into this business at all; and then that increase should be graduated so as to suit and apply itself to the size of the family of every man who is to be a beneficiary under this law, and also should take into consideration the existence, if the fact be, of other wage earners in the same group.

Mr. President, I question whether that is wise. I certainly doubt the propriety of rushing such legislation through in the expiring hours of a prolonged session. I do not believe it will prove practicable, but I think it will have other consequences to which I shall refer for a moment.

The Government can not fix a minimum standard of compensation for its employees in New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco, Washington, and New York without indirectly but necessarily affecting the standards of wages in private employment. If the Congress shall say legislatively that $3 shall be a minimum wage for everybody, without regard to the character or kind of employment, what will the private employer have to say when confronted with a similar demand? And if $3 a day, or $90 a month, is to be the minimum under all circumstances in private employment—although the amount does not sound very extravagant in these times—it is just as sure to interfere with and diminish production as that 2 and 2 make 4. Remember, now, that this is a minimum wage for all classes of labor, and it means necessarily, although perhaps not immediately, $90 a month for all classes of household workers, for all classes of hotel workers, for all those little occupations generally carrying with them food and sometimes lodging as part of the compensation. I can not imagine a following, whether it be permanent or temporary, and which, of course, confronts us at all times and in all stages of life, which will long be exempt from the operative influence of the standard that we propose to set here. Do we want to do that? Is it wise to run the risk of doing it? Is it needful that it should be done?

I know that the response will be that we should pay every man a living wage. That is true. We have had a Commission on Reclassification. That commission has gone into the subject, and has made a recommendation of legislation here that is designed to meet this evil. We might have taken it up and considered it heretofore. We might well have devoted to it some of the time that we have devoted to appropriations that never should have been made. We have a bill that has been prepared—I will not say hastily, because it has been prepared after a very considerable time spent in hearings—designed to relieve the necessities, or the assumed necessities, of the postal employees of the country. We are getting at these things, in my judgment, as best we can, and along a systematic method of procedure much more apt to be stable and satisfactory than legislation of this sort—legislation, too, which, in my judgment, will not have the same operative effect as a general law of this kind upon all lines and avenues of private industry.

At one time I was a strong believer in the doctrine of the minimum wage. It was a subject of theoretic consideration some years ago. The current magazines of the time gave a great deal of their space to arguments for and against it. It was my fortune, good or bad, to become so interested in it as to read everything that came under my observation relating to it; and I was struck with an argument finally appearing, as I remember, in McClure's Magazine some seven or eight years ago, contending that the application of a minimum wage for women, instead of improving their industrial condition, would result in their unemployment, and giving the reasons for it. They seemed to me more or less convincing—not entirely so, but much more than plausible. About a year or a year and a half ago, a commission employed for that purpose in the District under congressional action reported a minimum scheme, which was put into operation, for the women of this District, fixing that minimum at $16.50 a week. I do not mean to say that it has been in operation long enough to justify a conclusive opinion as to its merits or demerits. I would not contend, even, that this one experiment should itself be accepted as disposing of or settling the subject; but it is a significant fact to me that it has thus far operated almost identically as predicted in the magazine article of 1911 or 1912. I am told that women are being thrown out of employment throughout the District, not occasionally, not by this or that employer, but as a general policy. It does not result from a desire to get rid of women employees. In many respects and in many vocations they are superior to men for the particular work. The difficulty lies in the impossibility of the industry supporting the minimum wage imposed upon it; and the opportunity to employ men at a less wage, they being entirely free from the operation of this law, has such enormous economic advantages that employers very properly and very naturally resort to it; so that the woman whom we seek to protect by this legislation is thrown out of employment because of that legislation, and the man against whose competition this act was designed to protect the women of the District secures a wider extent of employment through the operation of the act designed for the purpose I have described.

Why, Mr. President, it is plain from this situation that while the establishment of a similar standard for all the employees of the Government would not have the same effect because the Government, as an employer, is not concerned with the question of profit and loss, but meets its obligations from the public revenues and obtains its revenues through taxation, yet the natural insistence, as I have said, upon the application of at least as high a standard to all lines of private employment will operate similarly, and produce consequences which none of the advocates of this bill desire to see in effect—inequalities which, if the advocates of the bill could be convinced would follow, would cause them at least to modify the proposition very seriously.

I am informed, although my information may not be authentic—I think it is—that another consequence of the minimum-wage rulings or requirements for women in the District is seriously to threaten the continuance of several hospitals in the District; not public hospitals, of course, but institutions doing a great deal of good and, I think, fully occupied by patients needing the assistance that these eleemosynary institutions extend them and without which there would be a very large increase of human suffering throughout the country.

The difficulty is that the endowments and the income upon which these institutions are operated are inadequate to meet the increased compensation imposed upon the heads thereof by the legal requirements. If that be so, then surely we should pause before rushing headlong with similar legislation, notwithstanding it is applied to the public service only.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I want to ask the Senator a question. I do not want to be disrespectful at all in asking; the Senator knows I would not be.

Mr. THOMAS. I know that. I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. KENYON. I know the Senator is so square and honest about everything that I would like to ask him this question: Is it the purpose to "talk out" this bill, as we call it, and not permit it to be passed?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I can answer that question to a certain extent. I do not think that is the case. I think it is not the case, because those who are opposed to the bill are not sufficient in number to do so. I will tell the Senator very frankly that I shall have nothing further to say upon the bill after I shall speak until 5 o'clock. That will end my opposition.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, the Senator knows how things are done here, and if there is a purpose of that kind, and if the Senator himself should say so, I would be satisfied to take his word.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I knew that to be the fact, I would say so. One or two Senators upon this side do not care to see the bill passed. As far as I know, they do not intend to utilize any further time than this afternoon, and yet I can not speak by authority. Speaking for myself, I beg to assure the Senator that after I take my seat I shall not take up any further time.

Mr. KENYON. I was not complaining. I recognize that as a legitimate method of defeating bills, but I think those things are always better out in the open.

Mr. THOMAS. I think so, too.

Mr. KENYON. And it is just as well to say so, if Senators on that side are disposed to defeat the measure.

Mr. THOMAS. If I knew such a situation existed, I would tell the Senator very frankly.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following report:

The board shall be composed of seven commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the President shall designate the member to act as chairman of the board, and the board may elect one of its members as vice chairman. Such commissioners shall be appointed as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act and shall continue in office two for a term of one year, and the remaining five for terms of two, three, four, five and six years, respectively, from the date of their appointment, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "not inconsistent with the provisions of section 5 (except that completion of the payment of the purchase price and interest shall not be deferred more than 10 years after the making of the contract of sale)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "; but no such sale shall be made unless the board, after diligent effort, has been unable to sell, in accordance with the terms and conditions of section 5, such vessels to persons citizens of the United States, and has, upon an affirmative vote of not less than five of its members, spread upon the minutes of the board, determined to make such sale; and it shall make as a part of its records a full statement of its reasons for making such sale. Deferred payments of purchase price of vessels under this section shall bear interest at the rate of not less than 5½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Such owner shall not be entitled to such deduction unless during such taxable year he invested, or set aside under rules and regulations to be made by such board in a fund (to be known as a "replacement fund") for investment, in the building in shipyards in the United States of new vessels of a type and kind approved by such board, an amount to be determined by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, and certified by him to such board, equivalent to the war-profits and excess-profits taxes that would have been payable by such owner on account of the net earnings of such vessels but for the deduction allowed under the provisions of this section; but at least two-thirds of the cost of any new vessel so constructed shall be paid for out of the ordinary funds or capital of the person having such vessel constructed.

"'The "invested capital" of the taxpayer attributable to any vessel, the net income from which is exempt from the taxes imposed by Title III shall be regarded as an "inadmissible asset" in computing the taxes due under such title upon the remainder of the taxpayer's net income for the taxable year.

"'(b) After January 1, 1920, upon the sale of a vessel registered, enrolled or licensed under the laws of the United States and built prior to January 1, 1914, the vendor may upon application, under oath made in such form as the commissioner shall by regulation prescribe, establish a fund to be known as a "replacement fund." The vendor shall cover into such fund the entire amount received from the sale of such vessel in excess of its value on March 1, 1913, or its cost if acquired on or after that date. Such fund shall be used exclusively for the building by the vendor in shipyards in the United States of a new vessel of a type approved by the United States Shipping Board.

"'Upon the completion of the new vessel it shall not be valued in the accounts of the taxpayer at an amount in excess of that at which the vessel sold was carried in such account at the time of the sale, except and to the extent that the productive capacity of such new vessel is greater than that of such old vessel.

"'(c) Accounting for gain or loss upon the entire amount placed in the fund under the provision of paragraphs (a) or (b) may be deferred for a reasonable period of time to be determined in each case by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. If the new vessel is built within the time so determined, the moneys in the fund provided for (1) under paragraph (a) shall not be subject to the taxes imposed by Title III, and (2) under paragraph (b) shall not be subject to the taxes imposed in Titles II and III.

"'(d) The taxpayer shall be required to furnish a bond with such security or surety as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall require for an amount not less than the estimated income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes not paid upon the income so covered into the replacement fund. In lieu of such bond the taxpayer may at his option deposit as security for such estimated amount of taxes, obligations of the United States to be held in trust as such security in a bank or trust company designated by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

"'(e) In case a new vessel is not built within the time determined under this section, the taxes imposed (1) by Title III for the taxable year upon the amount set aside in such year under the provisions of paragraph (a), and (2) by Titles II and III for the taxable year in which the vessel built prior to January 1, 1914, was sold, shall be immediately due and payable, but no penalty or interest shall be added with respect to the time which has elapsed between the time that such taxes would have been due, but for the provisions of this section and the due date.

"'(f) The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, or a majority thereof, are hereby authorized and directed to determine from time to time what shall be allowed for annual depreciation of vessels documented under the laws of the United States engaged in foreign trade and owned by persons citizens of the United States, in order that the owners of such vessels shall be put as nearly as may be on a parity for taxation purposes with the owners of vessels under the flag of our foreign competitors in the world's carrying trade, and such allowances shall be embraced in the deductions allowed by law in determining the net income subject to income taxes and war-profits and excess-profits taxes.'"

Each collector of customs shall permit records made under the provisions of this section to be inspected during office hours, under such reasonable regulations as the collector may establish. Upon the request of any person the collector of customs shall furnish him from the records of the collector's office (1) a certificate setting forth the names of the owners of any vessel, the interest held by each owner, and the material facts as to any bill of sale or conveyance of, any mortgage covering, or any lien or other incumbrance upon, a specified vessel, (2) a certified copy of any bill of sale, conveyance, mortgage, notice of claim of lien, or certificate of discharge in respect to such vessel, or (3) a certified copy as required by subdivision (c) of subsection H. The collector of customs shall collect a fee for any bill of sale, conveyance, or mortgage recorded, or any certificate or certified copy furnished, by him, in the amount of 20 cents a folio with a minimum charge of $1. All such fees shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"PENALTIES.

"SUBSEC. J. (a) If the master of the vessel willfully fails to exhibit the documents of the vessel or the copy of any preferred mortgage thereof, as required by subsection E, the board of local inspectors of vessels having jurisdiction of the license of the master, may suspend or cancel such license, subject to the provisions of 'An act to provide for appeals from decision of boards of local inspectors of vessels and for other purposes,' approved June 10, 1918.

"(b) A mortgagor who, with intent to defraud, violates any provision of subsection F, and if the mortgagor is a corporation or association, the president or other principal executive officer of the corporation or association, shall upon cnviction thereof be held guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than 1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both. The mortgaged indebtedness shall thereupon become immediately due and payable at the election of the mortgagee.

"(c) If any person enters into any contract secured by, or upon the credit of, a vessel of the United States covered by a preferred mortgage, and suffers pecuniary loss by reason of the failure of the collector of customs, or any officer, employee, or agent thereof, properly to perform any duty required of the collector under the provisions of this section, the collector of customs shall be liable to such person for damages in the amount of such loss. If any such person is caused any such loss by reason of the failure of the mortgagor, or master of the mortgaged vessel, or any officer, employee, or agent thereof, to comply with any provision of subsection E or F or to file an affidavit as required by subdivision (a) of subsection D, correct in each particular thereof, the mortgagor shall be liable to such person for damages in the amount of such loss. The district courts of the United States are given jurisdiction (but not to the exclusion of the courts of the several States, Territories, Districts, or possessions) of suits for the recovery of such damages, irrespective of the amount involved in the suit or the citizenship of the parties thereto. Such suit shall be begun by personal service upon the defendant within the limits of the district. Upon judgment for the plaintiff in any such suit, the court shall include in the judgment an additional amount for costs of the action and a reasonable counsel's fee, to be fixed by the court.

"FORECLOSURE OF PREFERRED MORTGAGES.

"SUBSEC. K. A preferred mortgage shall constitute a lien upon the mortgaged vessel in the amount of the outstanding mortgage indebtedness secured by such vessel. Upon the default of any term or condition of the mortgage, such lien may be enforced by the mortgagee by suit in rem in admiralty. Original jurisdiction of all such suits is granted to the district courts of the United States exclusively. In addition to any notice by publication, actual notice of the commencement of any such suit shall be given by the libellant, in such manner as the court shall direct, to (1) the master, other ranking officer, or caretaker of the vessel, and (2) any person who has recorded a notice of claim of an undischarged lien upon the vessel, as provided in subsection G, unless after search by the libellant satisfactory to the court, such mortgagor, master, other ranking officer, caretaker, or claimant is not found within the United States. Failure to give notice to any such person, as required by this subsection, shall not constitute a jurisdictional defect; but the libellant shall be liable to such person for damages in the amount of his interest in the vessel terminated by the suit. Suit in personam for the recovery of such damages may be brought in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (c) of subsection J.

"SUBSEC. L. In any suit in rem in admiralty for the enforcement of the preferred mortgage lien, the court may appoint a receiver and, in its discretion, authorize the receiver to operate the mortgaged vessel. The marshal may be authorized and directed by the court to take possession of the mortgaged vessel notwithstanding the fact that the vessel is in the possession or under the control of any person claiming a possessory common-law lien.

"SUBSEC. M. (a) When used hereinafter in this section, the term 'preferred maritime lien' means (1) a lien arising prior in time to the recording and indorsement of a preferred mortgage in accordance with the provisions of this section; or (2) a lien for damages arising out of tort, for wages of a stevedore when employed directly by the owner, operator, master, ship's husband, or agent of the vessel, for wages of the crew of the vessel, for general average, and for salvage, including contract salvage.

"(b) Upon the sale of any mortgaged vessel by order of a district court of the United States in any suit in rem in admiralty for the enforcement of a preferred mortgage lien thereon, all preexisting claims in the vessel, including any possessory common-law lien of which a lienor is deprived under the provisions of subsection L shall be held terminated and shall thereafter attach, in like amount and in accordance with their respective priorities, to the proceeds of the sale; except that the preferred mortgage lien shall have priority over all claims against the vessel, except (1) preferred maritime liens, and (2) expenses and fees allowed and costs taxed, by the court.

"SUBSEC. N. (a) Upon the default of any term or condition of a preferred mortgage upon a vessel, the mortgagee may, in addition to all other remedies granted by this section, bring suit in personam in admiralty in a district court of the United States, against the mortgagor for the amount of the outstanding mortgage indebtedness secured by such vessel or any deficiency in the full payment thereof.

"(b) This section shall not be construed, in the case of a mortgage covering, in addition to vessels, realty or personalty other than vessels, or both, to authorize the enforcement by suit in rem in admiralty of the rights of the mortgagee in respect to such realty or personalty other than vessels.

"TRANSFERS OF MORTGAGED VESSELS AND ASSIGNMENT OF VESSEL MORTGAGES.

"SUBSEC. O. (a) The documents of a vessel of the United States covered by a preferred mortgage may not be surrendered (except in the case of the forfeiture of the vessel or its sale by the order of any court of the United States or any foreign country) without the approval of the board. The board shall refuse such approval unless the mortgagee consents to such surrender.

"(b) The interest of the mortgagee in a vessel of the United States covered by a mortgage shall not be terminated by the forfeiture of the vessel for a violation of any law of the United States, unless the mortgagee authorized, consented, or conspired to effect the illegal act, failure, or omission which constituted such violation.

"(c) Upon the sale of any vessel of the United States covered by a preferred mortgage, by order of a district court of the United States in any suit in rem in admiralty for the enforcement of a maritime lien other than a preferred maritime lien, the vessel shall be sold free from all preexisting claims thereon; but the court shall, upon the request of the mortgagee, the libellant, or any intervenor, require the purchaser at such sale to give and the mortgagor to accept a new mortgage of the vessel for the balance of the term of the original mortgage. The conditions of such new mortgage shall be the same, so far as practicable, as those of the original mortgage and shall be subject to the approval of the court. If such new mortgage is given, the mortgagee shall not be paid from the proceeds of the sale and the amount payable as the purchase price shall be held diminished in the amount of the new mortgage indebtedness.

"(d) No rights under a mortgage of a vessel of the United States shall be assigned to any person not a citizen of the United States without the approval of the board. Any assignment in violation of any provision of this section shall be void.

"(e) No vessel of the United States shall be sold by order of a district court of the United States in any suit in rem in admiralty to any person not a citizen of the United States.

"MARITIME LIENS FOR NECESSARIES.

"SUBSEC. P. Any person furnishing repairs, supplies, towage, use of dry dock or marine railway, or other necessaries, to any vessel, whether foreign or domestic, upon the order of the owner of such vessel, or of a person authorized by the owner, shall have a maritime lien on the vessel, which may be enforced by suit in rem, and it shall not be necessary to allege or prove that credit was given to the vessel.

"SUBSEC. Q. The following persons shall be presumed to have authority from the owner to procure repairs, supplies, towage, use of dry dock or marine railway, and other necessaries for the vessel: The managing owner, ship's husband, master, or any person to whom the management of the vessel at the port of supply is intrusted. No person tortiously or unlawfully in possession or charge of a vessel shall have authority to bind the vessel.

"SUBSEC. R. The officers and agents of a vessel specified in subsection Q shall be taken to include such officers and agents when appointed by a charterer, by an owner pro hac vice, or by an agreed purchaser in possession of the vessel; but nothing in this section shall be construed to confer a lien when the furnisher knew, or by exercise of reasonable diligence could have ascertained, that because of the terms of a charter party, agreement for sale of the vessel, or for any other reason, the person ordering the repairs, supplies, or other necessaries was without authority to bind the vessel therefor.

"SUBSEC. S. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the furnisher of repairs, supplies, towage, use of dry dock or marine railway, or other necessaries, or the mortgagee, from waiving his right to a lien, or in the case of a preferred mortgage lien, to the preferred status of such lien, at any time, by agreement or otherwise; and this section shall not be construed to affect the rules of law now existing in regard to (1) the right to proceed against the vessel for advances, (2) laches in the enforcement of liens upon vessels, (3) the right to proceed in personam, (4) the rank of preferred maritime liens among themselves, or (5) priorities between maritime liens and mortgages, other than preferred mortgages, upon vessels of the United States.

"SUBSEC. T. This section shall supersede the provisions of all State statutes conferring liens on vessels, in so far as such statutes purport to create rights of action to be enforced by suits in rem in admiralty against vessels for repairs, supplies, towage, use of dry dock or marine railway, and other necessaries.

"MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

"SUBSEC. U. This section shall not apply (1) to any existing mortgage, or (2) to any mortgage hereafter placed on any vessel now under an existing mortgage, so long as such existing mortgage remains undischarged.

"SUBSEC. V. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to furnish collectors of customs with all necessary books and records, and with certificates of registry and of enrollment and license in such form as provides for the making of all indorsements thereon required by this section.

"SUBSEC. W. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to make such regulations, in respect to the recording and indorsing of mortgages covering vessels of the United States, as he deems necessary to the efficient execution of the provisions of this section.

"SUBSEC. X. Sections 4192 to 4196, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, and the act entitled 'An act relating to liens on vessels for repairs, supplies, or other necessaries,' approved June 23, 1910, are repealed. This section, however, so far as not inconsistent with any of the provisions of law so repealed, shall be held a reenactment of such repealed law, and any right or obligation based upon any provision of such law and accruing prior to such repeal, may be prosecuted in the same manner and to the same effect as if this act had not been passed."

WILLIAM M. CALDER,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
F. M. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM S. GREENE,
G. W. EDMONDS,
FREDERICK W. ROWE,
L. LAZARO,

I sign this report because as a whole I favor the bill, but there are parts of the bill to which I strongly object.

RUFUS HARDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask if the report can not be taken up for consideration. I do not know of any discussion that is to take place on the report.

Mr. NUGENT. I wish to discuss the conference report before it is acted upon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then probably it would be well not to take up the report at this time. I wish to call it up when the Senate convenes this evening after the recess.

ASSOCIATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize the association of producers of agricultural products, and I submit a report (No. 655) thereon. I wish to call up the bill at the first opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

CONFIRMATION OF ALVYN L. WOODS.

Mr. GAY. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as in open executive session, I report back favorably the nomination of Alvyn L. Woods to be postmaster at Lutcher, La., vice A. L. Woods, and I ask that the nomination be confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The nomination is confirmed, and the President of the United States will be notified.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to state that the conferees on Senate bill 1726, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, have been unable so far to agree, and the Senate conferees report it back with a recommendation that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator asking for consideration at this time?

Mr. McCUMBER. Just to agree, practically, to the House amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the Senate recede from its disagreement and agree to the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ESTATES.

Mr. SPENCER. From the Committee on Claims I submit a report (No. 656), accompanied by a bill for the relief of certain estates. The bill is in lieu of certain bills which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 4501) for the relief of certain estates was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LIABILITY OF HOTEL PROPRIETORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12887) establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent to have it considered at this time. If there is a particle of discussion upon it, I will not press it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. The bill should be read.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; let the bill be read, at least.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. KENYON. If consent has not been granted——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not.

Mr. KENYON. It is too important a bill to be passed without discussion.

Mr. THOMAS. I think it is. It is superfluous in the District, anyhow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. As it has been arranged that the Senate is to take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m., and there will be a session at 8 o'clock this evening, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled in executive session at 8 o'clock p. m., when the doors were reopened.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice President.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. PHIPPS, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5726) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator any idea how long it will take?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think it will take very long. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] desires to speak on the report. I do not think he will take very long. He generally does not talk very long and he talks to the point. I do not know of anyone else who desires to discuss the report.

Mr. KENYON. I think it would be better to go ahead and finsh this bill, and then take up the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that the bill can not be passed to-night, owing to the absence of Senators. I would be glad to see it passed.

Mr. KENYON. Why the absence of Senators? Are they at dinners or something of that kind?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know.

Mr. KENYON. I am not willing to lay the unfinished business aside in order that Senators may absent themselves when we are trying to get a living wage for Government employees.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not defending their absence.

Mr. KENYON. The Senators should be here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As the Senator knows, I am here.

Mr. KENYON. I know the Senator is here. He is always here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KENYON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I wish to trespass upon the time of the Senate for a few moments.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator from Delaware yield that I may present a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that on or before half past 10 o'clock the Senate shall take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WARREN. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not agree to that under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That request is soon disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We will stay here all night, if necessary, in order to get important measures through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware will proceed.

THE DYE INDUSTRY AND PATENTED INVENTIONS.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, on the 8th day of last month the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] called the attention of the Senate to a newspaper article which contained an account of a lawsuit instituted in Boston by Edgar Levinstein, of Nahant, against E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, Del.

The Senator supplemented the newspaper article with a few remarks of his own. In the course of what he had to say he made reference to a certain contract between E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, Del., and Levinstein (Ltd.), of Manchester, a company incorporated under the British companies act. This contract was not set out in full by the senior Senator from Colorado. I have secured a copy of the contract, and ask leave of the Senate to insert it at this point as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The contract referred to is as follows:

DU PONT–LEVINSTEIN AGREEMENT.

Agreement made the 30th day of November, 1916, between E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, U. S. A., a company incorporated in the State of Delaware, in the United States of America (hereinafter called the Du Pont Co.), of the one part, and Levinstein Limited, of Manchester, a company incorporated under the British companies acts (hereinafter called Levinsteins), of the other part: Whereas the Du Pont Co. and Levinsteins are respectively interested in the manufacture and sale of dyes and are desirous of cooperating for the purposes of such manufacture and sale, and with that object desire to obtain each from the other the right to use as hereinafter provided the patented inventions and secret processes owned or to be acquired by the other party for the manufacture and sale of finished dyes (including synthetic indigo), intermediates, and raw material necessary for and used in such manufacture:

Now, it is hereby agreed as follows:

1. The parties hereto will communicate to each other all such information as they now possess or control and are at liberty to furnish in connection with the manufacture of dyes, intermediates, and raw materials, including particulars of all patented or secret processes as aforesaid and particulars of all apparatus, machinery, and plant necessary for such manufacture, with liberty to each party to visit the works of the other party and to inspect all processes coming within the object of this agreement carried on by the parties, respectively; but neither party is to be required, except by his consent, to give to the other any rights or information concerning intermediates or raw materials used for military purposes or the manufacture of explosives.

2. The parties shall be entitled to the following rights in respect of all patented inventions and secret processes mentioned in clause 1 hereof, videlicet:

(a) Levinsteins shall have exclusive rights for the use, manufacture, and sale under its own and the Du Pont Co.'s patented inventions and secret processes throughout Great Britain, Ireland, India, and all British possessions, colonies, and dependencies (except Canada) France, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Holland, Portugal, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and nonexclusive rights throughout Canada and all other countries except those for which the Du Pont Co. is to have exclusive rights.

(b) The Du Pont Co. shall have exclusive rights for the use, manufacture, and sale under its own and Levinsteins patented inventions and secret processes throughout the United States of America and all its possessions, present and future, Mexico, and Central and South America, and nonexclusive rights throughout all other countries except those for which Levinsteins is to have exclusive rights.

3. If the information to be furnished under clause 1 by Levinsteins to the Du Pont Co. shall be capable of turning out finished products of the standard of the products from time to time sold by Levinsteins, and if the synthetic indigo produced by such processes shall be up to the commercial standard heretofore ruling in the United States, the Du Pont Co. shall pay to Levinsteins £25,000 in each of the 10 years from the 1st July, 1917, to the 1st July, 1927, the first payment to be made on the 1st of July, 1918. The conditions for such payment shall be deemed conclusively to be performed if Levinsteins shall at their works produce finished products and synthetic indigo of the before-mentioned standards and shall prove that they furnished the Du Pont Co. with the information and instructions necessary to produce the same, whether in fact the Du Pont Co. are or are not able to produce the same or do or do not produce the same.

4. Each party agrees that if hereafter during the continuance of this agreement it shall make or acquire any patented invention or secret process coming within the terms of this agreement it will disclose in writing to the other party immediately, or in any event within three months thereafter, full particulars in respect thereof, and thereafter furnish to the other party whenever and so often as the other party shall request copies of all claims, specifications, applications, and patents in respect of any such patented invention and copies of all writing setting forth any such secret process and such further information as the other party shall request in respect of the same or otherwise relating to the inventions and processes the subject of this agreement.

5. Whenever the Du Pont Co. shall have disclosed a patented or secret process to Levinsteins as aforesaid the Du Pont Co. shall thereupon give notice in writing to Levinsteins that they may obtain a license (exclusive or nonexclusive as the case may be) to use the same within the countries specified in clause 2 hereof whenever Levinsteins shall have disclosed a patented or secret process to the Du Pont Co. as aforesaid Levinsteins shall give notice in writing to the Du Pont Co. that they may obtain similar licenses to use the same within the said countries.

6. The royalties payable under any such license as is referred to in the preceding clause by the party accepting the license shall be five per cent on the selling value of the finished product delivered in the country of manufacture. In the case of a patented invention the royalty shall not be payable beyond the existence of the patent, and in the case of a secret process shall be payable only during the continuance of this agreement. The royalties payable to Levinsteins under this clause shall be additional to the twenty-five thousand pounds a year mentioned in clause 3 hereof.

7. In any notice given as aforesaid the party disclosing such patented invention or secret process shall request the other party to elect within a period expiring three months after service of such notice whether such other party accepts a license for the invention or process set forth in the notice and the other party shall elect within said period whether it accepts such license. In default thereof such license shall be deemed not to have been accepted.

8. Each of the parties to whom any such license as aforesaid shall have been granted may grant, within the limitations of such license, sublicenses in respect thereof to any or all of its respective subsidiary or allied companies (or to any other persons by mutual consent); but every such sublicense shall be subject to all the terms and conditions contained in the grant of the license so sublicensed and shall also contain terms, conditions, and obligations requiring such sublicenses to do such acts as may be necessary or proper to enable the party granting such sublicenses to observe all the terms and conditions and to perform all the obligations on its part contained in the grant of the license so sublicensed. No sublicense in respect of any such license shall be granted by any sublicensee, nor by any of the parties hereto, except as hereinbefore provided, without the consent in writing first obtained from the party that shall have granted the license so sublicensed.

9. Each of the parties hereto agrees that if, at any time during the continuance of this agreement, it shall obtain or acquire a right in or license under any patented invention or secret process coming within the terms of this agreement, which right or license is so limited that it can make no grant or license to the other party upon the terms and conditions herein set forth, it shall use its best endeavors to assist such other party to obtain or acquire a right in or under such invention or process upon the terms and conditions herein set forth, but neither party shall be under any obligation to purchase or pay for any right or license for the benefit of the other.

10. Each of the parties hereto agree not to make or consent to any disclosure of any of the secret processes of the other except to sublicenses or to do or consent to any other act that shall impair or depreciate the value of any exclusive license granted by it in pursuance of this agreement, or that shall impair or depreciate the value of the right, title, and interest in any patented invention or secret process not granted to it by the other party, and to take all reasonable care to prevent any such disclosure or act.

11. As the effect of this agreement is that each party will have nonexclusive rights to the patented inventions and secret processes of the other in Russia, it is agreed that before commencing to build any works in Russia the parties will endeavor to arrange for joint cooperations there should such prove feasible.

12. It is intended to hold in June, 1917, in America, a meeting by representatives of the parties hereto for the purpose of arranging selling facilities for nonexclusive Asiatic territory, particularly Japan and China, the intention being to arrange, if possible, a joint selling company, the capital of which is to be subscribed and its sales to be divided, as nearly as possible, in equal parts by the parties hereto.

13. Each of the parties hereto agrees, whenever and so often as requested by the other party, but at the expense of such other party, to assist in defending any letters patent under which any licenses shall have been granted as herein provided, and for that purpose to furnish to such other party all information and evidence in its power.

14. Each of the parties hereto agrees, whenever and so often as requested by the other party, to execute all such other instruments in writing as may be necessary or proper for the purpose of further assuring and confirming the grant of any license as herein provided, or for the purpose of enabling such grants to be filed or recorded in any public office.

15. If any difference or dispute shall arise between the parties hereto in respect of this agreement or any matter or thing relating thereto, the same shall be referred to the president for the time being of the Du Pont Co. or his nominee and the chairman for the time being of Levinstein or his nominee, who shall arbitrate the same, and whose award shall be final. If, however, the said arbitrators shall fail to agree, they shall appoint an umpire, whose award shall be final, which umpire, if the question or matter to be decided relates to a patented invention or secret process of Levinstein's, shall be an American, and if the question or matter to be decided relates to a patented invention or secret process of the Du Pont Co., shall be an European. If said president and chairman fail to agree as to the appointment of such umpire, then such umpire, if required as hereinbefore provided to be an European, shall be appointed by the president for the time being of the Law Society of England, or if required as hereinbefore provided to be an American, shall be appointed by the president for the time being of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York.

16. The benefits and obligations of this agreement shall inure to and be binding upon the parties hereto and their respective legal representatives and successors but shall not be assignable by either party without the consent in writing first obtained from the other party, but such consent shall not be requisite in the case of any assignment of the whole or greater part of the undertaking of either party.

17. This agreement shall terminate on July 1, 1927, but unless six months' written notice shall have been given by either party to the other prior to July 1, 1927, or prior to July 1 in any subsequent year, it shall continue in force from year to year thereafter.

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS & Co.
J. AMORY HASKELL, Vice President.

For and on behalf of Levinstein Limited:

JOHN B. ZORNSDALE, Chairman.
HERBERT LEVINSTEIN, Managing Director.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was not in the Senate at the time the Senator from Colorado discussed this contract. The fact is that in the last few weeks I have been compelled, by force of circumstances, to be absent from the Senate much more than I would personally prefer. Since my return to the Senate this week I have examined into the matter referred to by the Senator from Colorado on the 8th day of last month, and, with respect to the contract which was the occasion for the Senator's comments, I find myself in disagreement with him as to the essentials of its intention and the nature of its purpose.

I hesitate, Mr. President, to express a view that runs contrary to an opinion of the senior Senator from Colorado, because I know of no man in this Senate whose great ability as a lawyer and whose keen reasoning powers I more respect than I do those of that very able Senator from that distinguished State. In this matter, however, I find that I can not accept the view that this so-called Du Pont-Levinstein contract contains proof of an arrangement either improper in its character, reprehensible in its purpose or indefensible in its aims.

The senior Senator from Colorado used the following language in the course of his remarks with respect to paragraphs (a) and (b) of the contract:

Here is a partition of the world between two huge institutions which are engaged in the same business and which finds its analogy in that historical incident centuries ago when the Pope, by arbitrary decree, divided the world into two portions, assigning the eastern to Spain and the western to Portugal.

If, by this language, the Senator meant to charge that these two concerns had combined in an illegal way to control markets of the world, then I find myself in entire disagreement with him. Indeed, the language employed by the Senator has very much of a twang that is found in the language of those who denounce so-called trusts and combinations because of their unconscionable monopolistic practices. I do not read the contract in question in such a reprehensible light as that.

This contract upon its face clearly and distinctly states what its purpose is. As stated by the contract, the two parties "are respectively interested in the manufacture and sale of dyes and are desirous of cooperating for the purposes of such manufacture and sale, and with that object desire to obtain each from the other the right to use, as hereinafter provided, the patented inventions and secret processes owned or to be acquired by the other party for the manufacture and sale of finished dyes—including synthetic indigo—intermediates, and raw material necessary for and used in such manufacture."

It is to be noted that this contract deals entirely with patented inventions and secret processes. A patented invention by force of the laws authorizing the patent and a secret process by reason of the very fact of its secrecy necessarily confer upon the patentee in the one case and the possessor of the secret in the other something that is the equivalent, so far as manufacture, sale, and use are concerned, of a complete and perfect monopoly. Indeed, it is the purpose of the patent law to confer an exclusive right upon the inventor to the enjoyment of his invention without interference from anyone and without encroachment from any source.

For the time limited in the patent the inventor is constituted sole monarch over the entire field covered by his patent. No one can enter thereupon without his consent. No one can make his article, no one can use it, and no one can sell it without his consent. Hence it is said by a text writer that "Patent rights are property, and the very essence of the rights conferred by the patent is the exclusion of others from its use." Walker on Patents, paragraph 151.

Courts constantly refer to patent rights as constituting a monopoly. Between a monopoly in the ordinarily accepted and therefore invidious sense of the word, however, and a monopoly in the sense of an exclusive right conferred by patent statutes there is a wide diversity. A distinction between the two is well stated by Curtis in his work on patents, as follows:

The distinction thus established between those exclusive privileges which the Crown may and those which it may not grant proceeds upon the principle that a monopoly, in the prohibited sense, is a grant which restrains others from the exercise of a right or liberty which they had before the grant was made; whereas the exclusive privilege intended to be secured by letters patent for an invention contemplates something in which other persons than the inventor had not, before his invention, a right to deal, or which they had not a right to use, because it did not exist. Other persons than the first inventor of a thing had the same right to invent it that he had; but as he has been the first to invent it, the patent system—proceeding upon the policy of encouraging the exercise of inventive talent by securing to the inventor an original property, which, without protection, would have rested only upon a principle of natural justice—takes notice of the exclusive right of that first inventor, and makes it effectual by assuming that he who has first exercised the right of invention has bestowed something upon society which ought to procure for him thereafter, at least for a time, the exclusive right to make or use that thing.

Hopkins, in section 5, first volume, of his works on patents, after quoting the foregoing from Curtis, himself speaks as follows:

Whatever the nature and reason for the adoption of the word "monopoly" into the nomenclature of our American law of patents, the word has become indispensable through long use, and in a department of the science of law, in which words are of prime importance, probably no other word exists which could take its place. It is used in no offensive or condemnatory sense as applied to the right coexistent with and embodied in the grant of letters patent. It is indicative of that right to exclude all others for a limited time with which the constitutional provision and the Federal statutes, enacted under its beneficent inspiration and authority, have rewarded the inventor's contribution to the store of common knowledge of the public.

What I have just said with respect to patent rights and their so-called monopolistic nature may be equally said with respect to secret processes and formulæ which acquire exclusiveness, not by force of law but by force of the inaccessibility of the secrets of the human mind.

Unless such rights as these are clothed with the incidents of exclusive possession and enjoyment, the inducement of the rewards offered to inventors and scientific researchers would no longer exist, prompting them to the exertion of their talents and their superior intelligence. The law coincides with common sense in creating the policy that the inventor shall for a reasonable length of time be allowed absolute and exclusive control of his invention. With respect to a secret process, the fact that an individual is the sole possessor of the secret gives him absolute and exclusive control over it, and neither law nor policy has ever tried to devise a scheme that would pry such secrets from the inner recesses of the inventor's intelligence.

It is, furthermore, the recognized policy of the United States, embodied in section 4898 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, that exclusive rights under the patent may be granted and conveyed by the patentee or his assigns, either in whole or in part, to any person for the whole or any specified part of the territory of the United States.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in speaking of these aspects of the patent laws, has used the following language:

Every patent issued under the laws of the United States for an invention or discovery contains "a grant to the patentee, his heirs and assigns, for the term of 17 years, of the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention or discovery throughout the United States and the Territories thereof." (R. S. U. S., sec. 4884.) The monopoly thus granted is one entire thing, and can not be divided into parts except as authorized by those laws. The patentee or his assigns may, by instrument in writing, assign, grant, and convey, either (first) the whole patent, comprising the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention throughout the United States; or (second) an undivided part or share of that exclusive right; or (third) the exclusive right under the patent within and throughout a specified part of the United States. (Rev. Stat., sec. 4898.) A transfer of either of these three kinds of interests is an assignment. * * * Any assignment or transfer short of one of these is a mere license. (Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U. S. 252.)

It is also the law that licenses may be granted by the patentees even before the issuance of the patent. This principle is laid down in Hopkins on Patents, at sections 233 and 237 and cases cited therein.

With this view of the nature of patents and secret processes it is apparent that there is nothing in the so-called Du Pont-Levinstein contract which in any way runs counter to the statutes or policy of the United States. I think that it may be said with truth that the whole civilized world entertains the same views with respect to patents and secret processes that are entertained in this country. The possessor of a patent here by making application for the same patent in other nations of the world may, therefore, vest himself under approved law with exclusive and absolute possession over his patent throughout the whole civilized world.

With these fundamental principles in mind, what is the proper light in which to regard the contract in question? The nature of this contract and its purposes constitute nothing new in the business experience and practice of men everywhere. It is common knowledge that restrictions in the case of patents and secret processes are in very common usage in practically every country throughout the world and have received the universal sanction of the courts.

Hopkins, in section 239, volume 1, of his works on patents, states the following to be the law, citing authorities in support of his statements:

239. License restrictions in sales of patented articles.

* * * * * * *

Express restrictions may accompany the sale of that article and will be enforced both as against the original purchaser and subsequent purchasers having actual notice of the restriction.

Such restrictions have been enforced in the following illustrative instances, restrictions as to—a, Territory; b, method of use; c, purpose of use; d, place of use; e, price at which the patented article may be leased or resold; f, duration; g, character of materials to be operated on; h, class of structures in which the patent is to be used; i, size and description of machines to be made under the patent.

The statement of the senior Senator from Colorado that "here is a partition of the world between two huge institutions which are engaged in the same business" evidently misled his hearers into a belief that these two organizations were in a conspiracy to suppress all competition throughout world territory. This was emphasized in practically all newspaper references to this discussion on the day following and subsequently.

This patent and secret-process agreement was made to meet an emergency, and is in no sense illegal, monopolistic, or un-American.

The sole object and purpose of this agreement was to afford a working basis for exchange of technical information between Levinstein (Ltd.) and the Du Pont Co., and to enable each to use the patents and the secrets of the other in the respective territories where such property rights were owned.

This contract is just such an ordinary business document. It deals, as its title indicates, only with patented and secret processes, placing no restrictions, territorial or otherwise, upon the sale of products not embodying the secrets or patents referred to in the contract.

This contract owed its existence to the growing realization in the year 1916 throughout the world, and particularly in the allied countries, that there was imperative necessity to at once build up some sort of a bulwark of protection against the giant German monopoly in dyestuffs. Conditions in the dye industry immediately preceding the war differed greatly in Great Britain and the United States. In Great Britain, by reason of the so-called working provisions of the patent laws, the Germans were compelled to and did erect important dye factories, in which were installed the elaborate and complicated apparatus necessary to produce the dyes covered by the British letters patent which they had secured. In the United States, on the other hand, no such German factories had been erected, the building of factories and working of patents not being requisite under our patent laws, the only exception being the small operation of the Bayer Co. at Albany. The Germans almost uniformly followed the policy of keeping manufacture in their own country, and building in the United States under the patent laws an elaborate patent wall which effectually prevented anyone from entering into the business in a manner sufficiently complete to offer any serious competition with their business.

When the British entered the war, their Government promptly seized the German dye factories with appurtenant apparatus. By this act the British had possession of well-equipped plants capable of producing at once substantial quantities of dyes. The British thereupon assured themselves of a dominant position in the industry by transferring the German factories thus seized to the then strongest chemical organization in the Kingdom, Levinstein (Ltd.), thereby enabling themselves to lay plans for securing the markets theretofore controlled by the Germans in other parts of the world, including the United States.

In passing I wish to speak of the great aid that Levinstein (Ltd.), of Manchester, England, was to the United States in the matter of preparing us for an adequate supply of military gas during the war. It is common knowledge that our Government was in desperate need of mustard gas and was without successful process for making it. It is true that we were endeavoring to meet our needs by following a process known to us. This process, however, produced a very small amount of poor-quality gas, occasioning enormous casualties to those working in its manufacture. The chief of the American Gas Service, American Expeditionary Forces, contemplated purchasing for a large sum a mustard-gas process from a French chemical company. At about the same time a major of the Chemical Warfare Service learned that Levinstein (Ltd.), of Manchester, possessed a better process for making mustard gas than was known to any of the other allied countries. Subsequent developments have, I believe, shown that this Levinstein process was better than that used by any of the belligerents. Dr. Herbert Levinstein, the head of this firm, was asked on what terms our Government could acquire this process. He immediately very generously offered to give it to us, and at the expense of his own firm he directed that there be made for us complete drawings for building an adequate plant. In addition to this he offered to send to the United States, at his own expense, the best chemical engineer of Levinstein (Ltd.), for the purpose of building and starting a plant in this country. The chief of the American Gas Servce deemed it unnecessary to accept this generous offer of aid. The process, however, was obtained and duly installed in the United States. As a consequence thereof at the time the armistice was signed we were, by the use of this process, making more mustard gas than all the rest of the belligerents put together and with practically no casualties in the manufacturing plant.

I mention this mustard-gas circumstance for the purpose of letting it be known that Levinstein (Ltd.), in this particular instance at least, manifested a most generous disposition to do gladly and freely all in their power to assist us in our own warlike preparation.

At the time the German factories were turned over by the British Government to Levinstein (Ltd.) the United States, dependent for half a century on the output of German dye factories and cut off from her supplies, was threatened with disaster to her entire textile and other dye-consuming industries.

Even if the German patents filed in this country had been available to us, as they were later when we entered the war and seized them as alien property, the information disclosed in such patents would have been of little or no use to our citizens without the "know how" and apparatus necessary to be used in connection therewith, which was available to the British in the factories which they had seized.

In this emergency the Du Pont Co., realizing the imperative need of a more rapid development in the industry than could be accomplished by even extraordinary efforts along usual lines of research work, sought to secure some of the advantages acquired by the British in the seizure of the German plants.

The Du Pont Co. was equipped with a chemical and engineering organization second to none in magnitude and attainment and had available unequaled laboratory facilities ready to embark in the dye business. The American chemical industry had the organization, the brains, and the capital necessary for this business, but it was hopelessly handicapped by not possessing adequate factory equipment and manufacturing knowledge for putting into operation the technical knowledge in its possession.

The Du Pont Co., therefore, entered into the negotiations with Levinstein (Ltd.), the only source then available from which the needed information could be obtained. These negotiations resulted in the business agreement to exchange information which the senior Senator from Colorado has characterized as a monopolistic conspiracy. This was accomplished by the Du Pont Co. sending practical engineers and technical men to England to bring back such practical working plans and information as would place the Du Pont Co. in a position to give to the American consumer all the advantages secured to the British consumer through the seizure of the German plants. For this the Du Pont Co. was forced to pay a large cash consideration. By the terms of the contract the parties undertook to exchange information from time to time as developments were made in the industry, each party paying to the other therefor on an ordinary royalty basis.

The immediate effect of these negotiations was to secure for America the "know how" so urgently needed in this country and which enabled the Du Pont Co. in a comparatively short time to produce and make available to American consumers substantial quantities of dyes equal in quality to any manufactured by the Germans.

Cables have brought from London a denial that the agreement between Levinstein (Ltd.) and the Du Pont Co. is of the monopolistic character referred to. Herbert Levinstein, managing director of the British Dyestuffs Corporation, of which the Levinstein Co. is now a part, is quoted in the New York Times of May 10 as saying, among other things, in reply to the statement of the senior Senator from Colorado, "The agreement has as its object merely the interchange of information."

I am very free to say that in my view of this contract it seems to me that the Du Pont Powder Co. acted in the matter with that degree of intelligence and promptitude of decision that characterize the successful American business and which have done so much to place American industry well toward the front in the great contest for the world's markets. I can not see that any wrong or improper proceedings are disclosed by the terms of this contract. On the contrary, it seems to me to be entitled to be characterized as wise and prudent, not only for the Du Pont Co. in its own business venture but as well for the country, which is so vitally interested in the upbuilding of the dye industry. As to the monopolistic character of the contract, let me ask if the situation with respect to the patented dyes and processes owned and secretly known to Levinstein (Ltd.) had not thus been made available to an American concern, what would have been the result? Is it not apparent that instead of having an American dye industry, run by American citizens, financed by American capital, operated by American labor manufacturing dyes based upon the Levinstein patents and processes, we would have had American markets subject to the undivided control and monopolistic dictates of a British concern? In other words, if the Du Ponts had not, by the payment of a considerable sum of money and by the promise of exchange of information, acquired from Levinstein (Ltd.) the license to operate under patents owned by them and the "know how" connected with those patents and secret processes, the American market would have continued to be subject to the dangers that ever lurk in the circumstance that foreigners exclusively control a point of commercial strategic advantage.

Mr. President, if my view of this contract is correct, it can not fairly be said that any monopolistic or otherwise improper motive underlies either its negotiation or execution. On the contrary, it would seem to me to be such a contract as would entitle the Americans who secured it to be congratulated for their vigilance in looking out for American opportunity and alertness in embracing it.

WOOL VALUES AND BANK CREDITS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams which are so important that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one of them and express the hope that some additional action may be taken by appropriate authority to grant the relief which seems so imperatively required. I am in receipt of a telegram from Mr. John D. Holliday, who is president of the National Wool Warehouse & Storage Co. The telegram is dated Union Stock Yards, Ill., June 2, 1920, and is as follows:

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,
Washington, D. C.:

Live-stock industry Utah and adjoining States facing extremely difficult financial situation. Resources local banks have been taxed to utmost in caring for feed and excessive expense outlay during past winter. Shearing is in operation in most of range country, and growers are finding it difficult to obtain cash advances to meet current operating expenses. Practically all wool-buying interests have withdrawn active operations in West. Curtailing of credits in all banking lines handling commercial paper in East has brought about a situation whereby it is almost impossible to provide reasonable advances on wool clips now ready for shipment to eastern markets. With mills in nearly all sections of country operating to reasonable capacity, with consuming outlook good, why a situation like this should suddenly develop at shearing time by which western wool growing will be greatly damaged if not ruined is difficult to understand, and unless means can be found to tide over situation wool values will fall without reasonable justification. It has been suggested if Federal reserve bank could make some arrangements with western banks by which facilities could be extended for carrying wool paper for a time the situation could be reasonably provided for.

JOHN D. HOLLIDAY,
President National Wool Warehouse & Storage Co.

Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams of like import. They challenge attention to a situation which is very serious. I received, several days ago, telegrams from persons engaged in the live-stock business calling attention to the serious situation confronting the industry in the West because of the restriction of credits resulting from the present policy of the Federal banks. It is known to all that the production of the wool clip for the present season has been upon a cost level so high as to foreshow severe losses to the woolgrowers. The same situation confronts the cattle growers. Those engaged in these industries have been compelled to borrow extensively from the local banks. If the member banks are denied the privilege of discounting the paper of the growers of sheep and cattle, irreparable damage to industry will be sustained by them and the live-stock industry will receive a serious setback.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I received a copy in exact form of the telegram which has just been read by my colleague. I immediately took up the question with the Federal Reserve Board, and I received a statement this morning from the chairman of the board that they had, at my request, sent a telegram to the Federal reserve bank of San Francisco asking that they advance money upon the wool clip of the West. I will say to my colleague that I notified Mr. Holliday to that effect about noon to-day. I am assured by the members of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington that the situation will be taken care of so far as it applies to the wool clip of the West.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several days ago, as I have stated, I received a number of telegrams similar to the one just read. I then made some investigation and attempted to have steps taken to relieve the situation. I received assurances, though not as strong as the senior Senator from Utah states were given to him, that the policy would be materially modified in the interest of the borrower.

Several days ago, Mr. President, I conferred with a number of Senators in regard to the matter, and the Senators will remember that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] presented a joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to take prompt steps in the matter. It is, in part, as follows:

To deposit $40,000,000 within the next five months, and as soon as possible, in the Federal reserve banks for the purpose of furnishing said banks the necessary funds to rediscount at not less than 6 per cent such cattle paper as may be necessary or desirable properly to protect and encourage the live stock and other agricultural interests of the country engaged in the necessary production of food.

Upon the introduction of that resolution a number of Senators sought to secure the relief which was so imperatively required by the cattle growers and the wool producers of the West. The assurances then—that is, four or five days ago—were not quite satisfactory; but since then, as I have been advised, and as my colleague, from his statement, has been advised, assurances have been given that the situation, in part at least, will be relieved.

I want to say, however, that the promised relief will not be sufficient, I am afraid, to meet the needs of the cattlemen; and if the Federal reserve banks persist in their constriction of credits, not only will the evils predicted by the Senator from South Carolina a few days since occur to the agricultural interests, but the stock-growing interests will suffer irreparable damage to their industry. It is to be hoped that the Federal reserve banks, appreciating the primary object for which the Federal Banking System was established, will take steps to see that ample credit is extended to the cattle growers and the woolgrowers who can furnish adequate and ample security for any loans that may be obtained.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and others desired a vote upon the pending amendment, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	New	Spencer
Beckham	Harrison	Norris	Stanley
Brandegee	Henderson	Nugent	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Sutherland
Capper	Kenyon	Phipps	Townsend
Chamberlain	Keyes	Ransdell	Underwood
Curtis	King	Reed	Wadsworth
Dial	McKellar	Sheppard	Warren
Dillingham	McNary	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
France	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Gay	Nelson	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. BALL, Mr. HALE, Mr. HARDING, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

RECLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think it is quite evident that a few Senators are determined to defeat the bill which is now before the Senate or to prevent action upon it.

I do not think there is any Senator here who has looked into the question at all who does not believe that the postal-salaries bill, which has just been reported from the House, should be considered at this session. I think it would be entirely a proper cause for the President to call Congress together in extraordinary session to pass this or some similar bill. We talk about the necessity of passing the appropriation bills. This is practically an appropriation bill. It is a bill to maintain the efficiency, in an approximate manner, at least, of the Post Office Department of the country during the coming year.

There is no doubt, Senators, but that what I am stating is absolutely true. The Post Office Department is breaking down in very many parts of the country. The bill which has been reported to the Senate has been the work of a joint commission for about 18 months or 2 years. It is reported unanimously by the commission, and I feel that it ought to be considered. I feel that I would be derelict in my duty if I did not improve every possible opportunity to bring it before the Senate. I propose to give the Senate an opportunity to determine whether they want to take up the bill or not at this time.

I would not care to displace the bill which has been before the Senate since last evening if I thought there was a disposition on the part of Senators to pass it, and not a disposition to kill it or prevent action upon it. I would be glad to wait, hoping that there would still be time to take up the postal appropriation bill. But, Mr. President, being convinced, as I think every Senator here is convinced, that there is a determined opposition to this bill, a proposition to filibuster against it until it can not pass, I therefore move that the Senate now——

Mr. KENYON. Before the Senator makes that motion——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just let me make it. I make the motion, Mr. President, that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the bill (S. 4475) to reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service and readjust their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not know just how the Senator reaches the conclusion that there is a determined filibuster. It may be that there is. I had intended to ask unanimous consent to vote on this bill and all amendments to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. While I have had no assurance that that would not be objected to, I have had assurance from some of those I assume would be rated as opposed to the bill that they would not object to it. I do not know that it is any more important for the postal clerks to have living wages than it is for janitors and charwomen and other unfortunates in the Government employ. I would like to have an opportunity, before this motion is voted on, to ask for that unanimous consent.

I want to say further, Mr. President, that I hold in my hand the Democratic platform of four years ago, in which the Democratic Party pledged itself to a living wage for employees of the Government. I do not know how it happened to get in the platform, but now we find the leader of the Democratic Party on the other side opposing this bill, and all of the opposition, practically, coming from the Democratic Party in this Chamber. If the bill is to be defeated, I want it to go along with the pledge of the Democratic platform of four years ago, that the country may know and that the employees of the Government may know exactly where the responsibility rests.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, with the understanding that my motion may be entertained in case unanimous consent is not granted, I have no objection to the request being made, providing it will be laid aside to allow us to take up the Post Office bill.

Mr. KENYON. If the unanimous consent is obtained, I am perfectly willing that the minimum-wage bill shall be laid aside, and nothing more be done or said upon it until 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, and then any other business may be taken up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I was very willing this morning, after the announcement by the party in power in this Chamber that it had reached the conclusion as to what business it should transact and when it should adjourn, to aid in carrying out that program and aid in passing the supply bills and conference reports. I think that goes beyond the question of party; it is for the public good. But that does not mean that the minority in this Chamber should assist in the consideration of ill-prepared and ill-considered bills, and endanger the great supply bills of this Government and conference reports which are of vital importance to the country. I know of no more important bill, outside of the supply bills, than the shipping bill, the great commerce of America depending on its passage. Are we to stop the machinery of the Government, after we have agreed on the hour of adjournment, and jeopardize the supply bills and possibly send the shipping bill to the calendar in the next session because we have a bill which is either a fad or a fancy, striking at an ideal? That is all it does. It definitely decides nothing. It may overpay one man and underpay another.

I ask who has the right to say what is a living wage? Certainly you can not do that in the aggregate. The Senator calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Democratic Party declared in favor of a living wage for employees. It did. But that does not mean that all the employees should receive some minimum wage that is not a living wage, that all men should be willing to work for the same pay. If you carry this to its last analysis, that is what it would lead to.

So far as the bill proposed by the Senator from Michigan is concerned, I am glad to give it my support. I am not on the committee; I have not worked out its details, but, as I said to-day, no man in this Chamber recognizes the fact that the Government employees are not receiving just compensation to meet the rising conditions of the cost of living growing out of the war more than I do. There is a bill which has been worked out, has been applied to a great department, accomplishes a result in an intelligent way; and yet we are asked to stop, to blindly follow a sentiment, for that is all there is behind this minimum-wage bill.

For one I am not willing to do it. I think the responsibility rests on the other side of the Chamber to pass these supply bills, the bill which the Senator from Michigan has referred to, and the shipping bill. The other side of the Chamber has no right to ask us to come here and make a quorum to pass the minor bills which are pending if you deny the right to legislate on the great bills which are before the Congress by not bringing them to the attention of the Chamber.

If you are willing to do it, we will give you the votes to take it up, and then to pass it, but if you are not willing to do it because you can not get unanimous consent to consider minor bills, then I think the Senate had better adjourn to-night and adopt some new line of procedure.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I presume he will object to any request for unanimous consent to vote on the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will certainly object to the consideration of a bill of minor importance——

Mr. KENYON. I am not asking that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Until the great bills that are here demanding consideration are first considered.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to make the request, but there is no need of wasting time and calling for a quorum if the Senator would object, as I take it he would object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. After these important bills are passed I shall have no objection to the Senator taking up his bill for consideration, but I think it would be idle to ask it.

Mr. KENYON. I take it from that statement that the Senator will object at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not tell what we will do to-morrow. We may have the calendar crowded to-morrow.

Mr. KENYON. I am asking at this time if there will be any objection. If there will be, there is no need of calling for a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly I would not be willing, and I do not suppose the leadership on the other side of the Chamber would be willing, to commit the Senate to the consideration of this bill, a minor bill, until we know that the great supply bills and these important conference reports are determined on. If they are out of the way, we may reach some conclusion with the Senator from Iowa, but we certainly can not now.

Mr. KENYON. I think it is a fair conclusion to draw from the Senator's remarks that he objects, and I am not going to press the question as to what we will do about it. All this illustrates the folly of Congress adjourning with great measures before it. It may be a minor measure to the Senator, and it may be a minor measure to other Senators, but to the poorly paid 66,000 Government employees it is not a minor measure, and they will understand full well, in view of this pledge of the Democratic platform, that the bill is defeated by Democratic votes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, what is a living wage? Take the District of Columbia. There are families from which three of the members are in the Government service, with four in the family. Their work may all be of the simplest character, such as messengers and elevator operators. The bill would give $3,240 a year to those three as a living wage for the four.

Mr. KENYON. What was a living wage when you held your convention in St. Louis? "A living wage is a wage that permits the toiler to live according to the standards of our civilization."

That is what you said you would give, and that is what you are preventing from being done at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I am showing is that the bill providing for a minimum wage, based upon the idea that it is to be enough to support a family, is utterly unsound as applied to Government employees in the city of Washington, because one employee does not support the family. I illustrate it by four in the family to which I referred, three having Government positions, such as messengers and running elevators, and the four in the family with the three at work would receive from the National Treasury $3,240 a year. A living wage for a family is not the best test, for there are several members of the same family in the District at work for the Government, and the only proper way to fix their compensation is by the job that each holds and the work done. No one claims that the work done by each employee in the District is worth $1,080 annually. There is no labor on a farm not entitled to as much compensation as some Government employees in the District. A number hold jobs who are not heads of families, where the family is supported from the wage. I urge an amendment omitting employees of the District from this bill.

I will support the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], because there we have a bill worked out to pay Government employees according to the work they do. When a bill comes before us to increase the pay of Government employees elsewhere according to the work that they do, I should be glad to support it, but I regard a minimum wage as applied to all as unsound and uneconomic.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to say——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not care to yield until I have made a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to have a vote on my motion to take up the bill and then——

Mr. KENYON. I suppose it is debatable?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, it is; and that is why I wanted to make a statement first.

I think the majority of the Senate desire to take up the bill now. After what has been said, surely the minimum-wage bill can not be passed at this time, because we can not get a vote on it. If it is true, as I have suggested, that the Senate is in favor practically of the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I should like very much, if it is taken up, that we may devote ourselves to that bill. We will endeavor to explain the bill as best we can, if it needs explanation to anyone, but let us get a vote on the bill and send it to conference, if it is necessary to send it to conference, in order that we may get a report on the bill which, as I said, is unanimously desired by the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. I thought the Senator had concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I claim the floor to say that the Republican side of this Chamber need not defend the Democratic platform. As a Democrat I am going to defend it. I object to having a defense come from the Republican side.

I listened to-day with attention and with admiration to the profound speech made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. It was one of the ablest speeches in his long, illustrious, and useful career, but I do not agree with it. We are facing a new day. The millions of laboring men are going to claim their own, to wit, a reasonable living wage; and the sooner the Senate and my party and your party recognize it, the sooner will this world be tranquillized.

The older I grow the more conservative I grow, because as time passes the sentinels of caution and prudence set themselves up in the mind and the erratic, impulsive views evaporate. But, conservative as I am, I am bound to say that, unless my lenses are blurred, this Nation is almost on the edge of a cataclysm. We are neither at peace nor at war. Congress and the Executive are—I was about to say at deadheads, but I will say at loggerheads. It is time that something be done for this Republic.

Perchance the observation may be made that this talk is useless, but I advise my party now not for a moment to allow the country to believe that you ever struck the cause of labor a blow. It was the laboring men who, with the assistance of Jefferson and Aaron Burr, first unhorsed the Federal Party, and the common people kept the Democratic Party in power for 60 years, except for two Whig administrations.

The laboring men of the country are the ones who have assisted to give the Democratic Party every victory it ever won. Here are two bills claiming the right of way, both of which, in my judgment, should pass, because the majority of the Senate desires to pass each of the bills. I am opposed to a filibuster, whether conducted by my party or the opposition party. I have voted for every cloture rule that has been introduced since I have been here because I believe that when the majority is ready to vote and has made up its mind, the majority should have an opportunity to vote. Under our system of government the majority should have the right to vote in the Senate when that majority wishes to vote.

Here is a meritorious bill, which provides that $3 per day shall be the minimum wage for Government employees. Such a small minimum wage may be seized upon by some employers of labor, and held up as an opinion that the Congress has officially said that $3 per day is high enough.

The practical difficulties in our way are as follows: The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is pressing a bill equally as meritorious. As he states, the Postal System is about to break down because, forsooth, the carriers, not only on the rural routes, but the carriers in the towns and in the cities, and the fourth-class postmasters as well, are unable to have even a meager, a very common, subsistence under the compensation that is paid to them at this time.

Before this Congress adjourns it ought to pass both of these measures, to wit, the bill providing for a minimum wage and the bill which proposes an increase in the salaries of the fourth-class postmasters and an increase in the compensation of the carriers, who, through wind and rain, in fair weather and in foul weather, bring the mails of the American people to them that they may be informed as to what the market is, and bring citizens into connection with the remote parts of the country.

It shall not be said that a Democratic filibuster defeated the minimum-wage bill, that a Democratic filibuster defeated the proposal to increase the pay for postal employees. I warn my Democratic brethren that you will have troubles and burdens enough to bear without adding to them at this time. You need not hope to tread a pathway other than one into which our keen adversaries have placed difficulties, and the people of the country who make this appeal, the mail carriers who make this appeal to us, must not be refused this just appeal.

Under the present schedule of wages the postal employees can not support their families, or, if one be a single man, he may not hope to become the head of a family because his wages are insufficient; and if the postal employees resign and go into more lucrative employments they are looked upon as slackers in their duty to the Government.

We should pass both of these bills to-night. Not only is it expedient but it is right and proper that they should be enacted into law. With all respect to the views of the learned Senators who oppose these bills, I say put yourself in the situation of postal employees: Arise at 6 o'clock in the morning for a while and labor in the hot sun, in the rain, in the snow, and in the hail, and then you will see what it means to attempt to support a family on $1,200 a year.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for a question.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PHELAN. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to ask me a question?

Mr. DIAL. I merely wished to say that, so far as I know, we all want to pass the post-office bill. I think it one of the most important matters we have before us. The employees have been expecting for a long time to have it passed. The bill has been considered pretty carefully, the committee has looked into it fully and has worked very diligently on it, and we ought to pass it.

Mr. ASHURST. I am very glad to hear my friend say that he is in favor of the passage of that bill. I remind the Senate that the minimum-wage bill has already passed both Houses. It was recalled upon a motion to reconsider after it had passed the Senate. It is true that it passed the Senate when there was a very meager attendance, but that can not be invoked as an argument against the bill. It was on the calendar a long time, and the presumption would be highly in favor of a bill which has passed both Houses. In my opinion, when the motion to reconsider prevailed, it carried with it the moral presumption, if not the legal and parliamentary presumption, that the Senate would dispose of the bill at this session.

I admit that no word was said which would bind any Senator to consent to a vote at this session, but appealing to the consciences of Senators, and asking them to search their own consciences, will they not say that the highly moral presumption is that, having been reconsidered, the bill should again be voted upon at this session? I thought it was time for some Democrat to give utterance to a few words in behalf of the Democratic platform, instead of having the Republican side tell us about our own platform.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I have listened with much interest to what the Senator from Arizona has said, but we have an important supply bill here that has not yet reached the stage of conference, which, in fact, has not yet passed the Senate, and which has to go to conference. I refer to the general deficiency bill, which contains a great many changes of law, perhaps 100 or so. Does not the Senator from Arizona think that that bill should be passed to-night and go to conference, so that other bills which have to be acted upon by both Houses might then take the time while we are in conference on the deficiency bill, so that we may get all of the bills through?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming, in his charming way, for which he is so famous, has invited me to stop speaking; that is what he means. I am not offended; I like the Senator very much; and if he boldly said, "I should like to have you quit talking," I would take my seat at once, but——

Mr. WARREN. I did not intend that; but I wish to have the Senator and his friends stay here to-night until the deficiency bill is passed, if it takes until to-morrow morning; and I feel confident that we can accomplish that if the Senator, in his energetic way, will throw himself into the vortex and help me out.

Mr. ASHURST. Let us first pass bills which provide for a living wage to people who have a right to expect a living wage.

Now, Mr. President, when the roll call is had on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to displace the pending bill, I am going to vote "nay," not that I am in any way opposed to the bill the consideration of which is proposed by the Senator from Michigan, but because, forsooth, the Senate can not consider two bills at one and the same time, because the pending bill, which is in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], has the parliamentary right of way, and I see no utility in displacing it, although I want the post-office employees' bill to pass at the earliest possible moment. Of what avail is it, however, to set aside one bill after we have talked about it for a day or two and have passed it once, merely because a small but respectable—respectable in ability and service—minority of Senators are opposed to it.

Therefore, for the reasons I have given, I am going to vote against the motion to displace the minimum-wage bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I am through. I yield the floor.

Mr. PHELAN. I do not desire the floor, but I desire to interrogate the Senator from Arizona. The Senator from Iowa has endeavored to put the burden upon this side of the Chamber for having refused a vote on the minimum-wage bill. I have very little sympathy with Senators on either side of the Chamber who are endeavoring, if that be their purpose, to defeat an expression of the Members of this body upon that subject. I am one of those who believe that when the roll is called it will not appear that any substantial number on this side of the Chamber will oppose the minimum-wage bill. Because our worthy leader, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], has seen fit in an excellent speech to oppose the measure is no reason why Senators on this side of the Chamber should assume any responsibility for his remarks, nor is it his purpose, I believe, in any way to commit Members on this side of the Chamber to an agreement with his views. The Senator from Alabama is merely speaking in his individual capacity; and I ask the Senator from Alabama if this is not correct, in view of the fact that the Senator from Iowa endeavored to elicit from him, as he said, an objection in his capacity as the leader of the Democratic side?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, this afternoon I stated the reasons why I am opposed to the pending bill. I have been opposed to the pending bill since it was introduced, because, as I have said many times, it is, in my judgment, an ill-considered bill. The fact that it had to be reconsidered and amendments adopted here shows that it was not fairly adjusted when it was originally written.

Of course, this is not a party question. A leader speaks for his party only when a party issue is involved, but I know of no reason why a man who happens to be the floor leader on either side is divorced from expressing his opinion about bills that are not party measures simply because of that fact.

Mr. PHELAN. But, if I may interrupt the Senator, did he not observe that the Senator from Iowa endeavored to draw out his objection in his capacity as leader on the Democratic side?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Senator from Iowa realizes that his bill may require further consideration, and that he is meeting an issue here between a bill for the benefit of postal employees that has been carefully considered, which fixes a definite wage and enables us to know what we are doing, and a bill that is mere guesswork, without form and without life, a mere effort to give charity where charity is not due, but where just compensation should be paid.

If the Senator will allow me to interrupt for a moment further, I will say in defense of the Democratic Party that the party has declared for a living wage, but it expected of its Representatives in Congress an intelligent determination of a living wage and not a mere guess as to what constitutes a living wage. The bill offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is an attempt to solve the question by a real determination, whereas the bill offered by the Senator from Iowa is an indefinite proposition, the meaning of which to any employee of the Government no man can understand.

I wish to say further, if the Senator will permit me in his time, that I differ entirely from the statements of my good friend, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], as to where the Democratic Party stands. He says on the one hand we have labor, and on the other hand we have plutocracy, and that the Democratic Party must take the side of caste and class. Mr. President, if I understand Democratic ideals and the great foundation stone of the Democratic Party since the beginning of this Government it has never in its history stood for caste or class legislation, but has been representative of the great mass of the American people, standing for equal justice to all, and not for the benefit of class, whether it be the plutocrat or any other class of people.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I can not permit our Democratic leader, my dear friend, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], to put me in the attitude of saying that the Democratic Party must split the country into classes and then take the side of the poor man simply because he is poor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not say that.

Mr. ASHURST. If my remarks bear such an inference, they are not justified at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I am delighted, because it is only on the Senator's remarks that I based my remarks.

Mr. ASHURST. But here is what I do mean, that having validated many millions of dollars of war contracts at the demand of the plutocrats, I as a Democrat say, in order that there shall be no class distinctions, that after having shoveled out dollars to plutocracy, we shall grant a just minimum wage to those who are entitled to it. I am sure that such is not class legislation.

The aggregate profits which corporate wealth made during the past three years and now enjoys are $23,000,000,000. War-contract beneficiaries, with cynical smiles on their lips, throw dust from their glittering carriage wheels upon the laborer delving in the earth. We pay out the money for the plutocrats—probably it was due them—but when I ask for a minimum wage for the laboring man I am told that I am in favor of class legislation and am appealing to class distinction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will be glad, with the consent of the Senator from California, to continue for a moment longer. If I made a mistake in my understanding of the appeal of the Senator from Arizona, I am sure I make none now, because he goes back to his original statement. If anyone has been given the right to engage in exploiting the people to the extent of $23,000,000,000 under war contracts, I am sure that we can repudiate such action for the Democratic Party. I am satisfied that no part of that charge can rest at the door of the Democratic Party. If any party in this country has ever stood against special contracts and special legislation for class, it is the Democratic Party. So that I think the Senator is wrong in saying that we must appeal to class at one end because somebody has committed us to class at the other.

Mr. ASHURST. I have not said that we must appeal to either class at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I misunderstand the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I have not said that, Mr. President. I am trying to prevent the country getting the impression that we are given to dealing in class legislation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure that the intelligent voter of the United States realizes that the Democratic Party has taken no false position in this matter; that it stands for the ideals for which it has stood from the beginning, and that is that the Government should represent all of the people; that only just legislation should be passed.

If the bill now pending before the Senate is right, if it fairly meets the situation, regardless of class, it should become a law; but if it is wrong and does not meet the issue, then the Congress should delay its passage until it is properly worked out. That is the only argument that has been made here to-day by Senators who oppose the bill. They insist that the bill is not properly drawn and does not fairly meet the equation that is presented before them. That is no appeal to class and no denial of class rights; and that is the only position I have taken in reference to that matter.

It is my individual opinion, and, of course, commits nobody else; but what I do say, and what I have a right to say as the representative of this side of the Chamber, is that great public business is before the Senate; we have either rightly or wrongly agreed upon an adjournment, and the great supply bills of the Government demand immediate consideration; and I say that the other side of the Chamber is derelict in attending to its public duty if it does not first bring up for consideration and immediate attention the great bills that are necessary for the life of the Government.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong the discussion, nor did I rise for the purpose of discussing the merits of the question; but the debate has drawn me away for the moment from my original purpose. I quite understand the position of the Senator from Alabama, that he objects in principle to the establishment of an arbitrary minimum wage, and there is very much force in his argument, because it might be established at 4 or 5 or 6 or 10 or 20 dollars, and, because arbitrary, it would be open to very serious objection. He says he is in favor, pursuant to the Democratic declaration in its platform of four years ago, of a living wage; and in evidence thereof intimates that he will support the postal employees' bill, which, on a scientific basis and in an orderly way, has provided for an increase of wages.

So the Senator is well within his rights, speaking in his individual capacity, and possibly there are many who agree with him; but as to the merits of the question, we must not forget the fact that this is a minimum-wage bill fixing $3 as the minimum wage to be paid to the employees of the Government of the United States, and aside from the principle of establishing any minimum wage I do not think anyone will seriously say that in these times of high prices $3 is an excessive wage for any individual capable of working for the United States.

My own city many years ago, when there was no war, and when there were no extraordinarily high prices, fixed $3 as the minimum wage for municipal employees; and to-day the men who then received and gladly received $3 for working in various capacities, even upon the streets and in the trenches, are receiving without any compulsion five or six dollars a day.

So the Senate is only asked to declare that $3 a day shall be the minimum wage. It is doing no violence to the Treasury. It is doing, possibly, but little help to the employees themselves, except in rare instances where in the cavernous depths of the Federal Government you will find people working for low wages, insufficient to sustain them. I have in mind the employees in the Federal building at San Francisco. They can not, I know of my own knowledge, make ends meet on their pay, and still they tenaciously hold on to those positions for some reason which I can not fathom.

It is said that in Europe a certain distinction comes with employment from the Government; that where the compensation is inadequate it is made up by the importance the individual feels he receives by the confidence of his country. That hardly applies in the United States. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] the other day said that he would advise his friends, as a friendly service to them, not to accept employment from the United States either in high or in low positions; and I think it is incumbent upon us and dutiful for us to raise the standard of Government employment, so that a man will feel a certain degree of pride in serving the United States, not only because he is serving his Government in a particular capacity, but because the Government has seen fit adequately to reward its servants, just as an individual employer progressively rewards those who are industrious and faithful. It has been said that people love their government because their government loves them. Let it not go abroad among the masses of the people that the Government is hostile to their interests, and when they make an appeal for the establishment of a minimum wage so low as $3 that it is rejected by the Senate of the United States. I think there is a moral consideration here which should not be overlooked.

Mr. President, I have only this to say: I rose to disapprove of dilatory tactics. I am loath to believe that there is a filibuster against the minimum-wage bill. That, however, can be demonstrated only by calling for a vote. I call for a vote, and ask that the question be now put.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I yield to no Member of this body in a genuine solicitude for the welfare of the men who toil, and during many years of public service my actions on the floor of the Federal Congress have never belied my words. A few months ago a bill was brought into the Senate, favorably reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, providing for compulsory arbitration in cases of labor disputes between carriers and their employees. In the committee I alone opposed it at the time the roll was called; and, if I mistake not, I was the sole Senator upon the floor of this body to oppose that measure. I did it as the champion of labor and as the avowed enemy of the socialism inherent in it. I opposed it because it was socialistic as well as unjust to the freedom and the independence of labor.

I trust that on the eve of a presidential election, when everything is grist that comes to the mill, either at Chicago or at San Francisco, men clothed with the high responsibility incident to a seat in the Federal Senate, either Democrats or Republicans, will not so far forget themselves as to play politics with so vital and far-reaching a question as the establishment as a governmental principle of a minimum wage in the industrial life of America. It is not a simple question of how much we will pay 25,000 or 30,000 people within the District of Columbia or in the United States.

If it is right to pay not less than $3 a day to every living human soul, without regard to fitness or qualification or the character of the work, and if it is right to pay it to every governmental employee, it is right to pay it to every other employee.

You can give no reason why this Government should be required to pay every man and every woman who works for it eight hours the sum of $3 that will not apply to every man and woman employing anybody for eight hours.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator believe in a minimum-wage scale for United States Senators?

Mr. STANLEY. Why, certainly not. I do not stand here hired at $625 a month; and if there were fewer hired men in this Senate and more who in the fear of God sought only the good of this country in this high place, we would be better off.

Mr. ASHURST. And more who have read the bill about which they are talking.

Mr. STANLEY. I am talking of the principle of a minimum wage, whether it applies to 3,000,000 or 300,000 people. If I had the power, Mr. President, and could take a drop of sweat from the brow of honest toil, and could crystallize it into an imperishable form, as another has said, I would make it the eternal standard of value.

A few short years ago this country was torn and parties were torn asunder by a discussion of the standard of value; whether it should be so many grains of gold, or so many grains of silver, or so many grains of gold and silver, and what should be the parity or relation between the two. The standard of value to-day is not so many pennyweights of gold or silver. The real standard of value to-day is the unit of production. The real value, outside of the nominal value of the raw material in Nature, is the labor that is crystallized in all the material things we call wealth; and whenever by governmental power and an arbitrary governmental edict you take that unit of value from the market, take it from the law of supply and demand, and have this Government determine what every man shall receive—and a minimum wage will inevitably result in a maximum wage—whenever this Government determines that it will fix wages in all employments without regard to the value of the employee but solely with regard to the needs of the employee, and carry that principle to its last analysis, you will infallibly end in State socialism. There is no escape. I am in favor of a living wage to every employee of this Government. I am in favor of paying men according to the value of their labor, according to their capacity for service, and not according to any arbitrary, blind standard.

Are we going to pay every individual who works for this Government what is, at this hour, essential to a certain standard of living, when conditions and values are all chaotic? Will you ever return to normal conditions if you make either commodities or the labor which gives value to those commodities a fixed and changeless quantity?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber or not, but the motion before the Senate at the present time is to take up the Post Office salary bill in place of the regular order, which is the bill the Senator is now discussing. If we could settle that question, I think if we take up the Post Office salary bill, we could dispose of it in a very short time. If the other is maintained before the Senate, then the Senator's remarks would be in order. I do not want to find any fault with the subject he is discussing, but if we could settle this question it would expedite the business of the Senate very materially.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I was speaking simply in answer to the demand that we have a vote on the question of whether we take up the minimum-wage bill. I believe we should take up the bill presented by the Senator from Michigan and determine that matter, and the other important bills mentioned by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and that this vital question can be reached later. While the bill itself is not of major importance, the far-reaching consequences of the principle involved deserve the dispassionate, the nonpartisan, and the courageous consideration of every Senator on this floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to say a word in explanation of the vote I am about to cast upon the motion of the senior Senator from Michigan.

I have made up my mind to vote for the so-called minimum-wage bill, but I do not like the principle upon which it is drawn. It will occur to Senators that there is a very great difference between the living wage to which the Democratic Party pledged itself and a minimum wage. A minimum wage may or may not be a living wage.

I recognize the fact that we have come to a point where it is useless to argue that proposition. My fear is that if the minimum wage is generally adopted throughout the country it will be a snare and a delusion. I fear that it will do more harm than it will good. I fear that it will throw out of employment a great many deserving people. But I have long since learned that when a crusade is on it is useless to attempt to argue with the crusaders, because they are the embodiment of all wisdom. They are never mistaken. But that is neither here nor there. It is apparent that the minimum-wage bill can not reach a final vote for some time, and possibly not at this session.

I think there is a universal feeling that this Post Office reclassification bill ought to be passed. I have taken pains to inquire, and I have satisfied myself that the most underpaid class of employees in the country, except the school-teachers, are those who are in the Postal Service. They are constantly at work in one of the most important branches of the public service, and now are working at less than a living wage, and this Congress would be derelict in its duty if it did not provide for a very substantial increase in their salaries. If we are to look at this subject from a wholly selfish standpoint, let us grant reasonable increases to the men in the Postal Service. Let us not cripple the service by a niggardly policy here in the halls of Congress. To continue the present rates of pay will drive many of the best men out of the service.

For these reasons I shall vote to sustain the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. KENYON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the motion of the Senator from Michigan the years are 34, the nays 13, and Mr. CURTIS, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. MYERS, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. HENDERSON are present and paired, making a quorum present.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4475) to reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service and readjust their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

H. R. 14338. An act to reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service and readjust their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is prepared to report favorably the bill which has just been referred to it by the Presiding Officer. My inquiry is, if the committee make that report, would it be subject to the objection that it must go over a day before we can consider that special bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it would have to go over unless unanimous consent is given that the bill may be taken up.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will state my object in presenting the question. In the House and the Senate practically the same bill was introduced on this subject, which we incorporated in the report of the committee. The committees worked on the bills after they were submitted and finally agreed to certain amendments which should be made. The Senate committee reported two or three amendments which the House committee did not incorporate. I think it would expedite matters and save time if we could substitute the House bill for the Senate committee bill and take up the House bill. It would then leave but one or two items that would be in conference, if the Senate saw fit to make any change at all in the House bill. I dislike, however, to do this if there is going to be any objection to considering that bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 14338.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the House bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; that the House bill be considered and substituted for the Senate committee bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can see no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chairs hears none and it is so ordered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14338) to reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service and readjust their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suppose Senators desire to have the bill read.

Mr. POMERENE. Before the bill is read, permit me to ask a question. The Senator from Michigan has just said that there are, as I understood him, two or three particulars in which the bill as it passed the House differs from the bill reported originally by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the Senate. Will the Senator explain to the Senate what those particulars are?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In the first place, there are more than two or three clerical errors that were made in the printing. I suppose no one will object to those clerical errors being corrected in the bill.

There was no provision made in the original bill as sent to the committees providing for the continuation of the provisions of the act making appropriation for the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service approved April 24, 1920, and making that appropriation available for the present fiscal year. The appropriation that was made last year ought to be carried over to the new arrangement. The House committee and the Senate committee incorporated that provision in the original bill.

Another amendment which was made to the original bill was the one repealing section 2 of the act making appropriations for the fiscal year 1921 that was passed some time ago. I will read the provision:

> That section 2 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved April 24, 1920, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, except in so far as such repeal may affect the pay of employees not covered by this act.

The idea and the purpose of that provision was to be sure that there was no duplication in salaries; that it would not be considered as carrying salaries appropriated for in this bill and duplicating those salaries provided for in the regular Post Office appropriation bill.

I will not mention the ones which the House did not incorporate. I will mention only those that are in both the bills.

On page 1 of both bills the original provision was that first-class postmasters should be those who had salaries of $3,200 and more. The bill as printed made it $3,000. The correction was made to comply with the recommendations of the commission.

The House bill provides for a change in the compensation of fourth-class postmasters. The commission's report, as presented to the committees of the House and Senate, it was found, reduced the salaries of certain fourth-class postmasters under the arrangement that was made by the commission. When that was discovered, the House desired to correct the mistake, and therefore changed certain figures on page 4 so as to increase the total compensation to fourth-class postmasters by a little over $1,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is alluding to the amendment on page 4, line 17, increasing the salary from $100 to $125, is he not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not understand to which page the Senator from Mississippi has reference.

Mr. HARRISON. I am referring to page 4, line 17, touching fourth-class postmasters. The only amendment, as I understand, which the House incorporated changes $100 to $125.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I could have the page where the amendment was reported, as this is the only bill I have, I could tell exactly what the House proposes to do.

Mr. HARRISON. I went over the provisions of the bill as it came from the House, and I find that is the only amendment. Now, the Senator understands that amendment really increases the salaries of fourth class postmaster, does he not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; by $1,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator figured in regard to that?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not made any figures on that at all. I have relied entirely upon the report of the secretary of the commission and the representatives of the fourth-class postmasters themselves.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that I have figured that out and I think my figures are absolutely correct. The amendment reduces the salary of fourth-class postmasters. For instance, on cancellations under $300, say, the present salary is $241.50; under the House amendment it would be $245, which would make an increase of $3.50. If cancellations amount to $240, the present salary is $207; under the House amendment it would be $209, an increase of $2. If the cancellations amount to $200, under the present law the salary is $184; under the House amendment it would be $181.25. If the cancellations amount to $160, the present salary is $156.40, while under the House amendment there would be a reduction to $151.25. If the cancellations amount to $120, under the present law the salary is $128.80, whereas under the House amendment it would be reduced to $100. Under the House proposition there is no provision made at all where cancellations are between $100 and $125.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think undoubtedly the Senator from Mississippi is correct; I have not seen the figures stated, but I have a statement from the House committee which was sent to me. That statement showed that this proposal had been figured out, and that there was an increase; but the statement that was made to me was not in accord with the provision which appears in the House bill. I have had no opportunity to investigate the particular matter, and I assume the Senator from Mississippi is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. I have an amendment to offer at the proper time which I think will cover the matter and which sets forth just what the increase shall be. It would be very small, but would, I think, take care of this proposition. While not giving the fourth-class postmasters proportionally as great an increase as provided for other employees in the Postal Service, it would provide for them a very small increase.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am curious to know what is the purpose of making such trivial increases. The object of the legislation, as I understand, is to make a substantial and necessary increase in the compensation of these employees of the Government; but if, as is stated by the Senator from Mississippi, the proposition is to make a very slight increase and not a substantial increase, what is the use of taking the time to do it?

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to go a little further, but I thought perhaps this was the very best that the committee would stand for; and if the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] will permit me, while we are on this proposition I desire to suggest that the amendment which I desire to propose, which is along the line I have indicated, and which will not disarrange the bill at all, would answer the purpose. On cancellations of $75 or less the present salary is $103.50 a quarter. Under the proposed amendment it would be increased $5.25 a quarter, which would be $20 a year for fourth-class postmasters coming under that head. On cancellations from $75 to $100, under the present law they receive $115 a quarter. I propose to increase it to $125 a quarter. On cancellations from $100 to $150, under the present law the salary is $148.50 a quarter, and my amendment would increase it to $172.50. On cancellations from $150 to $200, under the present law the salary is $184 a quarter, and my amendment would raise it to $200 a quarter. On cancellations from $200 to $250, under the present law the salary is $212.75 a quarter, which would be increased under my amendment to $225. On cancellations from $250 to $300, under the present law the salary is $241.50, and under my amendment it would be increased to $247.50 a quarter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in further answer to the Senator from Arkansas, I desire to state that what the Senator from Mississippi is referring to is the compensation of fourth-class postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I so understand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The fact is that the total receipts from fourth-class post offices of the United States, as I recall, amount to about $23,000,000, whereas the compensation that is paid to the fourth-class postmasters amounts to something over $20,000,000, so that there is an excess of receipts over expenditures of less than $3,000,000 all told. As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi would increase the amount of compensation by something over a million dollars, and, so far as I am concerned, inasmuch as the House has amended the original proposition and there is a difference between the two, I have no objection at all to the Senate adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. The question may, then, go to conference. I think there has been some confusion as to exactly how much the actual increase would be. I know that in some cases the proposed compensation under the commission's report would be less than they are receiving now, and nobody favored that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say, in behalf of the commission, that, as the Senator from Michigan explained a while ago, this part of the report is the result of a mistake. The commission voted time and again upon the proposition that the compensation of fourth-class postmasters should not be less than the compensation they are now receiving, including the bonus they are getting. It is true that this is an expense to the Government, but the commission was unwilling to reduce the salary of any fourth-class postmaster in the country at present in the service.

The members of the commission who, as I recall, voted for that proposition were the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], and myself, and also Mr. ROUSE and Mr. BELL of the House. My recollection is that the vote was 6 to 4; that the question came up in one way or another half a dozen times, and every time it was decided that under no circumstances should the compensation of fourth-class postmasters be cut down. Yet this report when it came in was different from what the commission had ordered, and I think it is only fair to the commission the mistake be shown, because a mistake of some kind crept into the report after it was agreed upon. Those are the facts about it, and I wanted the Senate and the public to know them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection at all to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, so far as I know, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads also desired the compensation of fourth-class postmasters reasonably increased; there was no intention on the part of the committee to decrease their compensation in any way, for we believed they were entitled to a fair increase, and I think the amendment ought to pass.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the amendment, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair make a suggestion. It is impossible to amend the House text as it is, but the Chair will suggest that the Senator from Michigan, if he desires, may offer the Senate bill as a substitute for the House bill, striking out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserting the Senate bill, so that the bill may be perfected and passed in that way.

Mr. HARRISON. Every line of the House bill and the numbers of the lines are exactly as in the Senate bill. I have gone through it and I know that the amendment which I drafted to apply to the Senate bill will apply equally as well to the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair made the statement which he did because he had been given that information at the desk. The Chair is advised that there is but one blue print of the House bill, and if the House bill is used, it will be difficult properly to locate the amendments.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I had thought of following the suggestion of the Chair; but I am inclined to think that the more expeditious method for us to employ is to take up the House bill. I think it can be done, for the two bills are practically the same.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the amendment to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "140" and insert "145."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "115" and insert in lieu thereof "125."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 4, beginning with line 16, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 16, 17, and 18, and the part of line 19 ending with the words "per centum," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

> When the amount exceeds $100 for any one quarter the postmaster shall be allowed on $100 to $150 of cancellations 115 per cent; $150 to $200, 100 per cent; $200 to $250, 90 per cent; $250 to $300, 82½ per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there are one or two other amendments which I desire to offer to the House bill. There is a provision in the bill, for instance, as reported by the committee, changing the number of grades of clerks in first and second class post offices and carriers in the city delivery service. There are at present six grades. The commission has reported for five grades. It combines the present fifth and sixth grades in No. 5 grade. That is the clear intent, and the Post Office Department says it would so decide; but the language does not in express terms place the sixth grade in the fifth new grade, so the committee offers an amendment to make that clear. We also offer an amendment in connection with the promotion of clerks, which is in accordance with the understanding of the clerks and of the department itself, in order that there shall be no mistake. Therefore, after line 21 on page 22, I move to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After line 21, page 22, it is proposed to insert the following as a separate paragraph:

All employees herein provided for in automatic grades who have not reached the maximum grades to which they are entitled to progress automatically shall be promoted at the beginning of the quarter following the completion of one year's satisfactory service since their last promotion, regardless of any increases in salaries granted them by the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, Mr. President, on page 12, at the end of line 18, I move to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 12, at the end of line 18, after the numerals "$1,800," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That in the readjustment of grades for clerks at first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, to conform to the grades herein provided, grade 1 shall include present grade 1, grade 2 shall include present grade 2, grade 3 shall include present grade 3, grade 4 shall include present grade 4, and grade 5 shall include present grades 5 and 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Also, the word "Provided" on line 19 should be "Provided further."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on page 21, at the end of line 15, I offer the following amendment, which has reference to employees in the equipment shops of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. It appears that in the preparation of the bill those employees of the Government were omitted. Many of them are on the per diem plan, and we have figured out with the department and with the experts about what per cent these men should be increased in order to enjoy the same increases as similar men elsewhere. I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

That the compensation of the employees of the equipment shops under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General at Washington, D. C., shall be increased beyond that which they are now receiving as follows:
Those receiving $1,500 or more per annum, 10 per cent.
Those receiving compensation of $1,200 and less than $1,500 per annum, 15 per cent.
Those receiving compensation of less than $1,200 per annum, 20 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the reason why the commission did not report on these employees was this: Heretofore they have been carried sometimes under one department and sometimes under another, but not strictly under the Post Office Department, or at least there was some confusion, and they were not certified to the commission. It is perfectly right, however, that they should be included, and the commission has gone over this increase, and so far as the members of the commission are concerned I believe they have all agreed that this amendment should be adopted. The reason why it was not included was because of the confusion surrounding the particular status of these people.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in looking over the bill I fail to find in it any increase for the employees of the Motor Vehicle Service. I wondered if the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Michigan, would agree to insert a provision in this very amendment taking care of these men?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the item to which the Senator refers is cared for in the bill. That is provided as a lump-sum appropriation, and the Post Office Department understand and have agreed, and in fact submitted it in writing, that where these lump sums are provided the employees shall be increased pro rata with the increases that have been made for similar employees in the Government service who have not been classified. So there is no question but that under the terms of the bill all of these employees will receive the increases, although, of course, they are subject to the discretion and administration of the Post Office Department itself; but I know of no way in which that could be better accomplished.

Mr. CALDER. So that this matter may be taken care of without any legislation here on the subject?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to another amendment which the committee proposes. On page 20 of the House bill, in lines 22 and 23, the House bill and the committee's report provided as follows:

That inspectors shall be paid their actual expenses, not to exceed $5 per day, while engaged on official business away from their homes, their official domiciles, and their headquarters.

The fact of the matter is that there would be no place, as it seems to me, where they would ever get paid their expenses, because they would always be at one of those places. Now, the post-office inspector has a home. He is frequently ordered to headquarters or to an official domicile, as it is called, and he does his work there. He has the expenses of his home; he has his own expenses while he is at the domicile; and therefore the committee thought it was best and consonant with justice that he should have pay at this rate when he is away from his home. Therefore we struck out the words "their official domiciles, and their headquarters," so as to leave the provision without those words.

The amendment that I propose, therefore, is on page 20, lines 22 and 23, to strike out the words "their official domiciles, and their headquarters."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to say, in reference to that amendment, that I think the insertion of those words was simply a mistake, and that the commission did not intend that they should be a part of the provision, and I know that several members of the commission did not think they were a part of it until our attention was called to it in the committee. The amendment ought to be adopted by all means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the last amendment that the committee has to offer is on page 10, line 9. It has reference to the employees and supervisory officers in the post office here in the city of Washington.

There is a large amount of mail that passes through the post office here which is not stamped—a larger amount than any other office in the United States, by all odds. It is estimated by the postmaster here that about 75 per cent of the mail is without stamps; and therefore the compensation which is provided here, the excess of 30 per cent, does not meet the situation, and the officials in the post office here do not get the increases that are allowed in the other post offices of the country. We provide for the excess of 30 per cent. The proposition of the committee is to amend that by striking out "30" and inserting "60."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "30" and insert "60," so that it will read "60 per cent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee for just a moment. Of course I realize that we are all anxious to get through with this legislation as speedily as possible, and the Senator in charge of the bill has not taken the time to explain the various increases in the salaries. I wanted to inquire, however, if he had prepared a tabulated statement which would show just what these various increases are; and if so, will he not have it inserted in the RECORD for the benefit of Senators?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be glad to have that done. I want to say, Mr. President, that this bill does not in every respect suit the employees of the Post Office Department. The increases are not as great as practically every member of the committee would very much like to have made them, but they are made uniform. A reform, in my judgment, has been enacted in the Post Office Department which has been needed for many, many years. Heretofore there has been very little relation between the different positions in the post office, or even between the positions from which promotions are made from one to the other.

This bill provides for a uniform relation between the various positions in the Post Office Department, and it makes an aggregate increase of between $37,000,000 and $40,000,000. This, added to the fact that we have just passed a retirement bill, added to the further fact that the salaries are permanent, and that the cost of living may be reduced within a year, that it does give an adequate wage, as it seems to us, for the present services, makes it a desirable measure to adopt. It can not, I repeat, meet with the approval of all the people who are interested in the bill.

From the very nature of things, the commission having builded upon a foundation more or less hit-and-miss throughout the year, there have been some people who have not received as great increases as they thought they ought to receive.

So the bill has been prepared by a commission which has been as conscientious a commission—and I am saying this because I am not a member of the commission—as ever worked upon a problem, it seems to me, presented to it by the Senate of the United States, and I am personally very grateful to the commission for the very useful and great work which it has done in this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have just one word of explanation as to rural carriers. The amount fixed in the bill for rural carriers on a standard route of 24 miles, six days in the week, is $1,800. I thought it ought to be $1,900, and one or two other members of the commission thought so likewise. But the majority voted us down time and again, and the amount was fixed at $1,800.

I did not feel, under the circumstances, that there ought to be any minority report on this matter. I was not entirely satisfied with the pay of clerks and carriers, but that likewise was a matter of compromise. It was a question as to whether we got a bill through at this session of Congress before adjournment or not. Under those circumstances, while I had views which were different from those of a number of my colleagues on the commission, I felt, in order that something might be done at this session, that the report as agreed to should be passed.

I make this statement in explanation of my position on the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I am quite in accord with the statement made by the chairman that we were not all quite satisfied with the salaries, but in view of the late date the report of the commission was filed, we felt that it was better to have some legislation than none, and my support of the measure and anxiety to see it passed, Mr. President, is not due to any political preference, but because I feel that it is just and right.

Mr. President, in this connection I want to make just one comparison. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on the 12th day of March of this year the Joint Congressional Reclassification Commission filed its report, reclassifying the salaries of Federal employees in the District of Columbia. Within a week or 10 days thereafter a bill was introduced by the chairman of that commission, and that bill and the report are now resting in the committee.

Mr. President, the Federal employees in the District of Columbia have no vote. I trust that this quick action on the part of the Senate and the House in reclassifying the salaries of the postal employees in the United States is not due to the votes which might be cast the coming November, and that they all feel that this increase in salary is justly due them.

So, Mr. President, on behalf of the Federal employees in the District of Columbia, who have no vote, I shall ask that the report of the Joint Reclassification Commission may be considered at the earliest possible date.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. BECKHAM conferees on the part of the Senate.

NOMINATION OF MRS. ANNETTE ABBOTT ADAMS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have here the nomination of Mrs. Annette Abbott Adams, of San Francisco, which I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, to report favorably from the Judiciary Committee, and I ask that it be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the nomination.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. As in open executive session, the Senator from Minnesota reports from the Committee on the Judiciary the name of Mrs. Annette Abbott Adams, of San Francisco, Calif., to be Assistant Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider the bill (H. R. 11984) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up House bill 14335, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes. This is one of the supply appropriation bills, which must be a senior and preferred measure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understand the pending motion is to take up the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska has moved that the Patent Office bill be taken up. The Senator from Wyoming has moved that the deficiency appropriation bill be taken up. The Chair rules that the deficiency appropriation bill has precedence, and that the motion of the Senator from Wyoming is in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I appeal from that decision. There is not any justice whatever in it.

Mr. WARREN. The rule provides for it.

Mr. LODGE. The rule so provides.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it does not provide for it.

Mr. WARREN. It provides exactly that a motion to take up an appropriation bill has precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the ruling of the Chair is sustained. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14335) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, at the time of the passage of the postal-clerk bill the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] was on his feet desiring to secure a yea-and-nay vote. There were a number of Senators who voted against taking up that bill because it would displace the minimum-wage bill. They wanted an opportunity to vote in order to show by the RECORD that they were for the postal clerks' bill. That unfortunate situation arose as a choice between those two bills. I make this suggestion for myself, and I know for a number of others who were as enthusiastically for the postal bill as they could be, but had to make the choice.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I was very much in favor of the passage of this bill, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] just stated the reason why I wanted a record vote on it. But I did not think there was a quorum present, and the bill would have to go over until to-morrow. That is the reason why I did not insist on my request. I do not know of a single Senator who is opposed to this just measure which has been too long delayed. The postal employees have been underpaid, and they are entitled to even a greater increase than is provided for in this measure.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I do not know that it made any particular difference whether there was a roll call on the passage of the postal clerks' bill or not. There was not a man in the Senate, to my knowledge, who was opposed to it. On the contrary, so far as I know, practically all the Senators who voted against the displacement of the minimum-wage bill were very earnestly and heartily in favor, as I was, of the enactment of the postal bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to omit the formal reading of the bill, and that the bill be first read for amendments, and that committee amendments be considered first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

ANTHRACITE COAL COMMISSION.

Salaries and expenses of officers, employees and witnesses, including personal services in the District of Columbia, purchase of supplies, printing and binding, reporting proceedings, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, in accordance with the act approved

August 1, 1914 (38 Stat., 680), and for all other necessary expenses in connection therewith; in all $10,000, to continue available until June 30, 1921.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the time has come when forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. The Committee on Patents have had under consideration a bill which is just as important to the Patent Office as the bill which has just passed is important to the Post Office Department. But for some reason or other, some unknown and unseen power, which seems to control in the Senate, has always and on every occasion blocked any opportunity to get that bill up for consideration. We had a session of the Senate night before last and we were all importuned very earnestly to be present. I know I went to considerable effort to get here. I live out quite a distance and by the time I had walked home, 5 miles, and walked back, I was late and did not get time enough even to eat, and for a man who had not had any lunch that was quite an effort.

When I got here I discovered that somebody, alleged leaders who control in one way or another the legislation of this body on both sides, had made an agreement that nothing could be considered except the particular bill which they had in view, and I was unable to get any opportunity to take up the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Patents.

Long before that, on various occasions and at various times, I had tried to have it taken up. I was anxious not to interfere with appropriation bills and conference reports, and was always willing, and even if there has been a contest in regard to it, as far as I was concerned, to yield to their consideration.

But something always happened; there was some reason, and I was put off and off. It is true I did not have the indorsement of a committee that has some kind of an existence—I do not even know who the Members are—called the "steering" committee. I am not charging that they were to blame for it. I do not know that they had anything to do about it. But somebody, somewhere, every time, was ready to do something to prevent the taking up of that bill.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was willing that the postal bill should be taken up. He made no effort to displace that. The Senate has agreed on a resolution to adjourn without day, thus making it impossible for any Senator to get anything before the Senate, regardless of its importance, unless this unseen power is in accord and is willing that it should be taken up.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I was very sorry to be compelled to take the right of seniority which belongs to these supply bills, but we had to hold laborious conferences on them; hence haste is essential. I do not oppose the Senator's bill. On the contrary, I have expected to support it, but I have not been in consultation with anyone who wished to put it aside, and if there is any unseen power, it is unknown to me.

Mr. NORRIS. It is even unknown to me, and it always was; but it crops out somewhere and always operates. I am not complaining of the Senator in trying to get up the bill he has in charge.

Mr. WARREN. I should have moved it earlier in the evening, but there were three other matters here struggling for recognition, and it seemed to me the shortest way to get at this bill was to wait awhile; but finally matters got to the point where I was compelled to move the consideration of this important supply bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator that if he will stay until these matters which have priority are disposed of—and I think there is but one more—I will stay with him if it takes until to-morrow night.

Mr. NORRIS. I expect to stay, but the Senator knows that by that time a point of order will put this bill out of operation.

Mr. WARREN. I do not quite understand why a point of order will do it.

Mr. NORRIS. A point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, we shall have a quorum to-morrow if not to-night.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I do not speak for everyone on our side of the aisle, because I do not know, but so far as I have heard there is no objection to the bill to which the Senator refers. There may be objection, but I do not know of it. I know of no reason, if we pass the supply bills and the pending conference reports and the Senator can obtain recognition, why there should be any serious resistance to the bill to which he refers, but I do see a very earnest reason, if we are going to adjourn finally on Saturday, why the pending appropriation bill should be disposed of to-night.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator. I am not going to filibuster against the bill. If I had intended to do that, I would have objected to the waiving of the formal reading of the bill, which would take a long time. I am not engaged in a filibuster, but I want to state to the Senate a few things and possibly let the country know a few things.

Mr. WARREN. I am sorry I did not express gratification to the Senator for his action. I noticed that he did not object, and I felt grateful, and felt that we were moving in the same direction and with the same purpose. And I intend moving with him for his bill, as I know that he is moving with me for this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The Patent Office is almost in a condition now where it ceases to function. I was told to-day by officials, and I know it of my own knowledge in several instances, that employees there—and they are necessary employees—would remain if the bill went into conference, because they would expect then, even though it went over until December, that they would eventually get relief. But if something of that kind is not done before we adjourn, when we come back here in December the Patent Office will practically be out of business.

It has a great many highly scientific men in it. They are almost all, with the exception of the ordinary clerks, high-class scientific men and ought to be. The Patent Office has been losing them right along. The bill reclassifies them somewhat like the bill for reclassification of employees in the Post Office Department. There was some objection to some of the increased salaries. In order to have something done, as representing the committee, I have agreed with those who have objected, I think, on every salary increase in the bill.

I wish to say to the Senate that although these salaries are increased with a view to keeping valuable men in the service, the bill also increases the fees that patentees must pay, so that it is going to bring in more money in the way of a surplus, if we pass the bill, then the law does now. Everybody who studies it knows that the Patent Office is one of the bureaus of the Government out of which the Government makes a financial profit every year. It more than pays it way. The report in this case shows that the surplus will be increased even if we leave the salaries as they are fixed in the bill.

We have agreed, in order to bring about a cessation of opposition, in some cases I think meritorious, to a reduction, and to amendments running through the salaries that will reduce them as set forth in the bill. Aside from that there are two other provisions in the bill to which I wish to call attention. One of them, as far as I know, has brought on no controversy, and I will not stop to discuss it.

Another one is a new section which the Committee on Patents has added to the bill, which is a House bill. We added as an amendment a bill that had already passed the Senate. We have had extended hearings on it. The House committee had extended hearings, and we had joint hearings, and the action of both committees has been unanimous, but since the bill has passed the Senate there has been some opposition.

In going over the bill with those who opposed it—and that is an amendment on the bill—the members of the committee reached the conclusion that there was some justification for the construction that was put on it by objectors, and we have agreed again that those objections shall be met by proper amendments. As far as I know, no Member of the Senate who has gone over the bill with me has failed to be satisfied after I have explained the amendments that we propose to offer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I desire to state to the Senator that, so far as I am advised, there is only one Senator upon this side who desires to make any observations concerning the bill. I am not sure whether he has any objection to it or not. My advices now are that he has no objection to it, but he may desire to submit some observations, though I would not desire to state that definitely. I think I can assure the Senator that if he asks to take up his bill to-morrow he will find upon this side of the Chamber a very ready response, after the supply bills are out of the way.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I would not wish to interfere with the supply bills if I thought I was getting a square deal. I do not desire to be understood as trying to insist that anyone shall waive any objection he may have to the bill or any part of it. I only wish an opportunity to be heard and let it be voted on.

The amendment that brought forth some objection, not from inventors, but from great corporations like the National Chemical Co., the great fertilizer trust, and other things like that, has been the amendment of which I was speaking when the Senator from Utah interrupted me. As I said, it is in the form of a bill that once passed the Senate. It provides that the Federal Trade Commission shall have authority to receive assignments of patents from employees of the Government and others, and then license people to manufacture the patented article. The language would bear a construction, I think, that the committee never intended it should, that would give the Federal Trade Commission or the Government authority perhaps to manufacture the patented article. There was no idea on the part of the committee to do that, and we will offer an amendment that will make it perfectly plain that there shall be no such construction of the law possible.

While Senators are listening I wish to tell them just briefly, so it will perhaps be unnecessary to state it later when the bill comes up, just what we expect to have accomplished. To my mind, it is of as much importance as the reorganization of the Patent Office itself. We have in the Government employ a large number of scientific men, in the Bureau of Standards, in the Bureau of Chemistry, in the Bureau of Mines, and perhaps some other bureaus. They are high-class men, wedded to their profession, particularly in the Bureau of Chemistry, which has excited so much interest during the war and since all over the world. They are continually making inventions and improvements.

The provision is intended to give an employee of the Government who makes such an improvement the right to turn it over to the Federal Trade Commission, and the Federal Trade Commission then to license some one to manufacture it. The license fee shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and out of that fee the President of the United States is authorized to give to the inventor whatever in his judgment he thinks the proper compensation as his share of the revenues that come in from it.

Scientific men all over the country are unanimously behind that provision. They think and I believe and the committee were unanimous in the belief that it would result in putting on the market for the benefit of all the people a great many inventions that are not now put on the market. For instance, in the Bureau of Chemistry a chemist invents some particular thing that in his laboratory works out to perfection. It may revolutionize some line of industry. It may be one of the steps only in the manufacture of some very useful article that is used by all the people, and according to his test and his laboratory experiments it works out all right, but it is often found, and it has been the history of all these inventions throughout the world, that when they come to work them out on a large commercial scale, they do not work. It sometimes requires two or three or even five hundred thousand dollars to give it a test on a commercial basis.

If one of those chemists invents something of that kind and gives it to the world, as they often do, without trying to take it from anyone, what is the result of it? No one puts his money into it to manufacture it because he knows that if he succeeds and spends a whole lot of money to do it, he has then demonstrated that it can be done on a commercial basis and everyone comes in and he has no protection and hence he does not take the risk. If he takes the risk and loses, he loses all his money.

Then again some of these great institutions and great corporations like the National Chemical Co. and the fertilizer companies and others of a similar nature have themselves a large number of experts in the particular line of their business studying continually for improvements and getting their improvements patented, so that the ordinary individual without any money like a Government clerk can not compete with them. The amendment is not confined to the Government clerk. Anyone can take advantage of it, but it is not expected that there will be much of this except from the Government expert. He gets some little thing patented and he has not the money to develop it and he can not induce anybody to put it out. He may sell it to one of these big companies that controls the field and that has a monopoly, and it may be that it will be to their interest to put the patent in a pigeonhole and never permit it to be used. I am told that there are thousands and thousands of patents that have been issued for years, and that are never put into use. No one gets the benefit of them because the men who have them can make more money by keeping them out of use than by going into the manufacture of them where they already have control of the particular line. So that the man who does make the invention under present conditions is at the mercy of the great trusts or combinations. He can not go into business in competition with them, and the result is that there is nothing done.

Thousands of these inventions are valuable. I have had my attention called in detail to some of them showing that no one gets the benefit of them. The bill is intended to give the people of the country the opportunity to get the benefit of such inventions. It is not compulsory. No man is required to do it. He can do it if he wants to and retain it himself if he so desires. There is nothing compulsory about it.

Mr. President, I felt that I ought to say this much. Quite a propaganda on the part of some of these great corporations has gone out over the country, containing a great many reports, as I have learned of them, that are not true and are not justified. Some Members of Congress have been frightened about it, but when I have explained what it really was I have never failed yet to satisfy any fair-minded man.

I wish to call it to the attention of the Senate now, that if we adjourn next Saturday and do not get this bill as far as conference, in my judgment we will return next December to find the Patent Office in a very much disorganized condition. It is way behind now. I desire, as soon as the appropriation bills and conference reports are out of the way, to have an opportunity to let the Senate pass on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment at the top of page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 4, after line 6, to insert:

IMPROVEMENTS AND REPAIRS.

For current work of repairs to suburban roads and suburban streets, including maintenance of motor vehicles, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public schools," on page 5, after line 3, to insert:

Teachers: The increased compensation granted teachers in the public schools in House bill No. 13266, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," as passed the Senate and sent to conference is hereby made applicable to such purposes for the fiscal year 1921, and a sum sufficient to pay such increases is hereby appropriated.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that item and another which follows it are in the nature of a precaution in order to insure the appropriation. They are already in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which has now passed through conference and will be reported upon later; but as it may be some time before the House considers the conference report, it is better that they should be inserted, and I propose to leave them in this measure and let them go to conference in order that we may be sure that in one bill or the other they will prevail.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment which is about to be agreed to by the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator propose it as an amendment to the pending committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, it is a proposed addition to the committee amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the committee amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After line 12, page 5, it is proposed to insert the following:

To make effective as of January 1, 1920, the increase in salary granted to the teachers and librarians of the public schools of the District of Columbia as provided for in H. R. 13266 of the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which increases from January 1, 1920, to June 30, 1920, as provided in said H. R. 13266, as the same was sent to conference, shall be paid said teachers and librarians on or before June 30, 1920, $405,468.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the amendment to the committee amendment, as suggested, has the approval of the special committee of the Senate created to investigate the educational system of the District of Columbia. We learned through our inquiry that the teachers of the District were very grievously underpaid.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. WARREN. The matter has not reached a state where we may entertain the amendment, because it has not been estimated for. Nor has the amendment been presented to the committee for consideration. Therefore I shall have to make a point of order against it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I assumed, Mr. President, that a point of order would probably be raised against the amendment; but I simply want to say that it represents an effort on the part of the members of the special committee to do justice to the school-teachers of this District, who, we believe, have been underpaid and who will not receive checks for their salaries until next October. The amendment seeks to compensate them by giving them an increased payment to which every member of the special committee of the Senate believes they are entitled, and believes that in justice and in fairness they ought to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming make the point of order against the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, after line 9, to insert:

Section 2 of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the control of the public schools of the District of Columbia is hereby vested in a board of education to consist of six members, all of whom shall have been for seven years immediately preceding their appointment bona fide residents of the District of Columbia. The members of the board of education shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of three years each, except that the original appointments under this act shall be as follows: Two for one year, two for two years, and two for three years, the terms of each to be designated by the President, and members shall be eligible for reappointment. Vacancies for unexpired terms, caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The board shall meet for organization within 30 days after appointment. They shall appoint a secretary, who shall not be a member of the board, and they shall hold stated meetings at least once a month during the school year and such additional meetings as they may from time to time provide for. The organization meeting, and all meetings whatsoever thereafter, shall be open to the public, except committee meetings dealing with the appointment of teachers.

"No appointment, promotion, transfer, or dismissal of any director, supervising principal, principal, head of department, teachers, or any other subordinate to the superintendent of schools, shall be made by the board of education, except upon the written recommendation of the superintendent of schools.

"The board shall determine all questions of general policy relating to the schools, shall appoint the executive officers hereinafter provided for, define their duties, and direct expenditures. All expenditures of public funds for such school purposes shall be made and accounted for as now provided by law under the direction and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The board shall appoint all teachers in the manner hereinafter prescribed and all other employees provided for in this act.

"The board of education shall annually on the 1st day of October transmit to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia an estimate in detail of the amount of money required for the public schools for the ensuing year, and said commissioners shall transmit the same in their annual estimate of appropriations for the District of Columbia, with such recommendations as they may deem proper.

"The board of education, appointed in accordance with the provisions of such act of June 20, 1906, is hereby abolished as of the date of the enactment of this amendatory act.

"The chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on the District of Columbia under the provisions of this amendatory act are authorized and directed to cause a complete survey to be made of the public schools of the District of Columbia in order to determine and to recommend, by report to Congress, the new buildings, grounds, including playgrounds and equipment, deemed necessary, and such changes in educational methods, administrative affairs, and other essential details as are deemed advisable and appropriate; and for this purpose there is hereby appropriated the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended and to be accounted for under the supervision of said chairmen, one-half of which shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this afternoon, immediately after a roll call, unanimous consent was granted suspending the general rules of the Senate and making the amendment applicable to this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I take it, even without going into that, that the amendment will have to be offered again. The rules are not suspended now authorizing the committee to present the amendment.

As the question has been raised, I desire to say that this is certainly a very unusual proceeding. I question the right of the Senate to suspend a rule of this character, at any rate before the bill is under consideration by the Senate. The Senate was not considering this measure when the action was taken to which the Senator from Mississippi refers.

I remember that the Vice President has ruled several times that a special order can not be made by unanimous consent with reference to a bill that was not under consideration at the time the request was made; and if that is correct—and that has been the ruling of the Vice President—then an order of the Senate of this kind with reference to a bill that is not before the Senate and that has not been brought up for consideration can not be made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my friend yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator recall many instances of notices being given that a motion would be made to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; that is expressly provided for by the rules.

Mr. KING. As I understand, that is substantially the situation here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; no notice was ever given of any intention of this kind. That is what I complain about.

I want to say to the Senator—and the Senator, I think, will agree with me—that not only is this a very unusual proceeding, but I do not think in my 11 years of service here it has ever been done before; and if such things can be done in the Senate, what protection has any Senator with reference to any matter in which he may be interested? If he happens to be out of the Chamber on business of some kind or otherwise, a Senator knowing his attitude with reference to a proposition may come before the Senate and ask unanimous consent that the rules may be suspended, and the absent Senator has lost his rights. I think the Senator will see that if that is to be the practice in this body, then, indeed, we can not foresee what will develop with reference to our legislation.

I can not think that the Senator from Mississippi intended to take any advantage of anybody; I have too much respect for him and for his sense of fairness and fair dealing to think that; and yet it is a strange proceeding.

I assume that the Senator knew that I was going to make the point of order against this amendment. I advised the Committee on Appropriations to that effect this morning. I went to the committee room, and the matter was called to my attention, and I advised them that I would make the point of order. I had to go to the Commerce Committee. I had called a meeting of that committee to consider a very important bill, and so I had to leave. During the day I met the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who, I understood, was interested in this proposition, and I advised him that I expected to make the point of order against it. I intended to speak to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], but he was very busy. I did not run across him, and so did not get to speak to him until later on in the day, when I was advised that while I was up in the Commerce Committee this request had been made for unanimous consent to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. When the Senator from Mississippi made his request, it was so unusual that I questioned it myself. I happened to be away from the Committee on Appropriations when the notice was given by the Senator that he intended to make the point of order against this amendment. I want to say to the Senator from Washington that if I had known that I certainly would have objected when the request was made. I did not know it, however, at the time the request was made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is fair that I should say that the committee was not in session while I was there. I do not believe there was any member of the committee there, but I left word with the clerk. My meeting of the Commerce Committee was called for exactly the same time as the meeting of the Appropriations Committee, and I think I was there about five minutes before the time, and went through to report and authorize myself to be counted for a quorum, and then went on up to the Commerce Committee.

Mr. President, the rule of the Senate with reference to these matters reads as follows:

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof.

Mr. President, that is to put Senators on their notice of an intention to change one of the most important rules of this body—that is, the rule prohibiting general legislation upon appropriation bills.

Of course the rule goes on to say:

Any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate, except as otherwise provided in clause 1, Rule XII.

Yet I submit that it is contrary to the spirit of the rule, contrary to the intention of the rule, contrary to the practice of the Senate, and contrary to the rules of fairness that when a Senator steps out a Senator shall ask unanimous consent that the rules be suspended; and, furthermore, as I said a while ago, even if unanimous consent is asked, it should be asked while the bill is under consideration.

Suppose that a bill is brought up to which it is known that a Senator objects. We frequently find Senators rising on the floor and advising them that a Senator has objection to that bill, and I do not think it has ever been insisted that the bill shall pass under those conditions. I have known cases where bills have passed that Senators knew other Senators were opposed to, and when the next day the Senator would come in and state that fact, by unanimous consent, the vote on the bill would be reconsidered, and it would be put back on the calendar.

I feel sure that the Senator from Mississippi, on reflection, will not insist that advantage should be taken of the consent given by the Senate to-day. I know that he is very much interested in this matter. I know that he has given a great deal of his time and a great deal of study to the school conditions here in the District. I know that he wants to improve those conditions. I want to improve those conditions. I recognize the situation here. I question very seriously, however, whether or not this will remedy the condition. At any rate, I think it ought to have very careful consideration by the regular District Committee of the Senate; and, at any rate, the Senate ought to have an opportunity to consider this proposition, consider what it deals with, and all that sort of thing.

But even greater than that, Mr. President, is the proposition involved with reference to the way in which it is sought to keep this provision in this bill. I do not believe that the Senator from Mississippi, when he reflects upon it, will ask that this should be done.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, has the Senator finished?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have finished temporarily; yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi had to do over again what he did do, he would do exactly as he did do. He did it, and he is very glad that he did it, and he hopes that the Senate will adopt this amendment.

What the Senator from Mississippi did was not unusual. I took advantage of the rules of the Senate in order to have a provision considered by the Senate that is of very great interest to the people of the city of Washington.

The rule that the Senator talks about is that—

> No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice, in writing, specifying precisely the rule—

And so forth. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] rose to serve notice that he wanted to have a night session in order to take up the deficiency bill. I was preparing a motion, under the rules, to suspend, that would have had to obtain a two-thirds vote in order to make this provision applicable in the consideration of the deficiency bill; but when the Senator wanted to consider this bill to-night, being very glad and happy to cooperate in the speedy consideration of it, I then asked unanimous consent, as provided for in the rule, that the rules be suspended when the deficiency bill was taken up for consideration, so far as this particular provision was concerned, calling the attention of the Senate to what I expected to do and what the amendment did.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] was in his seat. I had spoken to him about it, and he said he had no objection to this provision. Why, I had never heard that the Senator had lifted his voice in the Senate here against the proposition. I had understood that he was opposed to the president of the school board, and so I took advantage of the rules of the Senate, and the provision is here. I can not understand how a point of order can be sustained to it now. If the rules were ever followed, they were followed in this instance. This provision should be considered. I resorted to this method in order to make it applicable to this bill because of the peculiar conditions existing in the school situation here; and what are the conditions?

Five members of the select-school committee, after two months of consideration of this proposition, unanimously agreed that the President should name the school board, and that it should be composed of six members, and that the Senate should confirm it, changing the present law, taking away from the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia the right to name them, and reducing the number, as I say, to six. Now, we have considered it. We were together on that proposition, and yet the Senator from Washington, who perhaps has not read a line of the testimony, says it should not be changed. It is a clear question. If the Senate want to vote down the recommendation of the select committee, and think we were all wrong in the consideration of the question, and that they know more about it without considering it than we did after two months of hard work and consideration, then they can follow the suggestion of the Senator from Washington; but if this provision is not incorporated in this bill, and the Congress adjourns, you have seen what has appeared in the papers; it is no secret that the present board refuses to meet here in the city. A majority of the members are out of the city, so the morning paper says. The present superintendent is elected until the 30th of June, when his time expires. Is the Congress to adjourn and leave the people in the District of Columbia without schools, without management of them, and everything up in the air?

It certainly seems to me that we owe it to the people here to let them know what the policy shall be, whether or not the Senate agrees with the select committee, and this is the only way we can do it. We can not pass a special bill. If there is going to be no change in the law, then this confusion worse confounded will continue to exist. So I submit that the point of order is not well taken, and that it should be overruled, and that the Senate should adopt the amendment that we have proposed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the report of the special committee. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to do that. I have not had time to consider it as it ought to be considered. Everybody knows that this special report was not brought before the Senate until just a few days ago, when it was discussed here one evening by the Senator from Mississippi. I heard very much of that discussion. I have not had time to consider it since, and I think I am in attendance on the Senate just about as closely as any Member of the Senate. I try to be here. I am here all of the time that I can be. During the last two days I have not been able to be on the floor of the Senate as much as I should like. I have had considerable work in connection with the conference report on the merchant marine bill. We worked on that bill day before yesterday from 10 o'clock in the morning until 8 o'clock the next morning. We did not have very much time to consider other matters—I did not, at any rate—during that time, and I should like to have an opportunity to consider this bill upon its merits.

But, Mr. President, as I said a while ago—and I say it in all earnestness—is it possible that the Senate will approve, can approve, this method of procedure? If we do, then all I have to do with reference to a matter to which some Senator objects is to wait until he goes out and then ask unanimous consent of the Senate to do what I want done that I know he does not want done or ask for the passage of any bill that I want passed that I know a Senator objects to. Of course, it is in accordance with the rule for me to ask unanimous consent to consider a bill that I know a Senator objects to, but I have never done it in my 11 years' experience here.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator had not said anything to me about this matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know I had not. I had not had an opportunity.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senator at no time had raised his voice here about this proposition. The only two Senators who had raised their voices on the school proposition on the floor of the Senate were——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of Washington. In just a moment. Did not the Senator know when he asked unanimous consent of the Senate to suspend the rules that I expected to make a point of order against his amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I was afraid the Senator would make it, and that was one of the reasons why I was going to offer the motion to suspend the rules, so that this amendment would be in order; but when the Senator from Wyoming served notice that he expected to call up this bill to-night and the rule said you must give one day's notice in order to file your motion to suspend the rules, then I wanted to get my unanimous consent through if I could. There was a very full attendance of the Senate at the time, because the point of no quorum had been raised on the proposition when the Senator from Wyoming said there would be a night session.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if there was a quorum call, I answered on the call; I have not any doubt about that. I want to ask the Senator if he had not been informed that I intended to make a point of order on the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; some Senator told me that the Senator from Washington would probably make the point of order on the proposition, and I was very fearful that the Senator would make it, and I wanted to pass the motion to suspend in order to keep the Senator from making his point of order. I did it in the interest of the schools here and in the interest of the situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the issue is plain to the Senate. I am going to let the Senate pass upon it. I am going to let the Senate do whatever they think it is proper to do. I have made the point of order against it. If the point of order is overruled, under the circumstances, then I want to see whether or not the Senate will adopt an amendment under those circumstances.

I made the point that it was not in order to make the request to suspend the rules when the bill was not under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant was not presiding at the time the rule was invoked, but I have before me the official reporter's transcript. It seems that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] addressed the Chair as follows:

Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations, in the consideration of the general deficiency bill, House bill 14335, have agreed to place two propositions in the bill touching a change in the school board. The amendments which I submitted, intended to be proposed by me to the bill, read as follows.

Then the amendments are inserted. Then the RECORD continues:

Of course, that proposes a change in existing law, and it is legislation on an appropriation bill and will be subject, perhaps, to a point of order. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the rule of the Senate, clause 3 of rule 16, be suspended, so that these amendments to that appropriation bill may be in order. Under the Senate rule I must obtain unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi had better make that request when the bill is up for consideration and when we will know what the amendments are.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is familiar with the proposed amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I am familiar with the amendments and I have no objection to the consideration of the amendments, but I hardly think it proper now to ask unanimous consent that the rules be suspended for the purpose of voting upon the amendments when they come up in the Senate at some future time.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, under the rule I would have to give a day's notice.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator from Wyoming desires to bring up the appropriation bill and consider it to-night. I am merely trying to expedite matters, if I can get unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator could get unanimous consent this evening as well as he can now.

Mr. HARRISON. I may not be able to do that.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator from Mississippi is not asking for a suspension of the rule except as to this one matter?

Mr. HARRISON. That is all.

Mr. WARREN. That does not expose the bill to an exemption from the rule as to other items?

Mr. HARRISON. No; just the one proposition about changing the school board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that when the general deficiency appropriation bill comes before the Senate clause 3 of Rule XVI may be suspended for the purpose of considering amendments touching the school system of the city of Washington. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

The present occupant of the chair will not undertake to pass upon whether this is a good or a bad practice. The fact remains that the Senate did give unanimous consent to suspend the rule on this amendment. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken, and it is therefore overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the amendment, though I would like to do it. I recognize the importance of getting this bill through. I had concluded that I would take whatever time was necessary to defeat the bill if the Senator insisted, under the circumstances, in putting this amendment on the bill. But I have reflected over it, and first impulses, I find, are not generally the wisest to follow, so I have decided not to do it. Therefore I am not going to discuss the merits of it, except simply to say that I do not think this is the way to settle the dispute here in this city. I was disappointed at the recommendation of the special committee, recommending the retention of the present superintendent of schools. Regardless of his merits as a man, as an educator, and otherwise, the controversy has reached such a stage that he should not, in the interest of the schools, be retained as superintendent of these schools any longer. I would like to discuss it, but I am not going to do so.

Mr. President, under the facts as brought out I do not think, regardless of the merits of this amendment, that the Senate should adopt it, but I am going to leave it to the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the recommendations of the committee do not, I understand, require the retention of the superintendent of schools. The new board, if one shall be organized under this bill, will have full authority to select whom they please for that very important position.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator, although I did not intend to go into the argument, that they do suggest that he be kept on for a while. That is the recommendation to the new board.

Mr. KING. That is a mere suggestion by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I am not going to argue it.

Mr. KING. The board named would have full authority in the matter. In my opinion, the present board has been guilty of the grossest inefficiency. I think the committee which went into this matter rendered a very excellent public service, and I am delighted with the report, and very happy to follow it. I want to make this one observation, Mr. President: I sincerely hope that in the future when persons shall be named by the President for positions in this city they will not be carpetbaggers, but that men will be appointed who have an interest in the city, who are identified with the city, and have the confidence of the people—men who have no other homes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Judging from the past, may not the Senator expect the President to do things of that kind?

Mr. KING. I am not defending some of the appointments made by the President with respect to the District of Columbia, but I hope there will be better appointments made in the future.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words in explanation of my vote on this amendment.

I never heard of the matter until to-night. I am very loath to do anything that is personally disagreeable to any Member of this body on either side of the Chamber. But, the Chair having decided that the amendment is in order, I want to say that I regard the amendment of such supreme importance to the welfare of the schools of the District of Columbia that I think its importance should be placed above the personal feelings of a Member of the Senate. There is no Member of the Senate whom I would be more loath to do anything disagreeable to than the esteemed Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I feel that way toward all the Members of the Senate. But this is a matter of such extreme importance that I think it my duty to vote for the amendment, although it may be objectionable to some Senators.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the request that when the Senate takes a recess it shall be until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 373. Joint resolution declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SIERRA NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2789) for the consolidation of forest lands in the Sierra National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to reocmmand and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the House amendment insert the following: "and in determining the relative values of the lands or timber to be exchanged, consideration shall be given to any reservations which either party may make of timber, minerals, or easements"; and the House agree to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 3566. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," approved February 5, 1917;

S. 4402. An act authorizing Troup County, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River near West Point, Ga.;

S. 4212. An act to authorize the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey to construct a bridge across the waters of the Delaware River between the city of Easton, in the State of Pennsylvania, and the city of Phillipsburg, in the State of New Jersey;

S. 4286. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $75,000, for the purpose of constructing and installing a municipal electric-light and power plant, and for the construction of a public-school building," approved September 29, 1919; and

S. 4427. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Columbus, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States," with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXPORTATION OF PULP WOOD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States, which were, on page 3, line 5, to strike out "Congress" and insert "President, on or before December 1, 1920," and on page 3, line 8, to strike out "or their modification."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is a newsprint and wood-pulp measure that was passed in the Senate some time ago and practically agreed to unanimously in the House, with two clerical amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the House may be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendments of the House are concurred in.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14335) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Metropolitan police," on page 11, after line 7, to insert:

House of detention: For repairs, alterations, and equipment of the House of Detention of the District of Columbia, Fifteenth Street and Ohio Avenue NW., to continue available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Washington Asylum and Jail," on page 14, line 20, after "1920," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$11,500," so as to make the clause read:

Support of prisoners: For maintenance of jail prisoners, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $11,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Federal Board for Vocational Education," on page 17, line 16, after the word "made," to insert "Provided further, That the board may, after the passage of this act, pay, subject to the conditions and limitations prescribed by section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act as amended, to all trainees undergoing training under said section residing in congested centers of population where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high, in lieu of the monthly payments for maintenance and support prescribed by section 2, as amended, such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support and for the maintenance and support of persons dependent upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $100 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $120 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act," so as to make the clause read:

Vocational rehabilitation: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, funeral and other incidental expenses (including the transportation of remains) of deceased trainees of the board, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, law books, books of reference, and periodicals, $7,000,000: Provided, That the salary limitations placed upon the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 19, 1919, shall apply to the appropriation herein made: Provided further, That the board may, after the passage of this act, pay, subject to the conditions and limitations prescribed by section 2 of the vocational rehabilitation act as amended, to all trainees undergoing training under said section residing in congested centers of population where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high, in lieu of the monthly payments for maintenance and support prescribed by section 2, as amended, such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support and for the maintenance and support of persons dependent upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $100 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $120 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances under section 204 of article 2 of the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to suggest an amendment to this provision. The House has passed a bill upon the subject, which is before the Senate, and I think Senators are ready to agree to the House provision. This provision adds an additional restriction, and I hope the chairman of the committee will consent to remove it. On line 20 he limits this increase to "trainees * * * residing in congested centers of population where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high."

My motion is to strike from this amendment the words "residing in congested centers of population where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high." It still contains the words of limitation beginning with line 24. It limits the amount of the increase to "such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support and for the maintenance and support of persons dependent upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $100 per month for a single man without dependents."

Mr. President, I think it ought to be a flat provision for the $20 a month increase to each injured soldier. We take up the question of service pensions with enthusiasm and pass them without hesitation. The Senate almost passed the bill for a minimum wage of $1,080 to the least efficient of our Government employees.

I do not consider $100 a month for the maintenance of an injured soldier whose injuries are such that he can not continue in the vocation which he followed before he was wounded is excessive. I do not think $120 to one who has dependents is excessive. I believe we have gone too far in pensioning those who have not been injured in the military service and have been careless and disregardful of our obligations to those who were actually injured.

I have visited a number of these institutions where these injured men are located, and I have looked into the occupations which they followed before their injury. I have found that the average man among them would be making at least $150 a month but for his injuries. I have found many of them receiving $80 a month whose earning capacity before their injuries were received was $250 a month. At present we allow them $80 a month for a single man without dependents and $100 a month for a married man or one with dependents.

Mr. WARREN. We allow an additional amount for children, of course. Even under the present law they can get as high as $150 or $160, and with this addition of $20 it goes that much higher.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would require a very large family to give $160 a month. What I ask is a flat addition of the $20. For a single man $100 a month is little enough. We are ready to give $1,080 to the least trained and least efficient of our Government employees. Are we unwilling to give $100 to a wounded soldier for his maintenance? None of them under the law can receive this training unless their injuries are such as to make it impossible for them to continue in their former line of occupation. Many of these men are armless, many of them legless, many of them with many wounds upon their persons, all of them disqualified from continuing in their former occupation. Few of them did not make over $100 a month before their injuries were received, and many of them made from $100 to $250 a month before their injuries were received.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thank the Senator. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator. Will he again state the amendment which he proposes?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly. On line 20, page 17, beginning with the word "residing," I move to strike the words "residing in congested centers of population where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high."

What are the facts with reference to these men? There are 38,000 of them in training; 21,000 are in cities of over 100,000 inhabitants. I gave the exact figures on yesterday, and they are found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning. Some of them are in cities of over a million inhabitants. Only 12,000 of them are in cities of less than 100,000 inhabitants; 21,000 are in cities of over 100,000 inhabitants. I think it unwise to draw that line of discrimination between them. The bill still contains words of limitation. I would prefer no words of limitation. I would be glad to see these wounded men, who have been disqualified from continuing in their former occupations, given a flat $100 a month and a flat $120 a month. I think that is little enough, but if we desire words of limitation, even if we strike out this language to which I object, we still have the following limitaton:

> Such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support and for the maintenance and support of persons dependent upon him, if any: Provided, however, That in no event shall the sum so paid such person while pursuing such course be more than $100 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $120 per month.

Now, why, in the case of a man with dependents, limit the increase to the fact that he is in a city where the congested conditions increase the cost of living?

The House passed the bill without this language to which I am objecting. The House passed the bill with the limiting language which I have suggested be left in the amendment.

I wish to appeal to the chairman of the committee to consent to strike out these words to which I have objected, which make a dscrimination between the men that is hardly fair.

Mr. WARREN. It is simply a question whether there is any limit on earth that we may reach to where we can stop. The Senator is perfectly frank about it that he would give every one of them $100 a month, no matter if they are drawing their board additional and all of their support.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But none of them are drawing their board.

Mr. WARREN. But some of them are drawing their board.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But they are not. Name the place.

Mr. WARREN. Every one of them is drawing his board at the soldiers' home——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why, they are not. There are none of them at the soldiers' homes to whom this bill applies.

Mr. WARREN. That is a matter which I do not care to debate. It is a matter of veracity, but I have it direct in conversation with the manager of the vocational education.

He told me that some of these men had been placed in soldiers' homes, and that the War Risk Bureau had some there in the same way. It is useless, unless the Senator has better information than I, to discuss the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yielded to the Senator. I have the floor, but I would be glad to hear him offer an amendment making it inapplicable to those at the soldiers' homes, but I wish to say to the Senator that if there are any such they are negligible in number.

Mr. WARREN. I was not assuming to break in on the Senator. The Senator yielded to me and I am seeking to answer the Senator, and I wish to know if I have the floor for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yielded to the Senator. I am glad to have him go on with his statement.

Mr. WARREN. It is a matter I took up with great care. In the first place, does the Senator know how much we have appropriated up to this time this year for vocational education of wounded soldiers? What is his idea about the amount of money that we have appropriated already for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know exactly. I am talking about the amount of money required to pay their expenses.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and the Senator says without limit that he wants them to have $100 a month, no matter what other benefits they may receive in addition. I take issue with the Senator, because some one has to take issue somewhere.

We have already appropriated up to the present time in this year $129,000,000 for the vocational education of these rehabilitated soldiers, in addition to what we have provided for the War Risk Bureau, in addition to what we have allowed in the Public Health Service, and in addition to that contained in the so-called Smith-Lever bill, I think it was called, the vocational education bill which carries some millions for use in conjunction with the States for several vocational education purposes. I am told from the Public Health Service that if the men are there for any length of time, they, of course, have their board and everything except their clothing furnished, as do those who may be at the soldiers' homes. I again say to the Senator that that is what I was told, and unless he has better authority I still maintain it.

I was told by the Director of the War Risk Bureau that $80 a month in many cases was sufficient, but there were other cases—and he mentioned the city of New York—where he said a man ought to have $100 a month. I talked with the Vocational Education Board, and they said it was very difficult for them to do anything but to always allow the limit of $80, although in some cases they were, perhaps, paying more than was necessary. Of course, if that is the desire of the Senator and others with him, I certainly do not want to stand in the way, but some one somewhere ought to figure out what is right for these men and provide it for them, but not overpay or waste.

The Senator sees persons earning $100 or $200 or more a month, but if we follow that plan there may be men that had $5,000 a month who were drafted. They were drafted and had to come from wherever they were. It seems to me if we furnish these soldiers the best of vocational education for nothing, if we furnish all their books, their stationery, their medicine, and if we furnish all their supplies, tools, and everything so that the men can live comfortably and well, that we perhaps ought not to take into consideration what their salary may have been before they entered the Army.

It is simply a matter of degree, I wish to say to the Senator. As it is under this bill they can give every man $100 a month, or $120 if he has a wife, if they wish to do so, but I wanted to give the board something behind them, so if they chose to exercise a little care and possibly some economy, with all regard to the health and happiness of the men, that they should have something to rely on as to what the Congress wishes in regard to these expenditures. That is all there is to it. The Senator's bill that he speaks of, I think the Senator himself knows, as it came over from the House, was not in shape that it ought to have passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I agree with that statement.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator agrees that the bill ought not to have passed in that way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We had prepared an amendment which we believed should be placed on the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Very true, although possibly there was some difficulty in handling it in that way in conference, and it was put in here with the best regard for these men. I want to furnish them everything the Nation can afford to furnish, but if the Senator will figure the amount he will see that in the next six months it will be twice as much as it was the last six months, because the number of students is increasing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is mistaken when he estimates the amount appropriated to spend on these men. There are only 33,000 of them, and the full amount of $80 and $100 multiplied by the 33,000 is less than $20,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. The tuition and the balance is not nearly as much more; it is very much less. The Senator is adding others that are not included in the class to which I am referring. The Senator says they are in hospitals, where their board is paid and that they are being cared for, or that they are in soldiers' homes. My information is that he is mistaken about that. I have the location of the bulk of these men, and there are no soldiers' homes mentioned.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There may be a negligible portion of them in the soldiers' homes. I am willing to except from this increase any man who is in a soldiers' home or who is getting his board. I am willing to accept a proviso of that kind. It will not apply to 500 men, I am sure, because these men are not in the soldiers' homes. If I could have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning, I could tell the Senator exactly where they are.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator seems to be in the humor tonight to doubt the veracity of all my statements.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, I do not mean that at all. The Senator had many of these figures to consider, while I have made a specialty of this.

Mr. WARREN. The figures are right here, the exact amount that we have appropriated in each bill; and I say to the Senator, as I have stated before, that there is $127,000,000 for vocational education alone. In addition to that are several hundred thousand dollars and up into the millions for the Public Health Service; and then, again, is all this money that goes from the War Risk. If the Senator will notice in the last bill we passed we provided an additional $117,000 in the way of more and higher-priced teachers.

It is not a matter of boarding men altogether that it takes money for, but I am giving the Senator what it costs to handle this vocational-education matter of the soldiers whom we are rehabilitating. We have appropriated that. That is what we shall have done if we pass this bill containing the $7,000,000 more.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; that is a mistake. It does not amount to that much.

Mr. WARREN. It does not amount to $7,000,000 in this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. WARREN. The bill is right before the Senator. Why doubt the figures?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; if they all received it, it would not be that much. It would be $6,600,000, twice 33,000. The number in the schools at this time is 33,000.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator must understand that there are teachers for every little handful of men.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the Senator passes from what I am discussing to something else. He said that this was an increase of $7,000,000. If they all got $20 additional it would not be an increase of $7,000,000. There would still be a limitation; and I insist that the same kind of limitation be applied to all of them.

Mr. President, I wish to urge upon the Senate and upon the chairman of the committee that the argument about the men being in the soldiers' homes is not applicable to this proposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very thoroughly in favor of the Senator's amendment. I think if there is one class amongst all the citizens of the United States with whom Congress can afford to be liberal it is the poor, unfortunate young men who were wounded in the war, whom we are trying to rehabilitate. I do not think we ought to cavil a minute about the cost of it, but that we ought to give them the best.

I know from actual observation that many of them are not receiving the treatment and the pay which they ought to have in order to be rehabilitated and to receive a vocational training; there is no doubt about it; and this body ought not to hesitate a moment, whatever the cost, in providing for these young men and seeing that they are dealt with without stint. They ought to be helped. They are going through the world legless or armless or eyeless for all time so far as they are concerned, and we ought not hesitate in assisting them. The amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming is obliged to be mistaken about the amount we have spent on these 33,000 men in the first six months of this year. The total appropriation for their support, including the allowance of $80 to $100 a month, is only $33,000,000 for the year. We have not spent that much on their teachers. The Senator is obliged to be mistaken about it. He has a vast burden on him in connection with appropriations, while I have specialized on this particular matter. I have inquired about the men being in the soldiers' homes and I am advised by the director that there are none of them in soldiers' homes. I know where most of them are. I know there is not one in a soldiers' home in my State. They are not in soldiers' homes in New York; they are not in soldiers' homes in Philadelphia; they are not in soldiers' homes in Boston. I should like to know the soldiers' homes any of them are in. I know where those are who are not in soldiers' homes. I know where they are where nobody is paying their board and nobody is furnishing their clothes. Their books are not all furnished them, either; neither are their physicians' bills paid for them. When they are in the hospitals, before they have been discharged from the jurisdiction of the Medical Corps of the Army, while they are still under that supervision, they do have their board and medical attention furnished them, but they have not then begun to receive the compensation; that begins afterwards. The boys taking the vocational training can not have cost the Government $100,000,000 in the first six months of this year; and while I have the greatest personal appreciation and admiration for the chairman of the committee—and he knows my personal regard for him—I know he is mistaken about that.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not care to have any admiration, but a $20 bill is a $20 bill, and when it is developed here that this money has been appropriated, it is rather difficult for me to think that the Senator from Georgia knows more about it than what the figures show.

Referring to the Public Health Service, I will state to the Senator that the soldiers under the jurisdiction of that service receive their board and attendance. They do not go there until after they are discharged from the Army, and when they do go there I assert again that they receive their board and all their medical supplies and everything which is necessary except, perhaps, their clothing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator name a place where these men who are taking vocational training are receiving their board?

Mr. WARREN. I will simply say that this is the statement which has been made to me, and I can verify it here by sending down for the evidence in the office of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service. I would just as soon believe the Surgeon General and the director or the managers of the Vocational Education Board as to believe the Senator from Georgia himself, and I, of course, presume the Senator means to be right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Wyoming is usually right, but if he proceeds much further I shall withdraw my suggestion of admiration.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Georgia could not harm me by that, I am sure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I repeat, the Senator from Wyoming can not name the places where these men are at soldiers' homes. I ask to be informed as to what number of them are at soldiers' homes and are receiving their board and where?

Mr. WARREN. I have not asked for that information. I stated that a vocational-education manager told me that some of them had been at the homes, and he told me what he paid for their keep. If the Senator doubts that, I can not help it. I myself have not been to the homes; of course, that is not my duty.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The men in New York City, in Boston, in Philadelphia, and all over the country are not having their board paid. I repeat that from my personal information and investigation, if any of them are receiving their board, they are a negligible number. They are not under the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service; he has nothing to do with them now. He deals with a different class. There is simply a confusion between other men and the men I have in mind, and I repeat that I think the Senator is mistaken when he says that a hundred million dollars has been appropriated for the first six months for vocational training.

Mr. WARREN. The exact figures are $127,000,000, including the $7,000,000 in this bill, so far appropriated in 1920.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator stated that the amount had been spent during the first six months.

Mr. WARREN. Seven million dollars are carried in this bill. Eight million dollars were at first asked for, but they finally thought that they would try to get along with $7,000,000 until the 1st of July. I am giving the Senator the figures of the appropriations, which I think I know when they are right before me here, printed as we have had them arranged in order to furnish the information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would the Senator object to reading the appropriations and mentioning where they may be found?

Mr. WARREN. They are found directly in the various appropriation bills. The first appropriation was $8,000,000; the second was $6,000,000; the third was $15,000,000; the next, $11,000,000; the next, $90,000,000——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Wait a moment. When was the last amount appropriated?

Mr. WARREN. We just passed it in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was the bill which was passed a few days ago, and that amount is for the next 12 months.

Mr. WARREN. That is true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That amount was not spent within the first six months, of course, and has not been spent.

Mr. WARREN. No; but we spent the amount that was appropriated previously for this year; and then there is $7,000,000 in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amount named by the Senator was not appropriated for the first six months of this year, as he claimed; he has named the total appropriations from the time we began the work, and the $90,000,000 is to carry us through the next 12 months.

Mr. WARREN. But before that various amounts had been appropriated; and, of course, we are spending money right along for the different purposes provided for in the appropriation bills. For instance, we are now appropriating for the fiscal year 1921; in 1919 we were appropriating for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I repeat that the wounded soldiers I have been discussing have not cost us over $100,000,000 for six months, as the Senator claimed. The total appropriations, by the Senator's figures, were only $40,000,000 up to July 1 next, which covered two years.

Mr. WARREN. I think we could come to a conclusion in this way: There is no difference at all between the Senator and me that this item in this bill contemplates appropriating the difference between the $100 and the $120, just as in the case of the bill the Senator mentioned. We have no difficulty about that. What the appropriations really amount to has nothing to do with the matter, except in its relation to the general subject of the cost of the enterprise. If we provide all that is necessary for the men, it ought to be enough; that is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, what I insist upon is that the amount provided is not enough; we have not given them enough; they have had to appeal to charitable organizations to take care of them. Men and women connected with the Red Cross, John Hays Hammond, who has charge of an organization caring for the soldiers in New York City, and organizations from all over the country came to the House Members and begged them to give the additional $20 in order that these boys might have enough to pay their expenses.

Let us come down to the exact proposition before the Senate. Shall we distinguish between the wounded soldiers or shall we put them all in the same class? Shall we put in the words not contained in the House bill, and limit the payment of the additional amount to those "residing in congested centers of population where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high," or shall we use the language used by the House in the original bill, which allowed "such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance and support"?

Under the provision that I ask to strike out you exclude a sum which the board might consider necessary for their maintenance and support unless the board finds further that they are located in a congested center. I think they all ought to be treated alike, and wherever the board feels that the sum of $20 additional is necessary for their support they should receive it.

That is all I ask. I am asking that you do not put an arbitrary basis of distinguishment between them; that you leave it to the board, as the House did, to give them the $20 a month additional wherever in the opinion of the board the money is required to meet their expenses, and that language I am not asking to strike out. The House sent up the bill in that shape. There was an error in the House bill in that it dealt with an entire section, when one paragraph of that section should not have been changed, and it would have been necessary to amend the bill, and I am ready to thank the Senator for bringing it to us in this shape if he will just take out this provision that discriminates between the boys.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let it go before the Senate. I am willing that the Senate shall vote on it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have the greatest sympathy with the amendment proposed by the committee, and I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion that has gone on between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Wyoming.

About a week ago, Mr. President, in an uproar of cheers, another body passed a bill imposing upon the taxpayers of this country something like $1,200,000,000, to be paid out in the shape of bonuses to able-bodied men, uninjured survivors of the war. I shall not discuss the merits of that proposal upon this occasion; but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that action and ask them to compare that action with what is here proposed and to say in all seriousness that the proposal for a bonus to be paid to all uninjured, able-bodied men who served in the war has attained such a momentum, apparently, in political circles that the wounded men are forgotten, they being in the minority. The majority always gets the attention of men in public life, and especially those men running for public office.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Nobody has heard me approve that bonus. I am just pleading for the wounded soldiers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not mean that the Senator has. I am simply making a few observations in connection with this amendment. Nevertheless, I do want to impress upon the Senate, or the few Senators here present, this situation.

Here are some few thousands of men who have suffered and sacrificed for their country, suffered and sacrificed something very real, a suffering and a sacrifice which will be felt by them for the rest of their lives. They have come here and have proved that the allowances now made by the Government for their support while they are undergoing this vocational rehabilitation are insufficient; and, for one, I congratulate the Committee on Appropriations, headed by the Senator from Wyoming, upon giving these men recognition here and now, for they are the men who actually need it; and it can not be contended, even by the most enthusiastic supporters of the bonus, that every one of the more than 3,000,000 men who are to be its beneficiaries is actually in need of it. I rejoice that in the midst of the uproar, contention, agitation, and propaganda which has flooded this Congress in behalf of millions of men the Senate of the United States finds time to consider the few thousands who actually need the help of their country and their Government.

Now, Mr. President, with respect to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, I think he and I and the Senator from Wyoming are all attempting to accomplish the same thing. It is perfectly true that in some of the great communities of this country a boy can not live in comfort and decency on $80 a month. He can not feed and board and clothe himself and present a decent appearance amongst his fellows upon that sum.

In other communities, less in size, possibly he can. I am quite sure that he can in some of the lesser communities. He can not in the city of New York; he can not in Boston; he can not in Philadelphia; he can not in Chicago, and I dare say there are many other of the larger and more congested communities in which he can not do it.

Now, the question is, Can we establish an elastic system of administering these allowances so that, no matter where the boy is taking his vocational rehabilitation, he will have enough to live on in decency? It strikes me that the language to which the Senator from Georgia objects is the very language which is expressive of the intent of the Congress—that no matter where the boy lives, be it in a congested district or in a comparatively sparsely populated district, wherever he lives he shall have enough, provided, of course, in accordance with the provisions of this amendment, that in no event shall a single man without dependents get more than $100 or a married man, or a man with dependents, get more than $120.

It seems to me that the language that the Senator from Georgia criticizes is language declaratory of the purpose of the Congress, and that if it should not prove necessary to give a boy more than $85 or $90 or $95 in a certain community he need not be given more than that amount; but if he does live in a community described in this amendment as a congested center of population, where maintenance and support is above the average, and comparatively high, then he should get the $100 or the $120, as the case may be. I am willing to leave it to the board. If he does not live in a congested district, if he lives in a place where the maintenance is not comparatively high, I think we can trust them to give him enough to live upon decently.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But you do not allow any increase at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes, Mr. President; it is still left in the judgment of the board in any case. Now, read the language. It is left to the discretion of the board:

> To all trainees undergoing training under said section residing in congested centers of population where maintenance and support is above the average and comparatively high, in lieu of the monthly payments for maintenance and support prescribed by section 2, as amended, such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is limited to congested centers; and if they should find that somewhere else, at a place which was not a congested center, he still needed more than $80, he could not have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The board is to be the judge of the degree of congestion and the comparative cost of living. That is the point. The board is master of the situation. The Committee on Appropriations in this amendment does not pretend to prescribe or define a congested district. It merely declares the purpose of the Congress in leaving it to the judgment of the board to decide where living costs are higher than in other places; and where they are higher, due to congestion, due to comparatively high costs, then they may raise it to the limit. They still have the discretion to pay less than the limit where in their judgment the living costs are less than the highest; that is all. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will not detract anything from the discretion of the board, nothing whatsoever, for it will then read:

To all trainees undergoing training under said section, in lieu of the monthly payments for maintenance and support prescribed by section 2, as amended, such sum as in the judgment of the said board is necessary for his maintenance.

You have left out the declaration of purpose by the Congress if you strike out the language to which I referred, but you have not really confined the discretion of the board any more than the committee confines it, or extended the discretion of the board any more than the committee extends it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, of course the purpose of the draft of the committee was to leave this matter primarily to the discretion of the board.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, we all recognize that, as a rule, the cost of living in congested centers of population is higher than elsewhere; but there may be localities not congested where the cost of living is high. I do not think the matter is so serious as the Senator from Georgia suggests, but permit me to make this suggestion: Just strike out the words "in congested centers of population," so that it will read:

To all trainees undergoing training under said section residing where maintenance and support is above the average—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is satisfactory.

Mr. POMERENE. That would meet the situation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia accept the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I did not catch the wording, but if I understand aright, I am willing to accept that.

Mr. POMERENE. It just strikes out the words in line 21, "in congested centers of population," so that the text will then read:

Residing where maintenance and support is above the average.

Mr. WARREN. I accept that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is satisfactory to me.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 18, after line 21, to insert:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

National Zoological Park: To provide for the increase of pay of the National Zoological Park policemen to the rate of pay of the United States park police, $4,160, to be available also for the fiscal year 1921, one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just for information, I find on page 18, from lines 11 to 21, an appropriation of $14,000,000 to pay for an alleged deficit incurred in the operation of the telegraph and telephone systems. The Senator doubtless has received telegrams similar to the one I have received.

Mr. WARREN. I think every Senator received it.

Mr. KING. I have made some investigations, and I am in sympathy with the position of those who sent this telegram. It does seem to me that this is a premature appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator moves to strike it out, and the Senate strikes it out, all right. We have got to pay it at some time.

Mr. KING. I move to strike it out.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not take that action until it can hear what developed at the hearings as the basis for this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I am not taking the action. I am submitting the matter. I simply say, if the Senate thinks it is wrong, strike it out.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are we not reading the bill for action on the committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is correct in that assumption.

Mr. KING. I desired to notify the chairman——

Mr. WARREN. I should have reminded the Senator of that.

Mr. KING. I was aware of that rule, but I thought, in the interest of expedition, we had better take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on the bottom of page 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," subhead "Foreign intercourse," on page 21, after line 10, to insert:

Relief and protection of American seamen: Relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, and in the Panama Canal Zone, and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, in the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 23, after line 11, to insert:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

General expenses: Authority is hereby given the Secretary of the Treasury to grant compensation in excess of the amount provided in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, and at rates of pay not in excess of the maximum rates paid in other executive departments for the same or similar character of service, to the following classes of technical employees of the Supervising Architect's Office paid from the appropriation for general expenses of public buildings, as follows: Foreman, architectural, and apprentice draftsmen; structural engineers and draftsmen; mechanical, sanitary, electrical, heating, ventilating, and illuminating engineers and draftsmen; and computers and estimators, and to carry into effect the provisions of this paragraph during the fiscal year 1921 there is appropriated the sum of $104,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Independent treasury," on page 25, after line 9, to insert:

For expenses incident to the transfer of the duties and functions of the several subtreasuries when discontinued, as provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $292,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to transfer the long amendment on page 23, under the Treasury Department, to page 27, to follow line 20, and strike out the subhead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection that change will be made.

Mr. KING. That is an item to which I desire to call the Senator's attention. My information is, and I think it is the information of other Senators, that that branch of the Treasury Department which has to do with the construction of buildings, the architects, and so on, has done but very little for a number of years. That is to say, there have been comparatively few public buildings erected, and I do not understand the reason for an increase in the compensation. I understood that there was a diminution in the number of employees, and that instead of there being an increase in the amount of appropriation for the Architect's Office, there ought to have been a reduction. Can the Senator advise how this deficit was created, and what authority there was for it?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is a matter of salaries. These are for the experts, architects of a certain degree, and engineers. A great many have already left, and in the bill heretofore passed the salaries were raised for those who served in the field, leaving the office men below them, and of course below their living wage. They have had no raise whatever in their wages. Of course, it came up in other bills, and I have contested against it because if there was any place for it, it could come in after we have further information. I looked it over very carefully, and unless we want to cripple the office entirely, I think we must allow this amendment to go through.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think it is very bad practice to wait until a year has gone by and then bring in an item of this character to pay for raises.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to my colleague that this amendment would never have been in this bill if there had not been an item in the sundry civil bill increasing the compensation of employees in this exact department who were working in the field. Now we find ourselves in the anomalous position of increasing the salaries of this class of men who are laboring in the field, and getting their per diem, and the men who are laboring here in the District of Columbia, and paying their own expenses, receive a great deal less than the field men.

Mr. KING. That is a discrimination which is unfair.

Mr. WARREN. The junior Senator from Utah spoke of it having been paid heretofore. It has not been paid heretofore. It is for 1921, and is in addition to what the sundry civil bill gave.

Mr. SMOOT. If there was any mistake made, I will say to my colleague that it was made in the passage of the sundry civil bill, and when the committee's attention was called to the discrimination nobody could defend it. The only thing for the committee to do was to put this proviso in, or else we would have men doing the same kind of work, drawing the same salary, and part of them receiving an increase in pay and the balance of them remaining as they were.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is a bad precedent, but I shall not object to the provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 18, to insert:

OFFICE OF ASSISTANT TREASURER AT NEW YORK.

For reimbursement for amounts made good by certain employees in the Office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York, N. Y., of losses incurred by them in the payment of disbursing officers' checks upon indorsements which were later found to have been forged, and on account of a cash shortage as follows: Charles M. Le Furge $531.24, Cortland P. Bennett $126, and Montgomery Maynard $500; in all, $1,157.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 27, after line 21, to insert:

For pay, allowances, and commutation of quarters for commissioned medical officers, including the Surgeon General, Assistant Surgeons General at Large not exceeding three in number, and pharmacists, fiscal year 1921, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 16, to insert:

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for beneficiaries (other than war-risk insurance patients) of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles, court costs and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane, fiscal year 1921, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 21, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

For additional amount required for the salary of the Assistant Secretary of War during the fiscal years 1920 and 1921, in accordance with section 5a of the act "to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," $5,416.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 12, to insert:

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS.

The taxes imposed by the Philippine Legislature in section 1614 of the act No. 2657, enacted by that body on February 24, 1916, are legalized and ratified, and the collection of all such taxes made under or by authority of such act of the Philippine Legislature is legalized, ratified, and confirmed as fully to all intents and purposes as if the same had by prior act of Congress been specifically authorized and directed.

Mr. KING. I was looking at another item and I missed two items on page 27, $100,000 for the Public Health Service and $106,000 provided on page 29 for the same service. We have made very generous appropriations heretofore for the Public Health Service. They were warned repeatedly about not incurring deficits. Is there any reasonable explanation for these two items?

Mr. WARREN. This simply fulfills the law; their expenses have reached this amount and we are under the law obliged to pay them. The second one to which the Senator alludes is the salary of a man. That has been raised in another bill, which has already passed, and, of course, we must provide for it. The salary of the Assistant Secretary of War was raised to $10,000, and the duties of his office are really those of two former assistants, and there are even additional duties performed by him. In fact, he is to be the business man of the War Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say further that this is another evidence of the unwisdom of having an appropriation committee pass on provisions calling for appropriations and then some other appropriations committee have to take care of the increases made when the law passed. I do not believe there was anyone who noticed the passage of the law which provided for the Assistant Surgeon Generals at large, not to exceed three. That law slipped through here and nobody ever noticed what it meant. But it was passed to take care of three men.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I suggest we would very much improve this bill if we would repeal that particular statute instead of perpetuating them and giving them salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble is now, Mr. President, that we have to appropriate part of this money to pay the compensation for what is already approved, and also, of course, it does provide for the coming year. I will say to my colleague that the amount asked for was $129,000, and the committee thought that perhaps before the full year was out there could be some change in the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the chairman of the committee did not report an amendment repealing the provision suggested which created those additional supernumeraries.

Mr. SMOOT. We did not want to be too cruel, because one of them is spending his summer vacation over in Europe. Of course, it would not have done to cut him off at once and leave him stranded over there in Europe having a good time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the committee amendment on page 30, after line 12.

CONTINUATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

SEC. 5. The appropriations made by the several appropriation acts for the necessary operations of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, are hereby continued and made available for similar purposes and in like amounts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and a sufficient amount to carry on such operations is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the revenues of the District of Columbia and the water fund, in like manner as provided for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, than was authorized by appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, except as otherwise provided herein: Provided further, That the amount appropriated by the deficiency appropriation act approved March 6, 1920, for 68 additional teachers in the public schools shall be increased to cover an entire school year's service: Provided further, That the amounts appropriated for the payment of salaries of officers and members of the police and fire departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall be increased to cover the salaries now authorized by law for the entire fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 7, to change the number of the section from "4" to "6."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, section 5 may go in and go to conference, but will probably be taken out if, by the time we consider it, the District bill has been adopted. There are three similar items altogether in the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. I have not had time to examine it. Is the purpose of section 5 to take care of the District in the event that the conference report is not agreed to?

Mr. WARREN. Exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Tennessee moves, on page 32, after line 6, to insert the following:

That the sum of $15,561.23 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and paid to George F. Ramsey, levee contractor, of which $13,602.27 is for himself and $1,958.96 is for the use and benefit of W. H. Dennison, his subcontractor, being the aggregate losses incurred by said George F. Ramsey and his subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contracts mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That before paying said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall require satisfactory evidence that said contract has been completed, and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection with said contract.

That the sum of $123,569.03 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and paid to H. B. Banks, levee contractor, of which $40,720.95 is for the use and benefit of his subcontractors—Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co.—and $82,848.08 is for the use and benefit of his subcontractor, George F. Ramsey, being the aggregate losses incurred by said subcontractors in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contract mentioned in said resolution: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, before paying said sums shall require evidence satisfactory to him that said contracts have been completed, and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection therewith.

That the sum of $204,307.98 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and paid to Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co., of which $150,110.07 is for themselves, and $14,953.84 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractor, L. Lowrance & Bros.; $5,376 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractor, George F. Ramsey; and $15,822.82 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractor, Rodgers Construction Co.; and $18,045.25 is for the use and benefit of their subcontractors, H. N. Rodgers & Bro., being the aggregate losses incurred by said Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co., and their subcontractors, in the carrying out of certain contracts referred to in a Senate resolution of June 19, 1919, under which the Secretary of War was directed to report the amount of losses incurred by the contractors upon contracts mentioned in said resolution.

Provided, That before paying said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall require satisfactory evidence that said contracts have been completed, and that there are no other subcontractors who claim loss for work in connection with said contracts.

Mr. McKELLAR. These amendments are in line with the amendments in regard to rivers and harbors work on pages 31 and 32 of the bill, and they would come naturally right after those items. They are claims of levee contractors on the Mississippi River which have already passed this body.

I should like it very much if the Senator could see his way to permit them to be added to the bill. The claims are in principle just like the claims allowed in the bill. They are absolutely just, and admittedly so. The claimants did the work at great loss. They ought not to be postponed. It will cause these contractors great embarrassment financially, and I hope the Senator will not make a point of order against it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I know very well the character of this claim. I wish to compliment the Senator from Tennessee for the constancy with which he has followed this up and his success as far as the point reached is concerned; but it has not arrived at a state of perfection that it can be entertained yet in an appropriation bill, and I therefore will be compelled to make the point of order. This bill carries another similar matter which has reached a stage that entitled it to be appropriated for. I hope to cooperate with the Senator when the proper time arrives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 38, after line 20, insert the following:

That until otherwise provided by law no midshipman found deficient at the close of the last and succeeding academic terms shall be involuntarily discontinued at the Naval Academy or in the service unless he shall fail upon reexamination in the subjects in which found deficient at an examination to be held at the beginning of the next and succeeding academic terms, and the Secretary of the Navy shall provide for the special instruction of such midshipman in the subjects in which found deficient during the period between academic terms.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be added to the bill as a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,819 to and for Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., for and on account of unpaid claims held by her on account of work and services performed on or supplies furnished for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I feel very much as though I would join the Senator from Montana in trying to pay this claim out of our own pockets. As a matter of fact, however, and as much as I sympathize with the Senator and with that case, I can not accept it on this bill. I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator what is the point of order?

Mr. WARREN. The point of order is that it is a private claim. It is not estimated for.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, on that I have three precedents, directly in point, and I ask permission to read them to the Chair. In order that the Chair may closely follow it, if the Chair has available Gilfry's Precedents, from 1789 to 1913, the first volume, I will ask him to turn to page 87, while I read the three precedents at the top of page. Two of them are ancient precedents and one of them is a very recent one—since I have been in the Senate.

The first is dated February 15, 1853, Thirty-second Congress, and reads as follows:

An amendment was proposed "that the sum of $300,000 be paid to the State of California to be applied to the expenses of the State government prior to the admission of California into the Union as a State."

An objection was made, but the President pro tempore (William R. King) decided he thought that the item having been previously agreed to in a bill that passed the Senate at the last session, but not yet acted upon by the House, was in order, because, as the rule says, of "an act previously passed by the Senate during that session."

The second precedent is in the Fifty-second Congress, March 2, 1893, and reads as follows:

A question of order was raised that an amendment to an appropriation bill did not carry out the provisions of existing law, treaty stipulation, or act or resolution of the Senate passed at the present session.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Harris in the chair) decided that an act having passed the Senate during the present session embodying the provisions of the amendment, and making an appropriation necessary to carry out the same should the act ripen into law, the amendment was in order.

I now call attention to the third precedent, a very recent one, and exactly in point, as follows:

The general deficiency bill being under consideration,

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 21, after line 27, the following:

"To enable the Secretary of War to pay to Rittenhouse Moore the sum of $3,653.05, being the amount stated and claimed by him, as set forth in House Document No. 101, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, for overwidth dredging in the Potomac River below Washington, D. C., and recommended by the Secretary of War, as therein shown."

Mr. SMOOT. I think I remember this claim being before the Committee on Claims. It has been considered a number of times, Mr. President. I make the point of order that it is a private claim upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger). The Chair will inquire of the Senator whether this amendment, in any form, has passed the Senate at the present session of Congress?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has passed at the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger). If that be a fact, the point of order is overruled.

There are three precedents exactly in point. One of them was rendered by Senator William R. King, one of the greatest Senators and parliamentarians who ever sat in this body. Another was rendered by the late Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Harris, whose reputation is an enduring one. The last precedent, no longer ago than 1913, occurred when that eminent Senator of long, distinguished service, the late Senator Gallinger, was in the chair, and is a case on all fours with the present one. It was a private claim, and objection was made against it that it was out of order because it was a private claim. That was the point of order made, but when the attention of the Chair was called to the fact that it had passed Congress at that session he overruled the point of order and the amendment was agreed to.

The pending amendment is in precisely the same words in which it passed the Senate at this session.

Now, Mr. President, I believe in continuity and consistency of decisions. I think it is of the highest importance that the rules of the Senate should be construed in a stable and consistent way. Surely the Chair will not decide that when certain Senators offer amendments here to an appropriation bill in the form of claims which have passed the Senate at the same session a point of order against them is to be overruled and that the amendment is in order and then decide, when other amendments of the same character are offered by other Senators, that they are out of order. Surely they can not be in order when offered by some Senators and out of order when offered by other Senators.

As is often said about citing court decisions, here are three decisions exactly in point. The last is exactly on all fours with the amendment that I have offered. For the Chair to sustain the point of order he would have to absolutely overrule these three precedents, especially the last one in 1913, that was made by the late Senator Gallinger. I certainly think the Chair can not sustain this point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. MYERS. I will yield the floor for the present. I shall be glad to hear from the Senator. I may wish to reply.

Mr. SMOOT. Paragraph 4 of Rule XVI provides that—

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

If I had time to go through the volumes and point out the precedents I think I could point to hundreds of them where this point of order, made against private claims on a general appropriation bill, has been sustained. I remember well the case to which the Senator refers. I remember when I made the point of order and when the question came up one of the old

Senators came to me and said, "Let it go; never mind; do not seek to overrule the decision of the presiding officer. Senator BANKHEAD is very much interested in this amendment." Of course it is the trouble with such amendments that they pass in the way that particular claim was allowed to go on an appropriation bill.

I have not any reason to object, nor do I wish to object, to the Senator pointing to that particular case, but it seems to me that paragraph 4 of Rule XVI is so plain, and it has been invoked in this Senate so many thousands of times since I have been here, that there can be only one decision in the matter.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, these are the only precedents on the subject that I have been able to find. I have not found any contrary precedents. I do not say that they are not to be found, but these are the only ones I have been able to find. We have them here before us now, and one of them is precisely in point. Two cases could not be more similar.

I believe the precedents of the Senate and the construction of the rules should be followed as much as decisions of the Supreme Court should be followed in order to form a continued and stable policy of decisions by the supreme courts of the States or by the Supreme Court of the United States. I do not believe a square precedent of the Senate should be overruled unless some difference may be found in the cases.

I offered this amendment to another appropriation bill a short time ago, the sundry civil appropriation bill. I had not searched for precedents at that time. The matter was argued here at considerable length. The Senator who was then in the chair, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], seemed to be in doubt and seemed to be disposed to favor the amendment if he could find a way to do so. I think he said in effect that if I could cite any precedent in my favor he would decide in favor of the amendment. I did not have the precedents at that time, but I have since found them.

What good are precedents unless we are to follow them? What use is there to publish this volume of precedents by order of the Senate unless the Senate intends to pay some attention to them? I do not remember of analogous cases coming up in the Senate very often. I can not remember now of an amendment which involved a claim and which had passed the Senate at the same session ever before being offered to an appropriation bill until I did it the other day. It certainly is not a common practice. There can not be many precedents for it. It is a custom that Senators have generally refrained from. It is the first time I have ever done it myself.

I did it a few days ago because on reason and logic I was convinced that it was permissible under the rules if it had passed in the form of a bill at the same session. The question was argued at considerable length, and a number of Senators indicated that they thought that there was some reason in the contention. Since then I have looked up the precedents and I find there are precedents in my favor. It is not a matter of common occurrence.

As to the objection that we would load down the appropriation bills with private claims, it is very seldom attempted; and if there be private claims put on an appropriation bill, why should the Senate hesitate when the Senate once before at the same session has gone on record in favor of the measure, as it did in this instance? It can not cause a deadlock in the case of an appropriation bill, because if the Senate conferees find that the House conferees are not willing to accept the amendment they do not have to deadlock the bill on account of it; but I think under the circumstances it is their duty to give the House conferees an opportunity to say whether or not they will agree to it.

Now, Rule XVI, while it says in subdivision 4 that—

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Yet subdivision 1 says:

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

That is the case in this instance. The amendment has previously passed in the form of a bill at the same session.

I admit that the two paragraphs of the rule are contradictory. I argued that question the other day, and the Chair seemed to think there was some merit in my contention and called for a precedent, but nobody was able to give him any precedent on either side and he had to decide the question without precedents.

Now, I claim under subdivision 4 of Rule XVI, which says that no private claim shall be received to any appropriation bill, is a general provision, and that the provision of subdivision 1 which says no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation unless it was passed by the Senate in the form of a bill or resolution at the same session is an exception to the general rule, and the exception should govern. When a statute is contradictory, and lays down a general rule, and then enumerates some exception to the general rule, it has been the uniform holding of the courts of the country that the exception shall prevail in cases which fit the exception. This is a case which fits the exception. The bill has passed the Senate at this session, which takes it out of the general provision concerning claims. That is my contention. At any rate, Senator Gallinger so decided; and I cite this precedent to the Chair and ask the Chair if he should not be bound by the precedent which I have cited when none are cited to the contrary?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the rule is as contended by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], then general appropriation bills will very soon become the means of conveying out of the Senate to the other House all the private claims that the Senate ever passes.

Mr. MYERS. Let me ask the Senator a question, please, if he will so favor me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. What would be the harm of that if the Senate has already gone on record as favoring a claim? Furthermore, what would be the harm if there is no obligation on the Senate conferees to deadlock the bill but simply to present it in conference, so that if the House conferees will not agree to it after a fair effort, they have the privilege of receding from it?

Mr. NORRIS. The harm is that it takes away from the House of Representatives their right to consider the bill on its merits. They have a Committee on Claims, just as we have. We could do what the Senator suggests, but there would not be a general appropriation bill go through the Senate unless it were loaded to the very top with that kind of claims.

I do not know anything about this claim; it may be perfectly legitimate; and personally, if the Senator was seeking to put it on by unanimous consent, I would not object to it, because I have no knowledge in regard to it and am not in charge of the pending bill.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. Would the Senator have the precedent set by the late Senator Gallinger squarely overruled?

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to refer to the precedents of the Senate, and that was one of the reasons why I took the floor.

In the first place, the rule is so plain that no man, it seems to me, can misinterpret or misunderstand it. The Senator from Montana says that because the first paragraph of Rule XVI reads—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

It makes the exception to the general rule, which says:

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. President, it seems to me no one can read that rule without realizing that it will be squarely contradicted and nullified if it is held that the particular amendment is in order.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NORRIS. In a moment. Instead of the language which I read in the first paragraph being an exception, the two paragraphs refer to two entirely different and distinct propositions. One refers to any general amendment that increases an appropriation—we all understand what that means—while the other part of the rule—it so states in its terms—refers particularly to a private claim. That is what this amendment is. Now I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Does not the Senator consider the two subdivisions of the rule as somewhat contradictory, when he considers that a private claim may be an amendment which authorizes a new item of appropriation or increases an appropriation contained in the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. They do not conflict at all.

Now, I wish to say a word about the precedents of the Senate. I have not examined the precedents; I have not looked them up and do not know what they are; but, Mr. President, you can find a precedent in the Senate for anything; you can sustain every rule and you can overrule every rule by precedents. There is not a body on the face of the earth, including the justice of the peace courts in every State and Territory in the United States, that has so little respect for its own precedents as has the Senate of the United States. Decisions of the Chair and decisions of the Senate are made not in accordance with the law or precedents but in accordance with the wish of the Senate as to the expediency of legislating in the particular way proposed by the amendment that is subject to a point of order. Every Senator realizes that. A justice of the peace court would not follow the precedents of the Senate of the United States around the corner. They are not entitled to very much consideration, because they are not decided according to the law, but according to what the Senate wants to do in the particular case, and the Senate does it.

So, Mr. President, I have learned, as I think most Senators have learned, to have this idea of the Senate's operations: When it wants to do a thing, it does it, whether there is a rule to the contrary or not, and it would do it in this case. If the Senator from Montana appealed to the Members of the Senate and they knew nothing about that claim and thought that it ought to be paid, they would vote to put it in the bill regardless of all the rules on earth.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. Does not the Senator think it would be a good idea for the Senate to respect its precedents and establish a line of precedents that would be stable and continuous?

Mr. NORRIS. I do. When I first came to the Senate—and I am still inclined in that direction—I felt like following the rules and having them enforced, but I have been overruled so many times when I wanted to do that by Senators who did not care anything about the rules that I feel like reciprocating and doing the same thing, for that is the only way to get along in the Senate.

Such on incident happened to-night, Mr. President. I made a point of order, the Chair overruled me, and the Senate promptly sustained the Chair by practically unanimous vote, at least I did not hear any Senator vote with me; and yet any Senator who will take the language of the rule under which, I presume. the Chair rendered his opinion will find that under Rule IX when we are considering general orders the point of order would be applicable; but I know, the Senator from Montana knows, the Senate knows, the country knows, and God knows that we have not considered anything under Rule IX for 40 years. I have never seen anything considered under that rule since I have been in the Senate, but that did not make any difference.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield again.

Mr. MYERS. I was not here at that time, but is the Senator aware of the fact that there is a rule which says that a motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropration bill is privileged and has precedence over other motions?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the Senator will find that is Rule IX. When we are considering general orders under Rule IX a motion to proceed to the consideration of a general appropriation bill takes precedence over the right to proceed to the consideration of some other measure. That is the only place in the rules where the Senator will find that provision. It has been held over and over again that when a Senator makes a motion to take up a particular bill or resolution on the calendar it is not susceptible of amendment, and that it is not in order to move to substitute a different bill for it, but the vote must be had on the particular bill and the motion can not be amended. The rules so provide and it has been held that way, but it has also been held the other way. So the Senate does not care much about its rules.

If it is trying to attain a certain object and if it wants to ride over one of its rules to do it, it does not hesitate not only to ride over the rules but to ride over some Senator, as it has often ridden over me, although on the next day it rode over somebody else in exactly the opposite direction.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will yield further, I hope he does not feel, because he was run over to-night, that he wants my precedent to be run over.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not anything against the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think that is a very good argument against my precedent.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not take the precedent very seriously, even if it is just what the Senator says it is, and no matter by whom the decision was rendered. In the face of a rule that is as positive as this the Chair at least can sustain himself by the rule. He can do either of two things. He can sustain the point of order, because the rule says the Senator's motion is out of order, or he can overrule the point of order, because the precedent says the Senator's motion is in order; and then the Senate is just as likely to sustain him in one instance as in the other; it does not make any difference.

Mr. MYERS. Then, so far as the Senator's contention goes we might as well burn up our books of precedents and pay no attention to them.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so; and if we ever run short of fuel again, I would be in favor of doing that; it would be the best use to make of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair intends to be fair; he intends to rule according to the rule and not according to the precedent. Section 4 of Rule XVI is perfectly plain. It provides:

> No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is a private claim; the point of order has been made against it, and the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. MYERS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate.

The decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Montana has saved me from making an argument in support of an amendment which I intended to offer in the nature of a private claim. I have tried to get it on every bill that has come along in the effort to find out a niche in whch it might be placed. I first offered the amendment to a deficiency bill, but I was very politely referred to a forthcoming District of Columbia appropriation bill. I offered it there, to that bill, when it was very politely suggested that the proper place to put it was in the sundry civil bill. When that measure came up for discussion it was suggested again that probably this general deficiency bill was the place to put it.

I am going to hoist a sail in the hope that I may, after a while, get into some safe and pleasant harbor with this claim. It is old enough to stand alone. I think the bill was contracted in 1878. It has been passed by the Senate a number of times. It has been reported upon favorably by such a distinguished chairman of the Claims Committee or District Committee as the late Senator Gallinger. I think the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], at one time reported it favorably as chairman of the Claims Committee.

Mr. President, I am going to stay with it. I will not offer it at this time, but I am going to try to get this claim through for a good woman. Her husband has died, and I do not know but that other members of the family have crossed the river and have left her practically destitute. The claim originally was for $10,000, and payment was suggested for that amount, and it was reduced to something like $3,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the claim?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is the claim of Edith B. Macon, daughter and sole heir of Davis W. and Elizabeth L. W. Bailey, deceased. She is not a widow but a child. The original parties are dead. It is to pay her the sum of $3,127.85 in full settlement of the award for $10,519.20 made to the estate of Davis W. Bailey on July 18, 1892, for extra work under his contract for laying asphalt pavements in the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I am not going to offer this claim as an amendment at this time, but I am just serving notice on the Senate that they will hear from this claim almost as often in the future as they have heard from the claim of the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. President, I do offer one amendment: On page 11, at the bottom of the page, I offer a short amendment, as follows:

> The Secretary of the Treasury may print and distribute such number of copies of publications of the Public Health Service as he may deem necessary for the best interests of the Government and the public.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall have to make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I expected that.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator in all seriousness that it never would do to adopt this amendment. If we do, the whole question will be opened again and there is no telling where this will lead to. Only this morning I received a telephone message from Mr. Chisholm, Deputy Public Printer at the Government Printing Office, asking me what to do, saying that they did not have enough paper on hand to print the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in its usual numbers. I told him to print just enough to furnish the Senate and the House with copies of the RECORD. Now, your constituents may be asking why they are not getting the RECORD. I want to give notice now to all of you to answer them that the reason is that we have not the paper to print them. That is the condition existing to-day.

Mr. President, the Joint Committee on Printing to-day had to meet and pass an order, under the printing law of 1895, limiting the number of speeches that could be delivered during the recess to any Senator. I hope it is not going to interfere at all with their campaigns, but the situation is most critical; and if this amendment changing existing law is allowed to go into this bill, why should not every department have the same privilege?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I just suggest to the Senator that I believe that if the draft law convinced the American people of one thing it convinced them of the terrible disease condition among the young fellows in America.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator refer to venereal diseases?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have always——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just let me finish, if the Senator pleases. Twenty-five per cent or more of the young men who were called into the draft Army were afflicted with venereal diseases, and there is no question but that being taken into the Army resulted in the restoration of many of these young men to health and many of them to military duty. Now, you can not reach them and properly cure them without calling their attention to the subject through these circulars that they want to distribute, and most of the work of the Public Health Service is done through these little circulars that go to the country and are distributed and instruct them in sanitation and in the cure of these diseases.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I have already, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, given the Public Health Service authority to distribute the very circulars spoken of in relation to venereal diseases; and, Mr. President, there is not any of the departments of our Government but that can come and ask for the modification of the law and have it granted, through that committee, so as to permit the distribution of anything that upon its face is evidently necessary to be distributed generally.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator how they would go about getting permission to issue these circulars?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the law all they have to do is to write a letter to the Joint Committee on Printing and suggest that the law be modified to the extent of the circulation of whatever circular or whatever document they may desire to have circulated.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator is chairman of that committee, I believe.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And if the Senator is not more generous there than he is here, I do not think they will get very far with the proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, this is general. I want to say that I do not think the committee have made two refusals since the passage of that law that I know anything about, but they have stopped this everlasting distribution of millions and millions and millions of circulars sent through outside sources. All we want to do is to keep some kind of regulation on the distribution of these documents; and it is for that reason that I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon offer the amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the point of order is made by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I do not think I violate any precedent or any rule in offering this amendment. I offer it for the purpose of correcting a mistake made by the Committee on Appropriations when considering the sundry civil bill. It relates to the compensation of those employees of the Pension Bureau that have to do with the administration of the civil-service retirement act.

I send the amendment to the desk, and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After line 19, on page 43, it is proposed to insert the following:

To provide additional compensation for employees of the Bureau of Pensions designated to carry out the provisions of the civil service retirement act, $2,000: Provided, That no person so employed shall receive compensation at a rate exceeding $1,740 per annum, except one at $3,000, one at $2,400, one at $2,000, and two at $1,800 each.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, unless the Senator desires to discuss the amendment, I am disposed to accept it and let it go to conference, where we will look it over.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 58, under the title of "Legislative," it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of May, 1920, including the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and House, the employees of the Joint Committee on Printing, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and in lieu of transportation to their respective homes, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the sum to be immediately available.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just this one word regarding this amendment. It appeals to me as being most just.

Here are these faithful employees who have served now for more than a year continuously, just as Senators have served. They have had no opportunity to return to their homes to visit or to look after business affairs of any kind at their homes. We propose to adjourn this session of Congress without providing anything for them more than their usual and their very moderate salaries. Many of them are men of families. Many of them, as I am informed, will have to borrow the money in order that they may return to their homes. I think that the Senate of the United States, that the Congress of the United States, ought to allow at least what might be equivalent to transportation home and return to these faithful employees.

I understand, Mr. President, that for many years that was the custom, but latterly it has been abandoned; and I think the matter of abandoning it is a custom that has become more honored in the breach than in the observance. I can not think of the proposition with a great degree of patience. We insist that they shall stay here even when Senators themselves visit their homes, or go off on this trip or that trip, and attend to the duties of their several places, in the offices of Senators and in the offices of Congressmen, or as employees in other branches of the service here at the Capitol.

I trust, Mr. President, that the chairman of the committee will be willing to accept this amendment and let it go to conference.

This thought occurs to me: There is some difference between the compensation of the employees of the Senate and the employees of the House in this regard under the present arrangement. If the House conferees do not care that the House employees shall receive the compensation, let them so determine, but I believe that Senators should do no less than insist on such compensation for the employees in whom they are more directly interested.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, to be chairman of the Appropriations Committee a man must, of course, be without a heart. He must be one of the worst men in America. This amendment, however, has been before the committee, and has not been allowed by that committee, and, of course, there is no estimate for it, and no law which provides for it.

It is true that years ago, not regularly, but intermittently, some years we allowed it, and some we did not. When we did, it was when there was a full attendance of the Senate and by unanimous consent, and there were years when it did not go in. When our friends, the Democratic Party, took charge of affairs, and, for that matter, before that—I will go back before the time when the Democrats took control of the Senate—the matter was done away with, on the ground that we should raise the pay of the clerks to what we considered the proper maximum, and we would perhaps have to do as I have always done, pay something extra to some of the clerks I have, and in the case of those who wish to go home, take them home and pay their expenses there and back, as I will do with two or three of my clerks now.

I shall have to make a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator withhold his point of order just a moment? I am very sorry——

Mr. WARREN. The Senator can not possibly be any more sorry than I am, but I can not permit a thing of this kind to pass in the Senate, with this small attendance, and if I can stop it by a point of order I will do so, because it is my duty in the position I occupy.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. If the Senator is going to insist upon the point of order, I will have to agree with what he said about himself in the first part of his statement.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. And I do not want to do that; but I want to offer this suggestion. I realize that we are all talking economy, and we are most economical when it comes to voting the compensation for the employees of Senators and of Members of the House. It is true that you raised the salaries. It is true also that we are here in session 10 months when we used to be in session 6 months. It seems to me that the high cost of living has even touched the pocketbooks of our clerks. These are all reasons which appeal to me.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. POMERENE. Surely.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator offered this and insisted upon it heretofore in the years when the Senator's party has been in charge?

Mr. POMERENE. I am very glad to answer that question. Yes; if the Senator will look over the RECORD he will find several places where I have insisted upon this being done.

Mr. WARREN. But it never succeeded?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I think it did one year. I think I have a distinct recollection of it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if I may have just one word——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, of course a point of order does not permit of discussion, but I do not wish to cut any Senator off in all reasonable debate.

Mr. STERLING. I wanted to refer to only one thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he has been very lenient, even to the Senator from Wyoming, and he intends to hear the Senator from South Dakota further.

Mr. STERLING. I have only this one statement to make, in view of what the chairman of the committee says in regard to the rather slim attendance in the Senate now; I think the justice of this matter would appeal to every Senator, when you consider the long time which these people have been here, the fact that they must, out of their slender accumulations, for those who have any at all, pay their expenses in order that they may visit home, in order that they may attend, many of them, probably, to necessary business affairs at home. It appeals to me, Mr. President, as treating these employees shabbily not to grant them at least that much of an allowance, one month's extra pay. I will not state for a moment that the Senator is hard-hearted, but out of the goodness of his heart and out of the sense of justice I know he feels as well as any of the rest of us, I hope he will permit this amendment to be accepted and let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 18, lines 9 to 21, inclusive, the item of $14,000,000 to compensate certain telegraph and telephone systems for alleged injuries and damages sustained by reason of Federal control, and as a part of my motion I ask leave to put in the RECORD a telegram which I have received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

The telegram is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, June 2, 1920.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

There is included on the third deficiency bill (H. R. 14335) just passed by the House an appropriation of $14,000,000 to make up the losses incurred by Postmaster General Burleson during his control of the telegraphs and telephones. The very large part of this $14,000,000 goes to the Bell Telephone Co. and to the Western Union Telegraph Co., and does not represent any losses sustained by those companies, but merely the difference between what their lines actually earned during the period of Federal control and the amounts awarded them as compensation by Postmaster General Burleson. We claim that those companies should be satisfied with what they earned and in these times have no right to call on the Treasury of the United States to pay them more than they earned, especially as Mr. Burleson increased their rates for them by about $40,000,000 per annum. The Postal Telegraph Cable Co. on the other hand is satisfied to keep merely what it earned, but Mr. Burleson says he proposes to sue that company for $2,000,000 and all of its earnings. By what principle of law or justice the Postal Co. is to be sued for $2,000,000 of its earnings while the Bell Telephone and Western Union are to be paid more than their earnings we can not understand, and hence we respectfully suggest that the Senate do not pass this $14,000,000 appropriation until the matter is examined into further and until this injustice to the Postal Co., which was singled out by Mr. Burleson for persecution, is cleared up.

Respectfully,

EDWARD REYNOLDS,
Vice President and General Manager
Postal Telegraph Cable Co.

Mr. KING. Just one word, Mr. President. I should like to argue this matter at some length, but I shall not detain the Senate at this late hour. I am somewhat familiar with this matter, and my opinion is that, in the first place, the Government ought never to have taken over the telegraph and telephone lines; that it was a mistake. Secondly, from my knowledge of the facts, there ought not to be anything paid to the telephone and telegraph companies, and if they have any valid claims, they ought to be remitted to the Court of Claims. I protest against this appropriation of $14,000,000. If they want to litigate the matter, let us make provision that they may go to an appropriate court. I think it is unwise and improper legislation, and I hope my motion to strike out will prevail.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when this matter was alluded to early in the consideration of this bill, I asked the Senator his reason for wishing to cut it out, and assuming that it might come up, I again directed my attention to the evidence given before the committee in the House, and which should be carefully read. I will ask that the Secretary may read some portions of this evidence which I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the evidence as requested.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Before the Secretary begins to read, may I not say that the House committee inserted this provision after hearings on the subject, and after the Postmaster General had gone fully into the matter, and it is from that hearing that the Senator is quoting.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I want to quote from.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Now, during the early part of the year of Government control the wire control board, assisted by Drs. Adams and Friday, of Michigan University, were engaged in fixing compensation for the use of these properties and they were governed by certain fixed rules which were laid down in the very beginning of Government control. We had, broadly speaking, no difficulty in reaching an agreement with any of these companies save one, and that was the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.

In order that you may have the facts before you, if any inquiry is made about it, I desire to make a brief statement about the facts and conditions surrounding that company which confronted Drs. Adams and Friday at the time they sought to effect a compensation agreement with it.

Mr. C. H. Mackay and the other officials of his company have no just cause of complaint as to the manner of making the award of compensation to the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. The award was less than Mr. Mackay claimed it should have been, but it was greatly in excess of what could have been allowed if the valuation and net earnings of the companies were no more than were sworn to in their statements under oath to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

If Mr. Mackay honestly believed the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. was entitled to greater compensation the way was open to him for adjudication by the court in a friendly suit, which the department suggested to him. If he could go into court with clean hands and nothing to conceal, I see no reason why he should not have adopted this legal method provided by Congress in the joint resolution for settling this particular class of cases.

Certain officials of this company obstructed every effort of the department to procure reliable information upon which to make the award and sought to harass, embarrass, and obstruct the operation of the service by the Government and have failed to afford opportunity for judicial determination of their claim.

The record facts in the case may afford an explanation of his withholding information as to the earnings and valuation of the property, his policy of obstruction, and likewise his reluctance to go into court.

In the sworn statements made to the Interstate Commerce Commission the net earnings of the 39 companies constituting this system are represented as being $332,343 in 1916, and $117,264 in 1917. The sworn statement furnished the Post Office Department in response to the questionnaire upon which to base the compensation award stated the net earnings for these same periods to be $4,157,670.44 and $4,485,593.34, respectively. The sworn statements of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. to the Interstate Commerce Commission placed upon their property a valuation of $6,647,472. Officials of the company refused to make any statement to the Post Office Department as to the valuation of the property.

On the best information available the Post Office Department estimated the value of the property to be approximately $28,000,000 and based its award upon that estimated value, more than four times the valuation placed upon it in the sworn statement of the companies made to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

A request made by the Postmaster General that expert engineers and accountants employed by the Government be permitted to examine the records of the company with respect to its plant, investment, and operations previous to August 1, 1918, in order that the award of compensation might be revised if the facts warranted, was refused by the company and access to such records denied.

The conflict between the sworn statements as to net earnings and valuation made to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the sworn statement made to the Post Office Department rendered both these statements unreliable. The valuation arrived at by the department was by estimating the value of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.'s system one-fourth higher per mile of pole line than the known value of the Western Union line, on account, among other things, of the former having 66 per cent of copper wire, as against the 42 per cent of the latter.

The average value of the Western Union plant per mile of pole line is $759.24. At this rate per mile the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.'s lines would have a value of $22,597,260. The Post Office Department placed the valuation at $28,000,000. On this valuation the compensation for this system was placed at $1,680,000. The Mackay company claimed $4,200,000 compensation, which would be about 15 per cent on the valuation adopted by the department and 63 per cent per annum on the investment value sworn to by the companies in their statements to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit me to make one observation? The statement which he is now having read relates to the controversy between the Postmaster General, or the Post Office Department, and the Postal Telegraph Co. It does not answer at all the proposition which I am submitting. The bill carries an appropriation of $14,000,000, not to Mr. Mackay or for Mr. Mackay's company, but for the Bell Telephone Co. and for the Western Union.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator remembers that, whether that was the cause or not, he presented a telegram from a competing company, and the Senator, I think, knows, as I do, that so far as we know every Senator has had a copy of that telegram, and it would seem to be necessary to place this in the RECORD to show why these telegrams come now as to the amount of money. While there may not be as much of it upon that point as the Senator desires, I will lay the whole matter before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Whose evidence is it to which we have been listening?

Mr. KING. A statement, I presume, of the Post Office Department.

Mr. WARREN. It is Mr. Burleson's evidence before the House committee.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will yield to me just a moment, I dislike to strike this provision out of the bill, but I think the Senator from Utah has made a very fair proposition. We ought to let this claim go to some court to be adjudicated. I would be glad personally to vote for an amendment to strike it out and insert a provision giving them the right to go into the Court of Claims and sue the Government and see what they are entitled to, and let it be adjudicated and let them be paid what they are entitled to receive.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is the amount which the Post Office Department finds to be due the company. The Postmaster General filed a specific estimate in the hearings before the House committee and went into the matter in great detail.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I do not make the charge, but it has been stated a good many times that there was collusion in the taking over of these companies in order to help them at a time when they, or some of them, were practically getting into bankruptcy; that it was the purpose to let the Government run them while in that condition and they get something out of it and put it on Uncle Sam.

Mr. KING. Let me say in conclusion, if there is one dollar due a telegraph company or a telephone company, I feel that those companies should be paid, but in my opinion the amount that the bill carries is too large. I feel that it is unjust to the Government and unfair to place this appropriation here. We ought to remit them to the courts and let them establish the liability of the Government and the damage to which they are entitled.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to say that I feel that the Senator from Nebraska does the Postmaster General an unintentional injustice.

Mr. NORRIS. I stated that I am not making the charge. I know nothing about it, of course, and I assume there is not anything in it, but it has been said a good many times, that there was no necessity for taking the companies over in the first place.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I merely desire to read the first few lines of the official estimate of the Postmaster General showing that this amount of $14,000,000 was arrived at in the regular way and under the law authorizing the taking over of the telegraph and telephone lines:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 1, 1920.

Hon. DAVID F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: By direction of the President, I have the honor to submit herewith an estimate for an appropriation of the sum of $14,005,565.84, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, to cover the deficit in the operation of the telegraph and telephone systems during the period of Government control and to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution of July 16, 1918, and the act approved July 11, 1919, with reference to just compensation to the owners of the telegraph and telephone systems for the supervision, possession, control, and operation of their properties by the United States during the period beginning midnight July 31, 1918, and ending midnight July 31, 1919. This estimate covers the following items:

(a) Amount due telegraph and telephone companies as of Aug. 1, 1919, accounts of which have been audited and with which terms of settlement have been agreed upon	$11,455,565.84
(b) Estimated amount to cover settlement with the remaining telegraph and telephone companies	1,850,000.00
(c) Estimated amount to cover interest from Aug. 1, 1919, until paid on amount due to telegraph and telephone companies as of Aug. 1, 1919	700,000.00
Total	14,005,565.84

Then the Postmaster General goes carefully into the details, showing how he arrived at that figure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion made, I have hastily penciled a new amendment while the Senator was speaking. I withdraw the amendment previously offered and now offer the following as a substitute:

That the Court of Claims of the United States is hereby authorized to hear and determine any action brought by the telephone or telegraph companies for damages or amounts alleged to be due growing out of the action of the Government in taking over during the war the telephone and telegraph systems of said companies; that all proceedings in said court shall be in consonance with the rules and practice obtaining in said court; that said court shall make findings as to the facts upon any action so brought, together with any and all amounts found to be due said companies or either of them, and shall make due report of its findings to the Congress.

That is very hastily drawn, but it embodies the thought which I suggested. It remits the matter to the Court of Claims and they are to report to Congress.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KING. I renew my motion to strike out the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

I will say that I am not going to press it to a vote to-night, but I wish to have it made the unfinished business. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] desires to speak to-morrow on it, and after it is made the unfinished business I will temporarily lay it aside in order to dispose of one or two matters which Senators desire to bring up to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator simply wishes to move to have the conference report taken up and made the unfinished business and then have it lie over until to-morrow?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it is made the unfinished business, I will ask to have it temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington if he will yield to me to have laid before the Senate the conference report on the District appropriation bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13266) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 9, 10, 20, 24, 25, 26, 33, 35, 38, 40, 49, 50, 53, 56, 70, 71, 76, 82, 83, 84, 85, 87, 88, 97, 104, 105, 106, 112, 114, 115, 117, 119, 124, 125, 126, 128, 129, 130, 134, 142, 143, and 148.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That 40 per cent of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and 60 per cent out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, only, namely:

"Appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, heretofore or hereafter made in other acts and chargeable in any proportion against the revenues of the District of Columbia, shall be paid in the proportions of 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States and 60 per cent from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

"If the estimated net revenues of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, are not sufficient to meet the proportion of the appropriations for that fiscal year charged against such revenues by this and all other acts, or which may be estimated to be charged against such revenues by acts that may be approved during such fiscal year, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall increase the rates of taxation on real estate and tangible personal property sufficiently to make up the difference: Provided, however, That such rates of taxation shall in no event be less than 1½ per cent nor more than 2 per cent."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$76,900"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$614,200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "1 $1,080, 1 $960, 7 at $900 each; in all, $8,340"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 34 of the bill, in lines 1 and 2, strike out "two thousand one hundred and eighty-three" and insert in lieu thereof "two thousand two hundred and eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,540"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter the commissioners are authorized, under such regulations as they may prescribe, to sell the surplus products of the Home for the Aged and Infirm. CHARLES E. CURTIS,
LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. R. DAVIS,
LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask for the adoption of the report.

The principal point in disagreement was the half-and-half question. The conferees agreed by making the amount payable by the District 60 per cent, and out of Government funds 40 per cent, this year only, authorizing the District Commissioners to levy a tax above 1½ cents, if necessary, up to 2 cents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

FORCE AND SALARIES IN PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington if he will consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business in order that I may call up the bill (H. R. 11984) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes?

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator let that go over until tomorrow? It is after 2 o'clock in the morning now.

Mr. NORRIS. I know it is.

Mr. SMOOT. There are two days in which to do business before we adjourn.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but from my experience in the Senate I have an idea that those two days will be taken up with something else, and I will not be able to get in with this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can get it up to-morrow just as well as he can now.

Mr. NORRIS. No. To-morrow morning the Senator from Washington wishes to take up the merchant marine conference report, and I will not be able to call up my bill. The Senator from Washington has a conference report which is the unfinished business, and of course I can not come in except by unanimous consent. I realize that. Everyone else can get in on a motion, but I can not; I have to get unanimous consent. That applies particularly to me at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. As far as I am concerned, I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to taking up the bill he has in charge, but it is now after 2 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. NORRIS. I know it is.

Mr. SMOOT. We have two days remaining and one night until midnight to transact the little business that is left.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator realizes that at least Saturday, and probably to-morrow, a point of no quorum will block anything.

Mr. SMOOT. The same thing may happen to-night.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that it may happen to-night. A point of no quorum would probably bring about an adjournment to-night, which I realize any Senator can make.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any objection at all to the Senator taking up the bill at a reasonable time. I am sure there is not as far as I am concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that there is none and that I can get unanimous consent and waive the formal reading of the bill, there will be nothing but the amendments, and while there are a good many of them, they are all short, just striking out one amount and inserting another; it is a reduction all the way through, with the exception of the last amendment and that is not very long.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it will not take the Senate very long to pass the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the reason why I want to take it up now. It will not take very long. We would have been three-fourths through now if the Senator had not interrupted.

Mr. KING. May I inquire if the Senator is going to insist upon a vote to-night?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not insist on a vote. I realize that.

Mr. KING. I mentioned to the Senator a few moments ago that I would be glad to help him bring up the bill, and I called his attention to the fact that there was one Senator upon this side of the Chamber who I understand desired to say something in regard to the bill. He is not here to-night.

Mr. NORRIS. I expect to-morrow that there will be some other Senator who may want to say something about it.

Mr. KING. I would be glad to vote now to take up the bill and make it the unfinished business.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I will make this request and see how it strikes Senators: I ask unanimous consent that immediately upon the disposition of the conference report on the merchant marine bill, now before the Senate as the unfinished business, the bill to which I have referred be taken up and not laid aside until it is finally disposed of.

Mr. KING. I hope that request will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would suggest that we make it an informal understanding.

Mr. SMOOT. Would it not require a quorum for that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would require a quorum for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing to let everything go in in that way and, of course, run the risk of the conference report on the merchant marine being debated for the next two days, which may happen.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-day.

Mr. POMERENE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is not in order because a unanimous-consent agreement has already been entered into that the Senate shall take a recess at the close of to-day's proceedings.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senate has already agreed to take a recess.

Mr. POMERENE. Such an agreement can be made when it is known that there are certain matters which some of us are anxious to have taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the agreement previously entered into the Senate will take a recess until 11 o'clock to-day.

Thereupon (at 2.15 o'clock a. m., Friday, June 4, 1920) the Senate took a recess until 11 o'clock a. m., Friday, June 4, 1920.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 3, 1920.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the manifold temporal blessings Thou hast bestowed upon us, but we pray for the outpouring of those spiritual blessings which make for righteousness, which bring us in closer relationship with Thee and our fellow men.

It matters little what we believe about God, about Christ, about the hereafter, but everything whether we believe in God, in Christ, and the immortality of the soul; for faith without works is dead.

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three, but the greatest of these is love.

After the similitude of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The respective compensation of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes shall be annual salaries, graded in even hundreds of dollars, and payable in semimonthly payments to be ascertained and fixed by the Postmaster General from their respective quarterly returns to the Auditor for the Post Office Department, or copies or duplicates thereof to the First Assistant Postmaster General, for the calendar year immediately preceding the adjustment, based on gross postal receipts at the following rates, namely:

The compensation of postmasters of the fourth class shall be fixed upon the basis of the whole of the box rents collected at their offices and commissions upon the amount of canceled postage-due stamps and on postage stamps, stamped envelopes, and postal cards canceled, on matter actually mailed at their offices, and on the amount of newspaper and periodical postage collected in money, and on the postage collected in money on identical pieces of third and fourth class matter mailed under the provisions of the act of April 28, 1904, without postage stamps affixed and on postage collected in money on matter of the first class mailed under the provisions of the act of April 24, 1920, without postage stamps affixed, and on amounts received from waste paper, dead newspapers, printed matter, and twine sold at the following rates, namely:

When the amount does not exceed $75 for any one quarter the postmaster shall be allowed 140 per cent on the amount.

When the amount exceeds $75 for any one quarter and does not exceed $100, the postmaster shall be allowed 115 per cent on the amount.

When the amount exceeds $100 for any one quarter the postmaster shall be allowed: On the first $125, 100 per cent; on the next $100 or less, 75 per cent; and on the balance, 60 per cent, the same to be ascertained and allowed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department in the settlement of the accounts of such postmasters upon their sworn quarterly returns: Provided, That when the total compensation of any postmaster at a post office of the fourth class for four consecutive quarters shall amount to $1,000, exclusive of commissions on money orders issued, and the receipts of such post offices for the same period shall aggregate as much as $1,500, the office shall be assigned to its proper class and the salary of the postmaster fixed according to the receipts: Provided further, That in no case shall there be allowed any postmaster of this class a compensation greater than $250 in any one of the first three quarters of the fiscal year, exclusive of money-order commissions, and in the last quarter of each fiscal year there shall be allowed such further sum as he may be entitled to under the provisions of this act, not exceeding for the whole fiscal year the sum of $1,000, exclusive of money-order commissions: And provided further, That whenever unusual conditions prevail, the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may advance any post office from the fourth class to the appropriate class indicated by the receipts of the preceding quarter, notwithstanding the proviso which requires the compensation of fourth-class postmasters to reach $1,000 for four consecutive quarters, exclusive of commissions on money-order business, and that the receipts of such post office for the same period shall aggregate as much as $1,500 before such advancement is made: And provided further, That when the Postmaster General has exercised the authority herein granted he shall, whenever the receipts are no longer sufficient to justify retaining such post office in the class to which it has been advanced, reduce the grade of such office to the appropriate class indicated by its receipts for the last preceding quarter.

The Postmaster General is authorized to fix the salaries of assistant postmasters at offices of the second class, based on gross postal re-

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the ranking member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, opposed to the bill?

Mr. MOON. Yes. I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, if I may be heard for a moment: I am not opposed to the bill. I introduced the bill by direction of the Postal Commission, and I agree with every member of the committee that this bill ought to pass. I demand a second for the purpose only of getting the time for Members as required under the rule to debate. If there is any member on the committee or any Member in the House who will say that he will vote against this bill, I am willing that he shall control the time; but I am not willing for a gentleman to say that he is opposed to the bill, which, under suspension of the rules, can not be changed, in order to control the time, when finally he will vote for the bill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me as to the right?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman very briefly.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has clearly indicated his attitude. There are provisions in the bill to which I am opposed. The gentleman from Tennessee agrees with the gentleman [Mr. STEENERSON] who moves the suspension of the rules, and I respectfully submit, as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, that if I disagree with some of the provisions of the bill I am, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee, entitled to recognition and to control part of the time for debate under my demand for a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am opposed to portions of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill? If he does not say he is opposed to the bill, the Chair thinks——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am opposed to the bill in its present shape.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman going to vote for the bill?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I can not say as to how I shall vote.

The SPEAKER. Probably no bill comes before the House that some Member is not opposed to, in so far as some provision in the bill may be concerned. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to demand a second.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee has 20 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The motion to pass the bill under suspension of the rules having been made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], would it be in order to offer any amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman undoubtedly knows that it will not.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Then I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I could not hear; did the Clerk read the amendments which are a part of the motion?

The SPEAKER. He did.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I know; but I was about to submit a request for unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I was about to submit that request for unanimous consent before the gentleman from Minnesota was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I will yield later. I implore Members of the House to be silent and to hear the few explanations that I have to make on the bill.

The motion is made to suspend the rules and pass this bill, which contains some amendments which were to correct mistakes that were discovered in the bill as introduced by direction of the joint commission. Most of them are simple corrections of typographical errors. Some of them are of a little more importance, but they were all considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads yesterday, and they may be said to be simply carrying out the intentions of the joint commission.

One instance is this: One of the most important corrections of the bill is the fourth one, on line 17 of page 4, striking out the figures "100" and inserting in lieu thereof "125," and in line 23 on the same page, after the word "postmaster," striking out the word "of" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "at."

This relates to fourth-class postmasters, of which there are something over 20,000 in the United States. The joint commission determined that they would not reduce the present compensation of these postmasters, but such would have been the result of the bill as actually drawn. We figured it out in committee yesterday, and this amendment, offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], and unanimously agreed to by the committee, carries out the original intention of the framers of this bill.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield first to the gentleman from Mississippi for a question.

Mr. CANDLER. I would like to have the gentleman explain fully what increase is given to fourth-class postmasters under the paragraph the gentleman has just mentioned.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would not like to undertake to do that now, because it involves an intricate calculation; but I will say that it does increase their compensation, which is about $4,000,000 more than the total receipts of those offices.

Mr. CANDLER. I am glad to know that these faithful public servants of the people will under the terms of this bill receive an increase. I have long favored granting them an increase in compensation and making them some allowance for expenses of their offices. As no amendments are in order, because this and other increases are granted, I will vote for the bill as presented, it being the best obtainable at present. However, I understand from the gentleman who is chairman of the Post Office Committee that it is a substantial increase over and above what the fourth-class postmasters are now receiving.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is an increase.

Mr. EMERSON. Will there be any opportunity to propose amendments to increase the amounts in the bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. This is the only one, and this does not increase the amount that was intended to be given by the bill. It is inserted only because the language as drawn by the draftsman did not carry out the intention of the commission. There were four members of the commission on the committee yesterday, and it was unanimously agreed that that was proper.

Mr. EMERSON. No amendment can be offered on the floor to-day?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is familiar with the rule of the House which provides that the only amendments which can be submitted when a motion is made to suspend the rules are the amendments which are contained in the motion.

Now, with the permission of the House, I should like to make a few explanations of these salary increases. The present salary of the lowest-paid carrier is $1,200. The proposed salary begins at $1,400, an increase of $200. The same thing is true of the clerks. They begin at $1,400, and they are divided into five grades. First we had four grades. Now it is provided in this bill, as you will notice, that substitutes when appointed clerks or carriers are given credit for the time they have served as substitutes, and if they have served 306 days, equivalent to a year of working days, they are put into the $1,500 class at once. Almost all the new clerks appointed next year will be taken from the substitutes, so that the starting of these men will be at $1,500 in most cases, because the majority of them have served a year or more. Some of them have served several years. This is to be taken into account when you speak of the amount of the increase.

Another thing: The progression or promotion and increase of salary ends in four years; and on the sixth page of the report of the committee on this bill you will see a table that gives the specific total increases of these clerks and employees, clerks in first and second class offices, special clerks, city letter carriers, Railway Mail Service, post-office inspectors, clerks at division headquarters, Rural Delivery Service, postmasters of the first, second, third, and fourth classes, village delivery carriers, assistant postmasters at second-class offices, and so on. Now the present compensation is the basic salary before the war and $200 added, which was a temporary increase—from $100 to $200 temporary increase provided in the joint resolution of November 8 last. These increases are over and above those increases, so that this makes the third increase since we began increasing, since the beginning of the war.

The total increases of the employees covered in this bill for the first year amount to $34,375,087. This is the estimate made by the department. The next year it will amount to $39,775,587. For the third year the total increases will be $43,711,187, and for the fourth year $45,883,587.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will ask it quickly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to ask the gentleman why there was not a substantial increase made in the salaries of fourth-class postmasters when there was such an increase made in the salaries of second and third-class postmasters?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is evidently mistaken.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is as I read the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. The increases to the fourth-class postmasters are perhaps the hardest to justify, but we consider that they are justified in view of all the circumstances.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would like to ask if this bill follows the recommendations of the salary commission?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman should know that this is the salary commission bill. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] just explained that.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I want to ask the gentleman if he is aware that the postal employees are generally very greatly disappointed in the increases in this bill? The increases in their salaries are not proportionate to the increased cost of living and, in my opinion, are too low entirely and will result in badly demoralizing the Postal Service. They have long been working for niggardly pay.

Mr. STEENERSON. We are aware of that. I have received perhaps 500 or 1,000 telegrams on the subject. I have been receiving telegrams for a long time. In fact, if I were to judge by the amount of mail I receive I should think I was the most important man in the House. [Laughter.] But the reason I receive these letters and telegrams is that they want more salaries. But gentlemen of the House and the country ought to understand that many of the members of the commission would have liked to have higher salaries, and many of them would have liked to see a little higher compensation for the rural carriers. I have a great many of them in my country, and the expenses of maintaining equipment, of horse feed, and of automobiles and gasoline are very much increased. But these are their recommendations, to which we have all agreed. Many of them are compromises, in order that speedy action might be taken.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

Mr. STEENERSON. I know that the employees in the city of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], who is so persistent here as almost to prevent anything being said on behalf of the bill, are perhaps the worst situated of any postal employees. There is no question that in a city like New York the cost of living is higher, especially house rents, than in many other smaller places.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman gave the figures as to the increases in salary during recent years. May I ask him whether there has not been a great increase in the postal receipts? Or if it is not a fact that the increases in salaries are not at all commensurate with the increase in the amount of receipts?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; the gross receipts have greatly increased since July 1, 1919. The department reports about 25 per cent increase in 50 of the largest cities. Now, these salary increases are the result of the labors of this commission of 10 members, 5 Senators and 5 Representatives, for more than a year. This is the first time in the history of the country that the employees have been heard directly. The Post Office Committee in former years had to depend on the information furnished by the department in adjusting salaries. We had no other source of information. The department has not recommended any increase. It did not recommend the joint resolution of last November. In order to get the original sources of information this commission determined to hold hearings, where the employees of all grades could give their views and experiences. We did not finish the testimony until the 23d of April, and since that time we have been analyzing it and have done the best we could. Those who criticized us for not reporting first and hearing evidence afterwards are manifestly unfair. I do not think the work is perfect, but it is as near as we are able to bring forth. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by me at the direction of the Postal Commission as the result of the report of the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries, which was created by an act of Congress in response not only to the demand of the employees but of the Government and the general public. It is impossible for me in the time I have—and I would not be justified in attempting it—to give a full discussion of this question. I call attention, however, to the statement in the preliminary report and to the fact that subsequently there will be a detailed report in reference to this matter. The judgment of the commission is expressed in the bill before the House. The last appropriation bill carried $434,000,000, and the increase provided by the bill is $462,000,000, and the percentage is the proportion of $434,000,000 to $462,000,000.

Every employee of the Postal Service has been cared for in this bill; all the employees of the Government have been looked after and some increases given, perhaps not quite as much as desired by them or as little as the Government recommended in some instances, but it is fair and reasonable under the circumstances. You have read the report and the bill. It contains the result of our conclusions.

There is only one member of the committee that had any objection to any part of the bill that I know of, and in a spirit of fairness to him I am going to yield to him more time than I will yield to anybody else. Of the 20 minutes at our disposal I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, under the gag rule, which in parliamentary language is called "suspension of the rules," it is proposed to pass this bill. It precludes amendments. It is cleverly designed to compel such of us as desire to vote for a really adequate wage to postal employees, especially in cities, to accept the bill as recommended by the commission or else leave the men now so badly underpaid without any increase at all. The procedure which stifles debate, shuts off amendments, and forces the men to accept half a loaf rather than get no loaf at all is so unfair that I must enter, though it be ineffective, my earnest protest.

The measure is fraught with importance not merely to the large army of postal employees affected by the insufficient increase proposed, but to the community at large, every man and woman of which is interested in the prompt and proper handling, distribution, and delivery of mail.

In the brief time allotted me I can not discuss in detail the figures which demonstrate the inadequacy of the increase the Postal Commission has proposed for clerks, carriers, and some other employees in the large cities of this country. I know they are wholly insufficient in New York. I believe them to be equally insufficient in such cities as Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Detroit, and San Francisco.

The minimum wage of $1,400 and the maximum wage of $1,800, not to be gotten till the carrier or clerk reaches the fifth grade, will by no means satisfy the men in my city, where living conditions actually demand a better and higher wage for the arduous and exacting labor these men perform. [Applause.]

The penurious policy of withholding from postal employees an adequate wage has resulted in a serious breakdown and crippling of the Postal Service. It has become aggravated to such an extent that the business interests of the country have become aroused. [Applause.] They, too, now plead anxiously that we no longer delay providing the mailmen with proper compensation to meet their just and necessarily insistent demands.

The community which is vitally interested in keeping the Postal Service up to the highest and best standard of efficiency has become keenly awakened that we have been dealing niggardly and meanly with the postal men. They realize that as a consequence of not giving these public servants a square deal inefficiency in service has come, to the detriment of business interests, and, in fact, of everyone interested in getting prompt and efficient mail service. Yet you propose to jam this bill through under suspension of the rules and cut off every chance to secure a vote testing in the open the sentiments of the individual Members of the House on the various propositions of salaries embodied in the bill.

The underpayment of the postal employees in the large cities has been and is unbecoming our great Government. Congress has sorely lacked in its duty toward these deserving men and women whose devotion to duty should have given them better reward. The American people as a whole are not so narrow or ungracious as to deny to those who serve them so well as the postal employees a decent living wage sufficient to provide them with, according to American standards, the necessities of life which their present situation requires. [Applause.]

Kept at pay far below that which the great majority of them could have earned in other occupations for which they were fitted, yet working with intelligence, diligence, and zeal, do you wonder that dissatisfaction has come among the rank and file and that the best and most valued men who are still sound and able-bodied are rapidly leaving the service? Resignations have largely poured in, because men and women no longer could remain under a salary that did not permit them to meet the necessary and increasing expense of living and maintain their families.

What has been the result of the penurious and cheeseparing policy Congress has up till now pursued? Time was when the eligible lists were filled with thousands of applicants clamoring for appointment to the service. Now there are scarcely handfuls.

The standard of civil-service examinations has been lowered greatly in order that a sufficient supply of persons can be obtained to enter the service. As a matter of necessity, persons far less efficient and far less qualified had to be taken to supply the places of well trained, well tried, and skilled employees who were the pride of the Postal System of the United States. [Applause.]

I realize the commission has done much work. It has gone through a lot of examinations, traveled through the country, brought us heaps of figures, and taken care of many of the postal men in the rural districts. Yet there are many inequalities to be found in the bill which under the present procedure of rushing through this measure we can not now correct. However, in so far as the principal cities are concerned, the commission has not, neither has the Post Office Committee, taken care of the men and women there in a way befitting or meeting the living conditions that attend them.

You say you will start the carriers and clerks at $1,400 and gradually advance them till, after years of service, they reach $1,800, and there you stop. Now, then——

Mr. MACCRATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. MACCRATE. Would it cost more than $3,600,000 to give the fifth-grade men what they demand and what they are entitled to?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; I do not think it would cost any more than that. When last September we passed the bill providing a temporary increase of $150 for the mailmen, I sought to secure in some form the adoption of my bill providing for a substantial increase of salary up to 35 per cent, but in view of the necessity to exercise reasonable economy, I indicated my willingness to make it less, but at least 25 per cent.

But opportunity then to get a vote of the House was denied by the same objectionable method we are now employing—suspension of the rules.

As the matter stands it will serve no useful purpose to point out the staggering increase in the cost of living in cities. Rental costs of even the humblest apartments have mounted so high as to become prohibitive to persons of small salaries. Food, clothing, yes, everything that enters into the necessities of life, have increased in price—the dollar no longer is worth a hundred cents in purchasing power as of old—yet we have neglected to take care of these worthy, deserving postal employees.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that at some future time, when in a businesslike way we shall cease to practice a false economy, we may succeed in doing justice to these employees, for the American public, I am sure, will not begrudge them an increase to which they are honestly and well entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE].

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutets to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, the Post Office Department is one of the big business institutions of the United States. By that term I do not mean that it is an institution conducted for profit, because it is not, and, indeed, it should not be. The aim of the Postmaster General in his administration of the Postal Service, and of Congress in prescribing by law the respective rates of postage, should not be to make the Government service a profit but only that the service shall be self-sustaining. The public would not approve of a profit-making policy, but, on the other hand, I am sure they would not favor any policy of extravagance which would take no thought of the burdens of the taxpayers but freely pile up deficits from year to year. The Postal Commission, therefore, in studying the reclassification of nearly 300,000 postmasters and employees and determining what their salaries and compensation should be, has had to keep steadfastly in mind the whole situation involved, and while recognizing that the United States as an employer must be just and fair to the interests of its employees, still at the same time a due and proper regard must be had for the Public Treasury. I think the commission has done its duty well, and I intend to give this bill my whole-hearted support. Of course, in a measure affecting so large a number of men it is difficult to meet everyone's approval in all particulars, and perhaps each of us, if left to himself, would have written some particular provision differently from what the committee has written it, but that is true of most any legislation of scope and importance, and it would be very unusual if it were not true in this case.

It is very easy for the onlooker to stand out on the side lines and criticize the man who is at the bat, but when he comes to pick up the stick himself and wield the willow he finds the task is not so easy. The fact that these increases will involve an additional amount of expenditure to the extent of $40,000,000 annually is very conclusive proof that the committee has not been unmindful of the just and meritorious claims of the employees, and the fact that the additional expenditures will go to a class of workers which have been rendering an earnest and faithful service and that such increases are not in any manner excessive is proof conclusive that the committee has not been unmindful of the taxpayer.

Therefore, I believe that the bill is one which can well receive the unanimous support of the House, and I hope that it will do so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Members will naturally be interested to know what the average pay of postal clerks and carriers will be under the bill we are now considering. I will be glad to give the figures on that point. There will be five grades of postal clerks and carriers, and the salary of the entrance grade is made $1,400, and $100 more for each grade on up to $1,800 for the fifth grade is provided. Using as a basis for my computation the last figures which I saw as to the number of men in the respective grades, the average pay of a postal clerk will be, under this bill, in the neighborhood of $1,732 per annum, which will be an average of $5.66 per day, or an average of 71 cents per hour.

The pay of letter carriers is fixed by the same scale, and the number of carriers in the respective grades is so nearly in the same proportion as those of the postal clerks that the average annual salary will be practically the same, and we may also count them at $1,732 per annum. The average annual salary of postal clerks and letter carriers was about $1,050 on June 30, 1913, and comparing this to the $1,730 average under this bill will make an increase of 65 per cent since that date. No one would, of course, contend that these increases are excessive in view of the increase in the cost of living, but I think any fair-minded man will admit that they are comparable to the increases received in comparable employment. For example, such increases are somewhat higher than the average increases which have thus far been given to railroad employees.

RURAL CARRIERS.

Rural carriers received an average salary on June 30, 1913, of $1,062.37, and this bill provides for $1,800 for a standard route of 24 miles. This makes an increase of 69 per cent over that which was received in 1913, and seems fair, as compared to the average increase of 65 per cent to clerks and carriers during the same period of time, and to which I have already referred.

FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS.

Now, as to fourth-class postmasters, the increase given to them is hard to figure on a percentage basis, on account of the fact that there is such a wide variation in amount of business done at these small offices and the further fact that the payment of salary is based on percentage of cancellation allowed. I am glad to state that the committee, upon my motion, adopted an amendment allowing to fourth-class postmasters 100 per cent of the first $125 cancellation per quarter instead of 100 per cent of $100, as first written in the bill.

Concrete illustrations will better explain the remuneration of fourth-class postmasters under the bill than probably anything else that I can say. For purpose of illustration, let us take an office with $300 cancellation per quarter. Under the old law, prior to any of the increases of the last two or three years, the rate of compensation at such an office would be as follows: One hundred per cent of the first $50 equals $50, 60 per cent of the next $100 equals $60, and 50 per cent of the remainder equals $75, making a total compensation of $185 per quarter for that office. Under the bill we are now considering the compensation of the same $300 per quarter office would be as follows: One hundred per cent of the first $125 equals $125, 75 per cent of the next $100 equals $75, and 60 per cent of the remainder equals $45, making a total of $245 compensation per quarter at such office, which would be an increase over the old rate of 33 per cent. Personally I think the increase should be larger than that, and if I had an opportunity to offer an amendment to the bill I would be constrained to do it, but as this bill is to be passed under a suspension of the rules, no opportunity for amendment will be offered, and therefore I must take it as it is.

I will not undertake at this time to discuss the salary schedules of railway mail clerks, assistant postmasters, supervisory officials, and so forth. Suffice it to say that these employees are all given substantial increases along the general lines of the bill, and I do not think they will have any just cause to complain at the treatment which is accorded them.

PUBLIC WILL HAVE NO RIGHT TO COMPLAIN AT THESE INCREASES.

Mr. Speaker, I am fully convinced that these salary increases are fully deserved, and that the public will have no right to charge Congress with any extravagance in granting them. One of the common complaints that we hear these days is that notwithstanding very large increases in wages and salaries have been made to labor, its efficiency has decreased and the cost per unit of output has been unduly increased on account of decreased production. Whatever truth there may be in these complaints, they can not be fairly charged against the employees of the Postal Service. For example, the number of employees for the present fiscal year has been increased less than 10 per cent, whereas the volume of mail matter handled by the department and the receipts derived therefrom have increased fully 25 per cent over those of the last fiscal year. This, then, can mean but one thing, and that is that the output of the labor of postal employees has not only held its own, but has increased, and the employees have not been soldiering on the job. Express employees have had various strikes; railway freight service has been demoralized at times by switchmen's tie-ups. All of this has had the effect to pile up great quantities of parcel-post matter for the Post Office Department to handle. But the department, under Postmaster General Burleson and these loyal employees, has met the situation with splendid efficiency and has declared no mail embargoes; and, despite the fact that some unfair newspapers and magazines are constantly iterating and reiterating that the Postal Service has broken down, we all know it has not broken down and has served the people remarkably well under many severe and unusual handicaps.

Fidelity to duty such as the postal employees have displayed under these trying circumstances deserves recognition and reward, and even the most ardent economist of the House should find it easy to support this measure, and should not hesitate a moment to do so. Verily, of these postal employees it may be said, "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, on the 30th of June, 1918, the minimum pay of the postal clerks and carriers was $800 and the maximum pay $1,200. On the 1st of July, 1918, under the so-called Madden Classification Act, the minimum pay was increased to $1,000 and the maximum to $1,500. Under House joint resolution 151, passed October 9, 1919, a further increase of approximately $200 was given to every man in the service. So that the man who was getting $800 on the 30th of June, 1918, on the 1st of July, 1919, under the resolution, which was retroactive, began to draw $1,200, and every man above him drew in proportion. This bill provides a minimum pay of $1,400 and a maximum of $1,800 for clerks and carriers. That gives the man who was getting $800 on the 30th of June, 1918, an increase of $600 a year, and the man who is getting $1,800 under this bill also gets an increase of $600 a year.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. May I ask the gentleman whether or not the bonus goes with this bill, and also whether he can advise the House how the representatives of the various associations of postal employees here in Washington view this measure.

Mr. MADDEN. The bonus, added to the former base pay, is made the base pay in the consideration of this bill, and on top of the bonus and the former base pay we add $200 on the average. Does that answer the gentleman?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. My conversation with the leading men of the Postal Service, who I understand are qualified to speak for the men of the country, would indicate that while not exactly satisfied with the amount we allow, yet nevertheless they are pleased, because we are allowing what we do allow, and they want this law enacted.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not yield any further. I simply wish to say that if anybody has any more interest in the welfare of the postal employees of the Nation than I have I would like to get his picture. I do not demagogue with these men. I promise them nothing, and I do not make speeches on the floor of this House for the purpose of getting votes. I realize these men are wonderful men; that they are entitled to great consideration; that they have the confidence of the American people; that they ought to be fairly treated, and I believe in my inner conscience that the bill pending before us is not only fair, but liberal treatment.

My first activity in connection with the post-office service began in 1907. I was not a member of the committee at that time, but I saw the necessity for putting the men in the service on a basis that would justify them in making it their life work.

When I and several other Members of the House attempted to have the 1907 classification act placed in the pending Post Office appropriation bill the chairman of the committee, Jesse Overstreet, of Indiana, objected to it, and since, under the rules of the House it was not in order to insert a legislative provision into an appropriation bill, it looked as if for the time being the classification of postal employees would not be possible. Mr. CANNON was Speaker of the House at that time, and I recall visiting him at midnight after he had gone to bed and induced him to agree, as chairman of the Committee on Rules, to report a rule the next morning making the classification legislation in order. He reported the rule; it was adopted, and the classification provision was made a law. Under that classification clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service were given an entrance salary of $600 per annum, with promotion to the $800 grade after a year's satisfactory service; to the $900, $1,000, and $1,100 grades automatically after a year's satisfactory service in each grade; and provision was made for a maximum salary of $1,200 in first-class offices and $1,100 in second-class offices, promotions being made to the two latter grades only on recommendation of the postmasters.

Later on I became a member of the Post Office Committee, and my recollection is that in 1912, at my instance, the $600 grade was abolished and the entrance salary became $800 on the 1st of July, 1913. On the 1st of July, 1918, the entrance salary was raised to $1,000, and the maximum salary to $1,500, and in October, 1919, under House joint resolution 151, introduced by me, $200 was added to all salaries of clerks and carriers receiving less than $1,500, and $150 to those receiving $1,500. Thus, from the 1st of July, 1913, to the 1st of July, 1919, the entrance salaries of clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service were raised from $800 to $1,200, and the maximum salary under automatic promotions in first-class offices from $1,100 to $1,650, and in second-class offices from $1,000 under automatic promotions to $1,650. It is true that a certain percentage of the men in first-class offices were promoted to the $1,200 on the recommendation of the postmasters, and in the second-class offices to the $1,100 grade on such recommendations, but these promotions were not given automatically.

The annual cost of the legislation effective July 1, 1918, amounted to $40,000,000; the annual cost of House joint resolution 151 amounted to $35,000,000; the present bill adds an average of $200 per man to the compensation now being received, the annual cost of which will involve an expenditure of $40,000,000, thus making an aggregate under the pending bill and the legislation of 1918 and House joint resolution 151 of $115,000,000, and increases the compensation of every clerk and carrier $600 per annum over that what he was receiving on the 30th of June, 1918.

In addition to this salary legislation it has been provided during my service on the Post Office Committee that post offices shall be closed on Sunday, and that for emergency work on Sunday clerks and carriers shall be given compensatory time off for such service. The pending bill continues that legislation. Men in the Postal Service will remember, too, that the 8-in-10-hour day has been passed during my service on the Post Office Committee, and that prior to the enactment of the Federal compensation act Congress, on the recommendation of the Post Office Committee, enacted a law providing that full compensation should be paid to those injured in the Postal Service for the first year of disability and one-half compensation for the succeeding year. This law was later repealed by the enactment of the Federal compensation act, under the provisions of which the Postal employees are provided for in case of injury. I recall, too, with great pleasure, assisting in the preparation of legislation granting the Postal employees freedom from duty on national holidays, and this bill goes one step further and provides that for all Sunday emergency work performed it shall be obligatory on the department to allow compensatory time off within the six succeeding days, and it also provides that compensatory time or compensation shall be allowed within 30 days after emergency work is performed on holidays, and I am happy to be able to say that this bill also provides for the first time for a sick-leave period of 10 days in each year with pay, cumulative for three years, thus insuring the men in the service that no deductions shall be made from their pay for absence on account of sickness for the period indicated.

It gave me great pleasure to assist in the enactment of the retirement law, under the provisions of which not only the employees of the Postal Service but all other superannuated employees of the Government are insured against want when they are no longer able to perform the duties of the position they occupy.

To the consideration of the questions embraced in the pending bill I have given much time and careful study; it has involved many sacrifices of time and patience and has called for great endurance; the work has been voluminous and complicated, but a sincere effort has been made throughout the consideration of the problems involved to reach just conclusions, to adjust the compensation of the men along equitable lines, and to provide them adequate compensation for the work performed. It is a source of gratification to be able to say that during all the deliberations covering the long period of time the commission was at work, that every manifestation of friendship possible for the men in the service was shown by every member of the commission, and every agreement reached was unanimous. Every member on the commission recognized the loyalty and ability of the men and their constant adherence to the promotion of the department's interests. The commission recognized in the personnel of the Postal Service a high standard of intelligence and patriotism, and each member of the commission entered upon the work with a firm determination to do justice not only to the service but to the men and women in the service, and it is believed that the provisions of this bill, embodying as they do the unanimous conclusions of the commission, set forth a just and equitable solution of the problems involved. It is to be hoped that the compensation reported by the commission and which is now about to be enacted into law will prove not only satisfactory to the men in the service but will encourage them in further efforts toward the development of harmony and good will and an enthusiastic devotion to the service to which the people of the Nation look with pride.

The constantly increasing volume of business in the Postal Service will require the recruitment of new men in large numbers, and it is my earnest hope that the young men of the country who wish to follow a career may decide to enter this service. There are many important places above the grades of clerk and carrier which, I believe, under the present law carry compensation which will be considered adequate for the technical duties and responsibilities attached to such places. The field is open to all who enter the Postal Service for promotion to these positions, and I hope that the day is not far off when all positions in the service, up to First Assistant Postmaster General, may be open to men who qualify themselves to fill them. There should be no politics in the postal business; it is a great business institution; it should be conducted along business lines, and every man who enters at the bottom should feel that he has a chance, by constant effort and devotion, to reach the top.

Executive ability is a rare qualification, and every man who has such ability should find an easy road to promotion in this wonderful service. It now embraces 300,000 men and women. The last Post Office apppropriation bill provides for the expenditure of $462,000,000, and I would not be surprised to see this increased to a billion in the next 15 years. The time is coming, if it has not already come, when the Post Office Department will be the biggest single activity of the Government. It is the only Government activity that reaches every home. All are anxious that it should be conducted without taint of politics and, too, that only men who have the confidence of the public and have the interest of the public at heart should be engaged in it. It should be the constant purpose of all to popularize this great Government establishment by giving the best service that it is possible to render.

The parcel-post branch of the service has become so enormous that it must soon be separated from other classes of mail in order to permit of the prompt dispatch of first-class letter mail. The growth of the parcel-post business is phenomenal; no one can predict its volume for the future; and now, before it is too late, provision should be made to handle parcel-post mail in buildings separated from the other mail in order that there may be no delay in the handling, dispatching, and transporting of mail which it is important shall be delivered promptly. With the separation of this class of mail, I feel confident that a very great improvement in the present inadequate service can be made.

My admiration for the postal men is unbounded, and I consider the opportunities which have come to me to assist in promoting their welfare as a great privilege. I have enjoyed the work; it has been arduous; I have never saved myself by shirking any responsibility; I have known no hours; I have burned much of the midnight oil in an effort to promote the service and provide for the men's welfare. I am happy if I have been instrumental in adding anything to the betterment of either the service or the men. My devotion to the service is due to a determination to do what may be within my power to make the Postal Service what the American people think it ought to be.

There has been much misinformation disseminated in respect to what provision the present bill makes for the men. To give some idea of what it does provide, I am taking the privilege of inserting a few tabulated statements, the reading of which will set at rest much of the doubt which I understand has been expressed as to the adequacy of the compensation provided for in the legislation.

At nondelivery classified stations, known as finance stations, each $25,000 of postal receipts shall be considered as equal to one additional employee.

At classified stations having less than four employees and where the receipts are less than $100,000 the salary of the superintendent shall not be greater than that of a special clerk.

At classified stations having four employees or more the salary of the superintendent shall be as follows:

4 and not exceeding 6 employees	$2,100
7 and not exceeding 18 employees	2,200
19 and not exceeding 32 employees	2,300

With the exception of the offices with receipts above $20,000,000, the number of titles now in use has been reduced from 24 to 9, and in the above schedule the following titles have been eliminated: Superintendent of second-class matter, superintendent of carriers, superintendent of inquiry, chief mailing clerk, chief stamp clerk, finance clerk, stenographers, and clerk in charge of stations.

We live in a great country, the greatest under the sun. No such opportunities as we have are enjoyed by any other people. It should be our constant aim to harmonize all the elements with a view to united cooperation in the promotion of America's welfare. No class of men are better equipped to promote Americanism than those who are engaged in the Postal Service. Americanism should be the watchword; Americanism can not be expressed in words; it is not in what we say but in what we do. Americanism is to be found in the conscience, in the mind, the heart, the attitude. It is a thing that can not be blighted by unfriendly contact; it is something that is not afraid of criticism; it answers it; it encourages it. If it is not found in the conscience, if the heart promptings are not such as to lead the individual forward to the fulfillment of the conscientious obligation to his country and his Government, it is not Americanism. It is not necessary to brand Americanism; it is to be found in the daily life of the citizen; it is expressed in the constant determination of the individual to justify his right to the confidence of his fellows; it is an unseen and constant performance of the obligations of citizenship, which leads the individual into a cooperative union with his fellows to develop a patriotism which knows no turning; it is the fulfillment of an obligation, without hope of reward, to a country which offers greater opportunity for the development of manhood and the comforts of life and the freedom of action than are offered to man anywhere else on earth. To be a citizen in such a land should be an inspiration to each of us to lead us on in a spirit of friendly cooperation in the development of harmony of action and in the upbuilding and perpetuation of our Government and its institutions.

It makes me happy to believe that the men in the Postal Service are imbued with this spirit of Americanism. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL].

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I realize that I can not go very deeply into the contents of this bill in the time allotted to me, but I desire to say a few words in support of the measure. I would like to say, with regard to the work of the postal-wage commission which prepared this bill, that I have had the pleasure of serving on the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with several of the members of the commission, and know them to be painstaking, conscientious, and able men. I know they have worked hard on this problem, and know that this bill is the result of weeks of tedious, tiresome work. I know that at this time this is the only bill which can be passed, and that is one of my reasons for giving it my support.

The petition of the letter carriers and clerks, indorsed by all of the people of the country, was based on the principle of a living wage, and I do not believe this bill begins to meet that petition. A living wage is one that is required to house, feed, and clothe an average family. Since 1914 the cost of living has increased almost 80 per cent, and there does not seem to be any tendency toward a decline in living costs at this time. The postal worker has had to meet these increased costs just as much as anybody else has had to; but, instead of his salary being increased to a figure which would give him a fighting chance against the profiteers, he was obliged to watch workers in other lines of endeavor receive increased compensation, bounties, and other benefits during the war. He stuck to his post, and saw to it that American industries did not suffer, but rather, by his devotion to duty, he added to the great work being performed overseas by our Army and Navy, and his was a great sacrifice. He is entitled to a just reward for such service, and we should not hesitate in giving it to him.

The unrest among the men in the service is only made more acute by such a bill as this, which does not allow them an opportunity to meet the demands of the times. These men could have done as many other employees of the Government did during the war—threaten to tie up the service by resigning—but, faithful to the end, sacrificing their own interests and the interests of their families, they stuck to their posts of duty, believing that when all was over they would receive justice in the way of fair wages. Instead, they are again disappointed by being obliged to accept a half loaf when they are entitled to a whole loaf.

Under the rules by which the House is trying to pass this bill I am prevented from offering any amendments to the bill. If I could, I would ask that the minimum entrance salary for post-office employees be made $1,800 instead of $1,400, as carried in this bill. I hope that this will be done in the Senate when the bill is considered by that body.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this bill will pass unanimously. It is true it is insufficient to meet the needs of the postal employees throughout the country, but I hope soon to be afforded the pleasure of voting for another bill granting more substantial increases to postal employees, so near and so vital to the welfare of the people and business of the United States.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] one-half minute.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, the time allowed for debate on the pending bill is not sufficient to permit extensive remarks, but as the measure is being considered under a rule which precludes amendment, I am not sure that discussion can result in real benefit.

While I am sure the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries made an honest effort to properly adjust compensation in some respects, its report is not in accordance with my conception of justice and right.

I wish the bill might be considered under a rule making it subject to amendment. I am sure it could be amended to advantage, but upon the theory that a half loaf is better than none, I shall vote for its passage.

I may be so constituted by nature and environment that I sympathize with the fellow who can not help himself, but I fear there are those who, for the same reason, do not properly appreciate service or sympathize with the 300,000 postal employees throughout the country.

The theory upon which salary for the 41,000 fourth-class postmasters throughout the country is based, in my judgment, is very unjust, in that we compensate them not for service rendered, but upon a basis of stamp cancellation. No matter how many letters they receive, how many stamps they sell, how many valuable packages they handle, or the burden they impose, no allowance is made upon such basis. The mail-order houses located in the larger cities are continually sending packages into the country districts to be handled by this class of postmasters. They are burdened with the safe delivery of same, without receiving any compensation therefor.

These officers, as a rule, being the only agents of the Government in their respective localities, are frequently called upon by the public to perform service for which they receive no compensation. As a rule they represent the Government and the public in a capable and efficient way, always without complaint. In my younger days I had several months' experience in such capacity, and hence know something of the service they perform.

The compensation allowed them under the provisions of this bill, while better than that heretofore provided, is not, in my judgment, sufficient for their needs or adequate for service rendered.

Next to the fourth-class postmaster, perhaps no other postal employee is in closer touch with those whom he serves than the letter carrier. Certainly no one in the entire service suffers more hardships in performance of duty. No matter how hot or how cold, how wet or how dry, he is always expected to be on duty and to perform his service within the allotted time. He, like the private soldier, is often wet when he would rather be dry, and cold when he would like to be warm, but he is never able to change his condition and is always subject to orders of his superior officer.

No one will deny that living expenses have increased at least 100 per cent in every section of the country during the past four years. During this time some increase, of course, has been granted to our postal employees, but nowhere has the increase been in proportion to the advanced cost of living. Five per cent increase on a millionaire's wealth will maintain him in luxury, but a 50 per cent increase on the compensation allowed a workingman, who spends all for a living, is not sufficient to meet the necessary demands where living expenses have increased 100 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the people of this Government expect or desire the Post Office Department to be operated for profit, but they demand competency, efficiency, and courtesy. The average taxpayer and citizen throughout the country is conscious of little direct benefit from the Government other than that received through our Postal Department. This he enjoys only in proportion to the efficiency of the service. [Applause.]

There is nothing that makes so much for efficiency in service as satisfied labor, and no laborer can be satisfied without sufficient compensation to maintain himself and those dependent upon him. Every laborer is entitled to this, and no one is more deserving of it than our faithful employees of the Post Office Department. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, there is one gentleman in this House whom I believe has never been treated fairly. He has no opportunities and seldom, if ever, speaks. He is an exceedingly modest gentleman, and I want to hear from him upon this bill. I yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is noted for his wit and facetiousness. I enjoy it when he grants me time. I am heartily in favor of this bill as far as it goes and shall vote for it, but I want to protest at the miserly way in which the rural carriers, the star-route carriers, and the fourth-class postmasters have been treated. They have all been treated like stepchildren, and so far as the star-route carriers and the fourth-class postmasters are concerned, they simply have been cold-decked in this bill. Our star-route carriers are facing bankruptcy. When they executed their contracts they never dreamed of such changed conditions as now exist. Many would pay large sums to be released from their contracts, which, considering present conditions, are in many instances "pound of flesh" exactions. For the life of me I can not understand why the distinguished chairman of this committee did not report out and pass the proposed Sinnott bill, which would have granted the needed relief. Numerous fourth-class postmasters in my district have lately resigned. More will resign. They can not afford to serve longer on such small salaries. We should grant them more relief.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR].

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the rules under which this bill now comes before the House will not permit of its being amended. I feel that an adequate increase has not been granted to the carriers. Of course, it is better to have a half loaf than none at all, and it is only upon that basis that I accept it. I trust, however, that it will be amended in the Senate so as to more adequately care for the needs of the men.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I have heard no encouraging word from my home city of Boston in approval of the bill now before this House. Simply because half a loaf is better than no loaf at all, I am forced to vote for the bill, and I am inclined to think that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is one of the best friends the postal employees ever had in Congress, can help to sponsor such a measure, I can afford to vote for it.

I regret further that the increases provided upon the recommendations of the Postal Commission will not alleviate the living and the working conditions of the men interested. These men, after more than a year's patience, while this commission has been conducting its investigations, are now forced to accept a comparatively measly increase in their stipend or else leave the Government service.

No service touches the people like the Post Office. Each week day a representative of that great agency visits almost every home and office in the land. It is mighty important that the service be maintained with high morale and efficiency. But on a basis of business alone, the case of the mailman has its strongest appeal. He is a skilled workman. Take the conditions in the city of Boston as an example. It is estimated by those who know best that if 100 men were withdrawn from the Boston office distributing room the service could not be restored in six months. Most of the present employees entered the service as picked men on examination. Now, it is impossible to get men to take their jobs, and in some cities, like Detroit, there are 200 vacancies on the force.

The mailman has a hard and a big job. In 10 years' service as a carrier he has covered a route which would reach around the world. He works in all kinds of weather. The Government gives him no sick benefits and has given him hitherto no pension. He has no opportunities for advancement, and on this point alone he has a just reason.

Only the other day I talked with John A. Kelly, president of Local No. 100, National Federation of Post Office Clerks, in reviewing conditions in the Postal Service. He told me that at least 75 per cent of the clerks in the Boston post office are at present doing outside work evenings in order to make both ends meet. Before the war 3,400 young men in Boston eagerly sought permission to take a civil-service examination being held for vacancies in the postal clerical service, but at the last examination only 110 applicants presented themselves. Does not this show you gentlemen something has happened to the service? The old-time clerk is asking if ever such a preposterous situation existed as now exists in their daily toil. "We have gone through a long and intensive system of training and study, memorizing facts by the thousands, and familiarizing ourselves with intricate methods of classification, banking, insurance, and commercial business. All this preparation was accomplished at our own expense and in our own time. Yet, after qualifying as experts we are paid smaller wages than the man who never had such experience or a record of service in the Postal Department. We are paid, in fact, smaller wages than the day laborer," say these experts. Think of it, gentlemen!

I fear that the service is to be the loser if we are not more generous than this bill provides in the way of salary increases. These employees have to live just the same as the rest of us, and they will not be able to so live with a 40 per cent increase of salary when prices of foodstuffs have advanced a hundred per cent since prewar days.

The situation of the faithful employee who remains in the service and withstands the temptations offered by the business world becomes daily more desperate. As one efficient, experienced man after another abandons the service, the burden upon those who remain increases, and from letter carrier to high official the strain is reaching the breaking point.

Mr. Speaker, as I said in opening, I do not feel like supporting the provisions of this bill at this time, because I regret to say that the commission, probably in its hurry to make a report before adjournment, has not given a full measure of just treatment to a class of Federal employees who have waited patiently and who are now overwhelmed with disappointment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has made an earnest appeal for a unanimous vote in this House. Grudgingly I must vote for the bill, but I desire to say in this presence now, that when this Congress convenes next winter, or if by chance we are called into extra session before next winter, I propose to do my humble part in an effort to meet the wishes of the postal employees of America as they have not been met in this bill, and I have every confidence that the gentleman from Illinois will be willing to contribute his energy and influence toward a better pay bill than the one now about to be put upon its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, In the brief time allotted me I wish to express my approval of this bill, in so far as it rewards in some measure, though, in my judgment not a sufficient amount, the faithful postal employees of the Government who have stayed with their tasks without a murmur in the face of overwhelming difficulties and the ever-advancing cost of living. However, I very much regret that this bill is to be passed under the suspension of the rules, without an opportunity of amendment. The rural carriers are not given sufficient compensation under the provisions of this bill to sustain themselves and families and pay for the upkeep of the vehicles and teams necessary for the proper discharge of their duties, and in this respect the bill deals very unfairly and unjustly with them. If I were given an opportunity to do so, I would offer an amendment to this bill that would do justice to these men; they go to their duties in all kinds of weather and expose themselves in many ways which we do not fully appreciate, and to cut them off with a maximum salary of $1,800, and allow nothing to feed their teams and repair their vehicles, is, in my judgment, a great injustice, and whether we will it or not, places us in the position of being unfair to the rural carriers. In fact, when the regular bill making appropriations for the Post Office Department was before this House, I offered an amendment giving the Postmaster General authority to do justice to these men, but the chairman of the committee made a point of order against the amendment, and it was not permitted to come before the House, and I here now most earnestly protest against the passing of this bill under the suspension of the rules, thereby preventing the Members from offering from the floor of the House an amendment that would relieve this and other injustices that appear in the bill. I have had a number of protests against this provision of the bill, and many telegrams pointing out the injustice that is being done the rural carriers, and I, for one, desire to see this injustice remedied before Congress adjourns. Let us be fair to all our people, for it is in this spirit only that we can become really great as a nation and as a people.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to another gentleman from Texas that he may talk about the rural carriers [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, for one long year I have stood on this floor and almost daily called the attention of this Republican Congress to the inadequate pay of our postmasters, our postal employees, and our rural carriers. For many months it looked as though little heed was being paid to my continued appeals. Almost daily I forward to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads letters from efficient postmasters throughout my district pleading for a greater increase in pay; likewise came appeals from hundreds of postal employees and rural carriers, that I continued to present to the chairman and pour into the hopper of this committee.

A committee was appointed, known as a reclassification committee, to take testimony, and go into the matter of the pay of these aforesaid employees and recommend a just and equitable scale. I must confess, Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat disappointed at the report of this committee, and much more am I disappointed at the bill reported by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads now pending before this House.

If it were not for the fact that our Republican majority is constantly playing the game of political expediency and throwing out this sop, and it is a mere sop, to these employees in order to get their votes in the coming election, in my candid judgment we would have got no bill at all if not for the fact that myself and others on the Democratic side, realizing that we were losing our best postmasters on account of the starvation wages, our most efficient rural carriers and postal employees were forced to resign daily, that we stood and hammered on this Republican majority until we actually made them give at least small heed to the cry of the distressed in these lines of employment of our Government.

Postmasters of the first, second, third, and fourth class are to-day working for the same salary that was paid to like officials 30 years ago. This would also apply to postal employees and rural carriers. Now, for one moment consider that the purchasing price of a dollar to-day is one-half what it was 10 years ago.

I shall vote for this bill. Why, certainly, I shall vote for any measure that would better the condition of these patriotic and zealous people even to the smallest degree. But I say, sir, and to the majority of this House, that this bill is a reflection, and a serious one in my judgment, upon the fairness and sense of justice of every man on the Republican side.

When the great volume of added war work was heaped upon our postmasters of this country by the Government, did you hear of one single one of them that murmured, that complained, that shirked his duty in the least? No. As patriotic citizens, as great, strong, thoroughbred Americans, they took another notch in their belts and assumed the added duties cheerfully and energetically. This would apply also to our postal employees who worked day and night, and to our rural carriers who carried the mail and parcel post packages through mud and slush, sunshine and rain, and through snow and sleet, and, mind you, no added pay was advanced for the added burdens imposed upon these employees and officials during the war.

Why, you will vote billions to the contractor who made his millions out of Government contracts during the war when our brave boys in France and Flanders were dying to protect the very interests of these contractor profiteers and who came before this Congress and asked that you reimburse them for their estimated profits, and yet you say the postmaster, postal clerk, and rural carrier are getting all they are entitled to.

I have no patience with any man who expects a servant of the Federal Government to eke out a mere existence upon the pay provided by this Government. Not a dollar can he lay up for the proverbial rainy day. I witnessed, sir, during the "flu" epidemic in my city which raged during the winter months mail carriers stricken down, men who had families dependent upon their daily wage, and not a dollar did they have to provide themselves with medicine or their families with the necessaries of life during their illness. In many instances the good people of my city had to come to their relief and provide same and also take care of burial expenses.

Somebody has got to serve this Government, and they ought not be asked to serve it upon a wage that provides only for a daily existence and in many instances is not sufficient for even the necessaries of life from day to day.

I want to say here and now that I shall not cease my efforts along the line I have pursued since becoming a Member of this Congress to plead for a greater raise, until the employees herein described have been given not only an increase to provide the necessaries of life but one sufficient that they can lay up enough to take care of them and their families when the hand of affliction is laid upon them and when time has whitened their brows. If my people permit me to stay here, I shall never cease my efforts in their behalf until this is accomplished.

In a speech I recently made here on this floor, calling attention to the inadequate pay of second, third, and fourth class postmasters, I stated that good men were resigning every day on account of the inadequate pay, and I was met by the retort from the Republicans that there were plenty of other good men to take their places. This is not a fact, as I stated to my friend at that time, as the many letters in my files in my office and the letters before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will fully verify. In many instances in my district the postmasters have had to call to their assistance their wives and daughters in order to discharge the public's business and also receive the small pay provided for clerk hire by the Post Office Department. The statement has been made that a fourth-class postmaster was a person of little consequence and a fourth-class office could be run by any old body. I want to state that a fourth-class office is just as important to the people it serves as a first-class office. People are entitled to a reasonable distribution of their mail and are about as exacting and require as much at the hands of the postmaster as they require of any other individual on this earth.

I am not pleased with this bill in the least, but I shall vote for it because it is the best that can be gotten at the hands of a Republican Congress, that had rather play politics than deal out exact justice to citizens of this country.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH].

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I shall vote for this bill, H. R. 14388, providing for increased compensation for postal employees, as cheerfully as I voted for the soldiers' bonus bill a few days ago. I recognize that this class of public servants, our postal employees, are shamefully underpaid and their compensation is entirely inadequate and insufficient. The postal employees are among our most valuable and useful public servants. They serve the public faithfuly, in sunshine and storm, always courteous and always faithful, and their present condition on account of insufficient pay is simply inexcusable and deplorable. [Applause.]

I am not voting for this bill because I am entirely satisfied with it; I am not. The increases provided for are entirely too low; they should be much more. But I am voting for it because it is the best that can now be obtained. It will give some relief, and I trust to have the pleasure of voting increased compensation at another time. I simply support this measure now because it is the best we can get, and we must take this or get nothing.

Many of us have received many letters in regard to soldiers' bonus and in regard to increased compensation for postal employees. I have been answering these letters for the last three months, stating to everybody that I intended to vote for both measures, and I have done so with great pleasure. We have received also many letters advising against favorable action on these bills.

Take the soldiers' compensation bill. It has been pointed out that it means a great and heavy tax in the future which the United States Treasury could not stand. We won the war, in fact, we shortened the war, through the heroic sacrifices and blood of our soldiers. Had the war continued six months more it would have cost the United States Treasury and all the people in taxes for the future much more than the bonus will cost them. It was the blood and sacrifices of the soldiers that saved this cost of war and shortened the war, and they deserve every consideration at our hands, and I for one intend to vote always to give them every consideration and everything of possible benefit to them. Many millions made the supreme sacrifice and many millions more stood ready to make the supreme sacrifice. I have always been a friend to soldiers of all wars, and anything I can do for them I shall always cheerfully do. [Applause.]

Take this bill providing for increased compensation for postal employees. It will mean, of course, paying out a considerable sum of money, but who should oppose that in this case? The present compensation is ridiculously low. It has caused demoralization in the Postal Service. It has caused some of our best men to leave the service and others to live on well-nigh starvation wages. Since the beginning of the war the volume of work has almost doubled itself, and their pay has increased but 5 per cent, this regardless of the soaring prices and high cost of living. "The workman is worthy of his hire." So says the Good Book, and so say common sense and fairness and justice. These postal employees deserve all this increase and much more, and I cheerfully vote to give them all the bill does now give them, and only regret that the bill does not give them more. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN].

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, this is a measure demanded not so much by the postal employees and carriers as by the public generally. I do not think there is any one class of people of whom greater efficiency is required and a higher standard of average citizenship than those who are engaged in the Postal Service of the country.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I know of no employees of the Government who are more faithful, more unselfish, more self-sacrificing, and more human in every way than the postal employees, who, taken away from the other remunerative vocations of life, spend their years in devotion to the public service, with little expectation of laying by a competency for a rainy day.

I shall not, in the time devoted to me, take time to pass upon the respective merits of those engaged in the different branches of the service, but shall include all—the postal clerk on the train, the postman who delivers the city mail, the clerk and assistant, and all others employed in the post office, and the rural carrier, and, indeed, all—all are marked and chosen by the United States Government for their proven integrity, their moral uprightness, and their unflagging devotion to the public service.

Aside from performing the official duties imposed upon them, the postal employees ofttimes perform a semi or quasi public service. How often is it the case that we find them to be the representative citizens of their respective communities, called upon to take the leadership in local, municipal, and civic matters?

The bill now under consideration marks an improvement in existing law, and I shall give it my hearty support; yet, I should greatly prefer to vote for a bill even increasing, in some instances, the salaries provided for in this measure. The high cost of living, due to the great World War as a direct cause, will make even now the compensation under the present bill, should it become a law, inadequate in many instances, when we consider the recompense and reward to which postal employees taken as a whole are justly entitled. During the great war, and even now, when thousands of other men and women are engaged in other pursuits, many of which are many times more profitable than the compensation allowed to those who give their lives to the Postal Service, these faithful and devoted friends of good government went, and now go, about their daily task uncomplainingly, ever faithful to the trust reposed in them, and never stopping to challenge the laws and regulations which call for loyal public service.

If the Postal Service is not to be impaired the increase called for by the present bill must be made, for the reason that the general efficiency and qualification of those now engaged in the Postal Service create a general and pressing demand for all such to engage in other pursuits infinitely more remunerative than the compensation now received.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the public generally has been urging and importuning Congress to grant this increase in compensation, though thus far I do not recall of having received, myself, a single demand for an increase of salary from any postal employee residing in my district, so loyal and faithful are they in the performance of their duties, they have withheld all such entreaties. But if the postal system is not to break down, or at least become greatly impaired, this increase must be made, for the time will come when the business world will make such tempting offers to postal employees as to break down, from time to time, the present efficiency of the service, and the public can not permit this to come about. Our duty is to avoid that day, and the enactment of this bill, let us hope, will avert that disaster.

Fortunately for the country the United States Post Office has not in the past few years been a debtor but a creditor institution. And yet there is no reason why the Post Office Department should be a money-making establishment any more than any other activities of the Government, if, in permitting it to be a money-maker and money saver for the Government, the service due the people should be impaired thereby. No, indeed; there should be no impairment of the Postal Service, and the man who lives remote from the town or city should have the privilege of receiving his daily mail, his daily paper for the enlightenment of himself and family, that he and they may keep ever abreast of the times and likewise keep step with and abreast of his friend and neighbor who lives in the city and who may receive his mail three or four times a day.

I say, Why should such a post office out in the rural district or rural route not be served from day to day, even if it is not a paying investment to the Government? Is the Army or is the Navy a self-supporting institution? In fact, may we not, indeed, lay our finger upon many of the functions or branches of the Government that are not self-supporting, that can not possibly be self-supporting, yet are absolutely indispensable to the public welfare, and for which appropriations are made, and should be made, from year to year for their support and maintenance, and all for the public good, yet few of which are really self-sustaining?

Then why compel the Post Office Department to be self-sustaining in every community, when if it fails to be self-sustaining the people who should be served are denied the right of service? I do not say that I object to the Post Office Department being self-supporting, and I am glad to know that it is self-supporting, provided that no citizen of this Republic is denied the right to service in the distribution of his mail he is entitled to receive.

So I shall gladly support the pending measure. And yet there are certain classes of postal employees specified in this bill who, in my opinion, should receive even greater compensation. They and their families have a right to have an outlook in life, to be educated, and to attain to full growth of American citizenship without the denial of a single blessing that should reasonably come to those who give their time, their talent, and their all to the public welfare, as do those who are engaged in the Postal Service of the country.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN].

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill, not because I am satisfied with the salary increases provided in this bill, because I am not, but I shall vote for it on the proposition that it is the best bill we can get. The postal employees are nearer to the great mass of our people than any other group of our Government employees. They believe the postal employees are very inadequately compensated and they will not be satisfied, particularly the people in and near our large cities, where the high cost of living bears so heavily upon the men in the Postal Service with the increases provided in this bill.

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], I think, if he had followed the former legislation in reference to fourth-class postmasters, would have nothing to complain about. It is true that the compensation for first, second, and third class postmasters has not been increased since 1883, but the compensation for fourth-class postmasters has been increased twice in the last few years.

I will say for the information of the gentlemen that while we increase the compensation of fourth-class postmasters but little in this bill, it is true that for the past two or three years we have given them a bonus of 35 per cent which we do not take from them in this bill, but give them a slight increase in addition. It will be remembered that the Government does in this bill give this class of postmasters a bonus of $3,250,000 the country over; that is, the Government pays them this amount in addition to their total cancellations. Your commission on postal salaries and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads thought, as we believe these postmasters will think, that we were liberal with them since they have had two substantial increases while the other classes of postmaster have not had an increase in compensation for more than 35 years. A large majority of post offices of the fourth class are maintained as a matter of convenience to the people and are maintained at a tremendous loss to the Government. There are 20,360 of these officers who, under the provisions of this bill, receive 40 per cent in excess of their cancellations. In other words, the Government pays them a bonus of 40 per cent in order that these post offices may be kept as a convenience to the public. There are 3,669 who receive 15 per cent more than their cancellations amount to.

Now, as to the rural letter carriers, I will say that we provide a basic salary of $1,800 for routes 24 miles in length and $30 per mile per annum for each mile and fraction thereof for miles in excess of 24. For instance, if a carrier has a 28-mile route, he will receive the basic salary of $1,800 and $30 per mile for the 4 miles in excess of the standard route, which when added to the basic salary amounts to $1,920. We felt, as no doubt all of the membership feels, that these worthy and efficient employees are entitled to this increase. They do, in many instances, have to traverse rough roads and subject themselves to all kinds of weather. It is coming to the point, I am proud to say, that the majority of the rural letter carriers can make their trips with auto vehicles for at least 8 or 9 months in the year and not more than 3 to 3½ hours of their time is consumed each day, and they can, of course, engage in some other work which in many cases proves remunerative. I am sure we all realize that this service means a great deal to the people in the rural sections of the country, where is found as loyal people as live on the face of the earth, and who, because of the fact that they have no rivers or harbors and no large cities, receive but little aid from the Federal Government.

It is interesting to note the growth of the rural mail service. Take, for instance, the district I have the honor to represent, the ninth of Georgia; when in the beginning of my service here in March, 1905, there were only 18 routes in my district, and the carriers were then receiving $600 per annum for their services; to-day there are 168 routes and the carriers receive, under the provisions of this bill, $1,800 per annum as a basic salary. It is refreshing to know that a farmer far into the country and remote from a railroad point can, after his day's work is ended, receive and read the daily news, delivered to him by his Government the day his paper is published. The people throughout this Nation appreciate this great service, and I, for one, have always felt I was doing a good work when I insisted upon the extension of this service, and always voted for sufficient funds to insure the people the best possible service.

I have been a member of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee—the greatest committee in Congress—for more than 10 years, and I have never failed to vote for increased appropriations for this service, for I have felt these people were entitled to all the consideration we could give them. There was an effort at one time to change this service into the old-time contract service, which meant going backward instead of forward, and I am proud to say I did what I could to thwart this scheme. It is true the mails would be carried for less money than they are carried to-day, but the service could not and would not be what it is to-day. I care but little about the cost of the service provided the people get the benefit of an adequate mail delivery.

The people care but little for the cost, but they do want the best this Government can give them, and they are entitled to it. While the cost of this service runs up into the millions, it brings the farmer close to his market, close to his dealer, and is the means of his being in close touch with the happenings of the day. We should not regret that we appropriate money for this particular service.

We have increased the compensation of postmasters of the first, second, and third class, as also their clerks and assistants. We provide for an increase to railway post office clerks, inspectors, and, in fact, all the postal employees, including village delivery carriers.

Your commission on readjustment of postal salaries was appointed in March, 1919, during which time we have done a great deal of work, for the reason we have had to contend with the salaries and reclassification of more than 300,000 employees in the different branches of the service. We tried to do our duty as we saw it in giving these employees as nearly as possible a proper and adequate compensation for their services, and we were not unmindful of the certain responsibility which rests upon the taxpayers of this country. We believe that the passage of this bill will stimulate the employees and that they will begin with the end of the fiscal year with renewed confidence and cooperate with the department and the people to such extent as will improve our mail facilities throughout the length and breadth of the Union.

I trust there will not be a single vote cast against this bill, and I do not believe there will be. It is to be hoped that the Senate will, immediately upon the passage of this measure in the House, register its approval of the bill so that it may become law before we adjourn this session.

We have provided in the bill that all the provisions are to be effective as of July 1, 1920.

I trust we may yet, before this session of Congress is ended, pass other remedial legislation, and I shall welcome an opportunity to vote to repeal all war-time legislation, especially the espionage act, and other legislation which the Congress felt should be enacted during war activities, for I can see no legitimate reason for their continuance.

I do hope the steering committee of the House will accede to the numerous demands of the membership on this side of the aisle to report immediately a bill repealing all the war-time legislation, which will have our hearty support, and feel it will have a tendency to cause a return of normal conditions.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW].

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I honor the hard work of this Reclassification Committee, and I only wish that they could have brought in a larger increase for these faithful evangels of service and patriotism.

It was my privilege to attend one of the first hearings of this committee in my home city, Atlanta, and submit testimony in behalf of a worth-while increase for all postal employees, and, taking that hearing as a sample of patience and fairness, I must declare my conviction that the committee tried hard to get at the facts on which to base their estimates for readjustment. Aside from the other able lawmakers on the committee I am glad to pay special tribute to the tireless fidelity of my own Georgia colleague, Hon. THOMAS M. BELL, who has given many years of effective service to the Post Office Committee, and who was wide awake in his efforts to do everything possible for bringing salary comforts to every class of postal employees. "TOM" BELL is everybody's friend, and especially the friend of the man who works hard for his daily bread.

But while this Reclassification Committee worked hard at the stupendous task of adjusting the status of over a half million employees of the Post Office Department, they labored under the handicap of two insurmountable difficulties for the present—a Treasury staggering under the colossal war debt of nearly $30,000,000,000, and—we might as well confess it—an ossified governmental conscience on the question of low salaries.

I can see some of my generous colleagues smiling over that last suggestion. To be right confidential about it, some of these colleagues, of whom I am personally very fond, laughingly twit me with being "easy" on all appropriation bills that mean salary increase or Federal aid to the masses.

I plead guilty to the "soft impeachment." Every man has his specialty, and that specialty often comes to be regarded as a weakness. But in this instance I claim that my "weakness" is my strength. Without apology for the fact that "humanity has always been my hero," I confess that any legislation that lightens the burdens of the daily toiler, that carries sunshine to the hearts and the hearthstone that are dear to him, appeals to all that is within me. My vote for such legislation was understood during my campaign for Congress as having already taken place in my heart and only waited with eagerness the opportunity to express itself on the floor of this House.

THE GOVERNMENT MUST BE JUST.

Gentlemen, "if that be treason" against the Treasury, "make the most of it." Of course, I would not stand at all for a salary increase that was unreasonable, but when many postal employees in my district and out of my district—office men, letter carriers, Railway Mail Service men, and rural free delivery men—hard-working, patriotic, dependable citizens, tell me that they love their work as servants of their Government, but that they will be compelled to go into other lines of business in order to support their families, I know that there is something radically wrong.

Treasury or no Treasury, this great, rich Government can not afford to accept necessary service from its necessary servants at anything less than a living wage. And a living wage must mean more than mere bread and meat and clothes. It must mean some family comforts and a modest guaranty for a "rainy day." Such a wage is necessary to the faith and contentment of the citizen, whose home of peace and happiness becomes the surest citadel of the Nation's strength. Such a wage is based on elemental justice, and no nation can afford to be less than just to its humblest citizen.

A TRAGEDY AMONG RURAL CARRIERS.

But I must declare that, according to my observation, letter carriers in city and village and rural free-delivery carriers in the country seem to be getting the short end of the hand stick and the "smutty end of the chunk" in all this postal adjustment. These brave fellows, who trudge and fight through rain and sun and storm, seem to me, after all, to be the "heroes of the strife," for they measure up to the Biblical description of him who "endures hardness as a good soldier." Think of men like these forced to leave the service in order to live; think of an office in my district unable to establish village free delivery because the meager salary will not command a single applicant; think of a rural free-delivery man having to furnish his conveyance—an auto in summer and a horse and buggy in winter—on the pittance of $108 to $150 a month, and then support his family on the balance, if he has anything left. Think of a rural carrier whom I know in Virginia so burdened with the expense of keeping up his conveyance and supporting his family that he had to borrow $200 to make ends meet before the year was out.

Gentlemen, this is nothing less than a tragedy in government.

"We love this Government work," they say to me, "and it hurts us to be driven out of it, but we must go where we can make a living."

Gentlemen, as a Member of this Congress I would feel like hanging my head, I would be ashamed to look at myself in the glass, if I did not vigorously cry out against such treatment of these heroic servants of our Government. It should be the policy of the Government to provide first for the conveyance of the rural free-delivery carriers and then pay them a salary equal to their needs and commensurate with their hardships. Again, I declare that this Government must quit being "little" toward its hard-working employees.

"PENNY-WISE AND POUND-FOOLISH."

Something must be done on general principles to break up the Government's ossified conscience and "penny-wise and pound-foolish" course toward its employees in general and some of its departmental leaders in particular. For instance, take the brilliant Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, compelled to leave the position which he has filled with such distinction because he simply could not maintain his family in Washington on $5,000 a year; and being offered many times as much to return to private business, his duty to his family demanded his return. And there is William S. Elliott, who, after 20 years in the department, has fought his way from a modest clerkship to the responsible position of Register of the Treasury, a position that pays only four thousand, when he could easily command ten thousand, or perhaps double that, in the business world. Elliott's efficient hand in reorganization has actually saved the Government over a half million dollars during the short time he has been at the head of his department. And close akin to Elliott is Director James Wilmeth, of the Bureau of Engraving, perhaps the biggest, most intricate, most responsible department in Washington. I have never seen a more masterful hand in the perfection and direction of details, and yet this great mechanical and organizing genius works for much less than a Congressman, and few Congressmen—and I suppose no Senators—are able to live within their salary—the same salary that they received five years ago when living expenses were less than half of what they are now. And these are only samples of what is going on throughout the governmental departments of the greatest, richest Nation on earth. The financial drive against officials in positions of public leadership is simply terrific, and a big Government does not want to be represented by little men.

Surely, gentlemen of Congress, it is possible that the problem of national housekeeping can be so adjusted as to enable this Government to treat its employees with that fundamental fairness and that living liberality which successful and honorable business firms accord to theirs.

But if I must take my stand by any special class I ask to be counted as the friend and champion of the underpaid, unsung, and uncrowned postal employees who journey from their humble homes by day and by night to serve the American people with such inspiring loyalty and such tireless devotion. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. I do not think the increases are enough, and they do not give the postal employees as much as ought to be provided to meet the existing emergency; but I shall vote for the bill, because it is a case either of taking what the Republican majority has relutcantly agreed to or getting nothing. It would seem as if the threatened complete demoralization of the Postal Service can not be sufficiently impressed upon the party in power in this Congress to persuade it to raise salaries to a level where the postal employees can continue to live. As everyone knows, recent Government statistics show that the cost of living has increased 75 to 80 per cent from June, 1914, to June, 1919, but that the increases in postal salaries have only been 41.2 per cent. In other words, that the increase in the high cost of living has amounted to almost double the salary increases in the period named.

There is no class of employees who serve the public more constantly, more cheerfully, or more faithfully through all kinds of weather and under more trying circumstances than the postal employees of the United States. I have known for a long time that this service and its employees were very close to the hearts of the people—perhaps because they are so identified with their joys and their sorrows, their hopes and successes—but it has apparently never been so generally expressed as in the last few weeks, when citizens from all over my district, as well as from all over the country at large, have written me hundreds of letters and submitted petitions asking me as their Congressman to do everything I possibly could to get the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries to file its report before Congress adjourns and to endeavor to secure adequate increases in compensation. I have done my best to accomplish that result. At least the present measure does give considerable relief, even if it is not entirely adequate.

While in the aggregate the appropriation for the increase granted in postal salaries will seem to be substantial, yet under the method of classification and distribution among the 300,000 employees of the Postal Service it is readily apparent that in many instances the increases are not in keeping with the great advances in the high cost of living in cases particularly of fourth-class postmasters. It is very doubtful that in instances where their postal receipts are in excess of $100 per quarter, whether there will be any material or appreciable increase at all under the provisions of this bill. It is to be noted, moreover, that rural-delivery carriers only secure an increase of $100 a year. But as the Republican majority in control of this House is unwilling to allow the adoption of any amendment to the bill which would prevent further injustice from being done, I feel that rather than have no relief at all this bill should receive the unanimous support of the membership of this House.

It is true that it is provided in the pending measure that when compensation amounts to $1,000 and gross postal receipts amount to $1,500 within one year fourth-class offices shall be advanced to third class. But the receipts of many of the fourth-class post offices especially deserving of relief will not be able to qualify under this provision and obtain the increase.

And in this connection I also desire to refer to the refusal of the Republican majority to grant any relief to the star-route carriers. In a great number of instances the contracts for carrying this mail were made before the tremendous advance in costs which were brought on by the war and could not reasonably be anticipated at the time these carriers made their contracts with the Government. The Post Office Department has recognized that there are many cases where relief ought to be given, some of these being in my own congressional district, but it has time and again assured me that under the law it possessed no power to alter the contract and increase the compensation in such cases. It has been, however, within the power of the Republican majority to pass an act of Congress granting such relief; and yet, though a bill has been pending before the Post Office Committee a long time providing for such relief, it has never been reported to this House for consideration and favorable action, although very early in the session of the Sixty-sixth Congress an act was passed providing for reimbursement of contractors for public buildings who lost on their contracts by reason of the added costs occasioned by the war. Surely any such discrimination is unpardonable and should be remedied without further delay. Justice and fair dealing is what the American people expect for themselves and have always been willing to accord to all employees of the Nation, as well as to the rest of their fellow men.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCKINIRY].

Mr. MCKINIRY. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for this bill to reclassify the employees of the post office and to readjust their salaries, because the readjustment is an increase in the pitifully small salaries of the hard-working, loyal clerks and carriers.

I know personally many carriers and clerks in my district and I am intensely interested in their welfare. I earnestly ask, therefore, every Member to give their needs and just claims his favorable consideration in the vote we are now about to take.

I would be happier if the increase allowed by this bill were larger, but no amendment under the present parliamentary situation is permitted, and any attempt to defeat this bill because of its inadequacy would only defeat its own purpose.

He gives twice who gives quickly, and I therefore vote for the increase in hope of a further opportunity to give adequate justice to these men.

Hundreds—yes, thousands—of the residents of my district have very emphatically conveyed to me their favorable attitude on any bill increasing the present compensation of the post-office employees. Everyone is daily reminded of the hard work and devotion to duty and the efficiency of these men. There is no argument needed to show whether this increase is needed, because, likewise, every citizen is aware of the constantly advancing cost of living. I only regret that the committee in charge of this bill did not go further, but that is the responsibility of the committee; and, for my part, I intend to do all I can, and that is to vote in favor of this bill. It is evident that a more generous scale of wages would have been carried in this House, and I am sure that the overconservative attitude of the committee in charge of this bill does not reflect the sentiment of the Members of the House of Representatives. Nevertheless I do not criticize them harshly, because I also realize that the enormous taxes now imposed upon the people of this country require the utmost prudence and care in the increase of appropriations.

I am thoroughly convinced that the interest of true economy requires the efficient administration of the Post Office Department, and no man can devote himself to his work who is worried by the distress and needs of his family due to a salary insufficient for the ordinary needs of domestic comfort. I am sure that these men will devote themselves more cheerfully and more thoroughly than ever before to their duties and pay back to the Government and to the people for every dollar of increase thus received through this bill a hundredfold in increased care and devotion to the wants of the people. I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I am very deeply interested in the bill for the reclassification of the postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, and the readjustment of their salaries and compensation. I know of no class of Government employees who have been more devoted to their duty and have rendered more efficient and accurate service than the men of this business department of the Government. During many years they have performed this work unfalteringly and without complaint for very meager salaries indeed. Never have they allowed the question of salary to interfere with the proficiency of their work. Never have they allowed the burdens of the knapsack retard them in their duty to public service; neither rain nor heat delays them; strikes and lockouts are unknown. They plod along doing their duty as they see it, and trusting the Government to provide for them as it should.

This provision has come very slowly indeed. It has been provided, however, in this bill, though certainly not to the extent to which I believe it ought to be provided, nor do I believe as fully as the majority of the Members of this House think it should have been provided.

The bill comes to us to-day under a suspension of rules, which means that only 40 minutes debate can be had and no amendment can be made. My interest is particularly directed to the clerks and carriers of the city of Baltimore. My district is embraced entirely within that city. I say therefore with great positiveness, but without a chance to correct it by amendment, that the salaries provided for these men are entirely inadequate to their needs and not just compensation for the work performed. I sincerely hope this is only for the present, and that in the very near future this Congress will see fit to do better by the postal employees than is stipulated in this bill.

I gather from other Members of the House that other lines of employment in the Postal Service are inadequately provided for in this bill. If it were possible, I should certainly stand for amendments providing adequate compensation to all men of the service. I shall certainly stand for a more just compensation when the opportunity is afforded at the next session. I realize the important work done by this committee, of the arduous task they have had before them, and that perhaps from their viewpoint they have provided what they thought was the best that could be done at this time. I am firmly convinced, however, that just as soon as further justice can be done, there will not be a man in this House but who will be willing to do that justice.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GANLY].

Mr. GANLY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to speak on the floor of this House in behalf of the clerks and carriers of the Post Office Department, a department which serves the daily needs of the people and of trade and business throughout the entire country in a most indispensable way, and I am glad to testify in the hearing of every Member of this House to my appreciation of the faithful service, the hard work, and the loyalty of these men. The honesty and the efficiency of the post-office employee are proverbial, and yet no class of Government employees is in greater need of action by this Congress to remedy the injustice of their low scale of wages.

I have long been in favor of increased compensation to these men, and I am very much impressed by the overwhelming public sentiment in favor of a measure such as this pending bill. My only criticism of this bill is that it does not go far enough. I believe that particularly in New York City and in the outlying suburbs of New York City the cost of living has advanced so enormously that the clerks and carriers there are in more pressing need of such an increase than in almost any other section of the country. I ask you therefore to vote for this bill, because I am sure the employees of the post office will show their gratitude by greater zeal in their work and by more devoted service to the public.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill increases the compensation of every employee in the Post Office Service receiving a compensation per year of less than $6,000. The increased charge on the Treasury for 1921 will be $34,375,087. The increase in succeeding years will be greater until it reaches the maximum in 1924, in which year the increase will be $45,883,587. These increases are necessary to enable these faithful employees of our Government to meet the increased cost of living and to keep pace with the increasing wage scale in every line of industry in the United States. I regret exceedingly the fact that it is not possible under the rule adopted a few days ago to amend any of the items of this bill or to change any of its provisions. It is not possible to either increase or diminish the compensation provided in this bill for post-office employees. In other words, this measure imposing such a tremendous charge on the Treasury is to be passed through the House by practically disfranchising those who represent the people here. We must either vote for this measure just as it is presented or vote against it. There is no opportunity to make it any better. It is conceded generally in the House that these salaries ought to be increased, nearly all of them if not all of them, and I predict there will be few votes against the bill. I expect to vote for it. There are many things in it I would like to change. There are inequalities which, I think, could be overcome if the House were permitted freedom of debate and if the House were given the right to amend. The bill, however, just as it is drawn must be sent over to the Senate. In that body it may receive the consideration it ought to receive here.

CONGRESS WILL ADJOURN BEFORE ENACTING BILL INTO LAW.

This is the long session of Congress. Congress has been practically in continuous session for nearly 15 months, and in the interest of giving the party which is in control of both branches an opportunity to make a showing for economy, action on this measure has been postponed until now. After to-day there are only two more days of this session. The passage of the bill through the House is assured, but it can not, of course, pass the Senate. The next regular session of Congress will convene in December. It will be the short session, and the chances are there will be no time during the three months of the last session of the Sixty-sixth Congress to pass this bill. The regular appropriation bills will in all probability crowd it out. However, the party in control of legislation—the Republican Party—has accomplished what it has set out to accomplish. It has been able to prevent adding to the sum total of its authorizations during this Congress the very large amount provided for in this bill, and it will be possible to say to the scores of thousands of post-office employees throughout the country, "the Republican Party has passed through the House a bill for you. You will be expected to reciprocate in the elections this fall." The bill is a gold brick, just as the bonus bill was a gold brick. It belongs to the same class as the eight protective tariff bills which have been passed through the House and sent on to be smothered in the Senate. This important measure should have been brought up earlier in the session, when it could have been considered under the general rules of the House and sent over to the Senate in time to be enacted into law.
